RUSSELL DOUBLEDAY'S "Stories of Inventors" is to take its place next week among Doubleday, Page & Co.'s True Adventure Series, which already includes "A Year in a Yawl," "Cattle Ranch to College," and "A Gunner Aboard the Yankee," by the same author. Mr. Doubleday purposes in his new book to present the adventurous phases of the inventor's life, as, for example, the dangers of aerial and submarine experiments. The story of the various inventions is told through the experiences of the inventor or the one who operates the invention.

The Macmillan Company contemplates adding this Fall several new volumes to Caspar Whitney's the American Sportsman's Library. The volume on "The Trotting and the Pacing Horse in America" has already been followed by J. Parmly Paret's "Lawn Tennis," which is an authoritative book, including essays by experts in the sport. Then we are to have "Cougar, Wildcat, and Fox," by Archibald Rogers and Col. Roger Williams; "The American Thoroughbred," by Charles Richard Trevathen, and "Rowing and Track Athletics," "Skating, Hockey, and Kite Sailing," "Baseball and Football," and "Riding and Driving," authors for which are not yet named. W. B. Carlin has been selected to write the volume on "Photography for the Sportsman Naturalist."

"The Book of Indoor and Outdoor Games," by Mrs. Burton Kingsland, which Doubleday, Page & Co. are publishing, contains not only hundreds of old favorites for both old and young, but many new and ingenious games which have stood the test of actual trial. Mrs. Kingsland will be remembered as the author of "Book of Good Manners" and "Weddings."

"A Transplanted Nursery," by Martha Kean, which the Century Company has on its Autumn list, is the actual record of the adventures of a mother and her three little lads, whom she takes to spend a Summer in Brittany and strives to give them there all the comforts of their home nursery.

Doubleday, Page & Co. publish another volume by George Horace Lorimer, which is a distinct departure from the author's "Letters from a Self-Made Merchant to His Son," although a sequel to that book. The young man is now married, consequently the theme of the letters principally concerns domestic economy and kindred topics. The new volume is called "Old Gorgon Graham."

The first important novel to appear from the press of the Macmillan Company this Autumn will be Gwendolen Overton's "Captains of the World." As has already been stated, with this story the author of the "Heritage of Unrest" and "Anne Carmel" begins a series of studies of modern American life and customs. The forthcoming book has in its heroine the daughter of a capitalist, who forces her into an engagement with an Italian Prince. The hero is presented as a manly and honest labor leader.

The third volume in the Series of Noble Authors will be issued next week by the Scott-Thaw Company. It is "The Golden Ass" of Apuleius translated by William Adlington, the first edition of which was issued in 1566, and is one of the rarest books in the English language. It is stated that the forthcoming edition follows the original of Adlington "as faithfully as is consistent with common sense." It will be folio in size and limited to 200 copies, each with frontispiece and title page designed by W. L. Bruckman.

Kate Douglas Wiggin's story, "The Affair at the Inn," which Houghton, Mifflin & Co. will publish Sept. 17, and which was written in collaboration with Mary and Jane Findlater and Allan McAulay, is a love story, the events of which take place at a quiet country inn on Dartmoor, in Devonshire. There are four principal characters, each by one author. There are an English peer, a girl from Virginia, a baronet, and several other women. The book will be illustrated by Martin Justice.

John Lane is bringing out the "Correspondence of Sir William Weller Pepys," the collateral descendant of the great diarist, which has been selected and edited by Miss Alice C. C. Gaussen, and appears under the title "A Later Pepys." The correspondence includes letters from Mrs. Chapone, Mrs. Montagu, Hannah More, William Franks, Sir James Macdonald, Major Rennell, Sir Nathaniel Wraxall, and others.

Charles Scribner's Sons will publish this month "Venice as an Art City," by Albert Zacher, in the Langham Series of Art Monographs. The book, which is illustrated, includes descriptive sketches of the Academy of Venice, the Ducal Palace, Venetian monuments, churches, palaces, &c. The illustrations reproduce some famous localities and pictures of the city.

There are signs in the publishing houses of a revival of interest in Andrew Jackson. The late Augustus C. Buell, author of "Paul Jones, Founder of the American Navy," at the time of his death, last Summer, had just written a biography of Jackson in two volumes. Prof. McMaster's new volume in his "History of the People of the United States," which D. Appleton & Co. will bring out in the Spring, deals with Jackson's Administration. Chauncey C. Hotchkiss has written a juvenile for the same house entitled "The Land Hero, of 1812," which also deals with Jackson.

It is now announced by Longmans, Green & Co. that the task of selection from such a mass of material as the correspondence of twenty-four years represents has been found so heavy that there is no prospect of any portion of "The Letters of Queen Victoria" being published during the present year.

The delegates of the Clarendon Press have now completed arrangements for issuing at an early date the first eight volumes of their series of Modern French Authors. The list includes books by Lamartine, Balzac, Hugo, Sandeau, Chateaubriand, Karr, Gonzlan, and de Tocqueville. The series, which is edited by M. Léon Delbos, is intended chiefly for those who have made some progress in the language. The notes relate to points of literary and historical interest.

Charles Scribner's Sons have in active preparation for issue in about a fortnight "Dar-ul-Islam," by Mark Sykes. This is the record of a journey through ten of the Asiatic provinces of Turkey. It deals with the characteristics of the Turkish Empire. An appendix has been provided by John Hugh Smith and an introduction by Prof. E. G. Browne, Adams Professor of Arabic at Cambridge. There will also be many maps and illustrations.

"The De Monarchia of Dante," translated, with an introduction and notes, by Aurelia Henry, will be published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. next Saturday. The essay on government by the Florentine poet is being issued in an edition that will be accessible to the general reader as well as the student. The essay presents the conservative view of government which obtained in Italy during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

The American Unitarian Association is publishing "The Touch of Nature. Little Tales of Great Peoples," by Augustus M. Lord. Each story has a distinct setting of its own, characteristic of the people in whose land the scene of the tale is laid. Over forty line-cut illustrations are included.

Longmans, Green & Co. have in active preparation "Man's Journey to God," by M. D. Petre. The book is made up of extended notes or spiritual essays, planned in the form of a Christian's progress from "God as a Beginning," through "Christ as Way," to "God as End."

"The Words of Kohelcth," by John Franklin Genung, author of "The Epic of the Inner Life," is to be brought out next week by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. The book is divided into two parts. The first, a study of the literary and spiritual values of the "Words of Kohelcth," discusses the history of the book, the various theories as to its authorship and interpretation, and the position which it holds among the famous literary discussions of the nature of human life. Part II. is a new translation with a running commentary. It is Prof. Genung's intention to be constructive rather than to deal with the subject in a purely critical spirit.

A longer interval than was anticipated has been found necessary in preparing the later volumes of the new edition of Crowe and Cavalcaselle's History of Painting in Italy, Umbria, Florence, and Siena, from the Second to the Sixteenth Century," which Charles Scribner's Sons publish in this country. The four remaining volumes will be devoted to the Siennese school, Florentine painters of the Quattrocento, Inter Sienese and Umbrians, and Florentine painters of the Cinquecento. The date of issue has not yet been fixed.

Georg: Chapman.

The text of the edition of George Chapman's plays, edited by William Lyon Phelps of Yale College, which is included in the Mermaid Series (12mo. Cloth cover. Pp. 678. Printed on rough paper. London: Fisher Unwin. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50), has been taken from the literal reprint of the plays published in 1873 by John Pearson. The spelling has been modernised and the punctuation altered. Notes and an introduction have been provided by the editor, who has also made lists of the dramatis personæ for three plays, and inserted stage directions. The plays included are "All Fools," "Bussy D'Ambois," "The Revenge of Bussy D'Ambois," "The Conspiracy of Charles, Duke of Byron," and "The Tragedy of Charles, Duke of Byron."

Chapman's life, Mr. Phelps writes in the beginning of his introduction, includes that whole period of literature known as the Elizabethan drama. Every important play was acted during his lifetime, and he "thus had the opportunity to watch the rise, progress, and decay of what has been justly called the greatest part of the greater period of the greatest literature of the world." The editor then describes the best of Chapman's writings, including "The Gentleman Usher," "All Fools," "Monsieur D'Olive," the French tragedies, "Bussy D'Ambois," "The Byron's Tragedy," "May Day," "The Widow's Tears," "The Ball," &c. Of Chapman's tragedies the writer says:

> [illegible] influence on the drama of the Elizabethan age. The best [illegible] Chapman's tragedies are [illegible] Shakespeare's tragedies [illegible] Chapman's tragedies are [illegible] Shakespeare's tragedies [illegible] Chapman's tragedies are [illegible] Shakespeare's tragedies [illegible]

You have here told by himself the adventures of a young horse, technically a two-year-old, during his first racing season. The story begins with the arrival of the colt at Gravesend, a freak from Kentucky pastures and as yet innocent of the use of the bridle. He is present at his own auction, and takes a certain pride in displaying himself in the ring, only to be humiliated by the scantiness of the price he fetches. For he is rather a rung, though his blood is very fine, indeed. He tells how he made the acquaintance of the trainer of the gentleman who bought him and how he met also the rubber and the horse boy appointed to attend upon him and another colt of pedigree and promise; how he was broken to the saddle and how he was initiated into the mysteries of track work; how he developed speed but was no back at carrying weights, and how finally he ran and won his maiden race, a selling race, the result of which was his passing into the hands of a tricky rascal, who gave him dope and thrashings. He covered his new owner and himself with ignominy, and finally got back to his old stable much cheaper than he first went out. How he recovered his good name, and how, the gentleman owner marrying a lady who did not love horses, one day exclaimed when a nice colt stuck his wet nose into her silken bosom, he passed into the hands of a gay young man who won much money with him and lost other much money. With various yarns of other horses and the stablemen, what they did, the pranks they played, the jokes they had, and mention—but not repetition—of the horrid oaths they heard.

If you know nothing about racing stables you may get a good deal of primary education in the subject from the book; if you do know about racing stables, and if you know horses and if you think they are "mighty like humans"—why, the book may amuse you anyhow.

ABOUT AUTHORS.

What Some of Them Are Saying, Writing, or Planning.

READERS of Marion Crawford's novels, who are more or less interested in the welfare of the author, will be sorry to learn of the disaster which threatens his family. Three of his four children, one a lad of seventeen, who was preparing to enter Oxford this Autumn, and another, Eleanora, the eldest, who was presented at the Court of the Quirinal last Winter, have been taken down with typhoid fever and lie at the point of death at Crawford Villa, Sant' Agnello di Sorrento.

Kate Douglas Wiggin has just returned from abroad and is at her Summer home, at Hollis, Me. In a recent letter to a friend she describes an experiment in Scottish housekeeping, which reads like a chapter from one of her "Penelope" books. She and her sister rented a cottage in Lochearnhead. Two of her friends, Miss Jane and Miss Mary Findlater, both well-known Scotch novelists, were visiting in the vicinity at the home of Miss Charlotte Stewart, who is also a writer. The five authors met daily, rambled and ate together. It is likely that a book will be the result of the meetings, for it was a similar gathering last year in the Devonshire moorlands which inspired Mrs. Wiggin and her friend to write "The Affair of the Inn," which Houghton, Mifflin & Co. publish.

Maud Howe Elliott, who, with her husband, John Elliott, the artist, has been summering at Plainfield, N. H., has just put into book form a number of her recent Italian sketches and stories which Little, Brown & Co. will shortly publish with the title "Roma Beata." The inspiration of the book was a series of letters written to her sister, Laura E. Richards, while Mrs. Elliott was in Rome with her husband, Mr. Elliott then being engaged in painting his mural work for the Boston Public Library. "Roma Beata" will include "Roman Codgers and Solitaries" and "Ischia: A Tale and a Tour," which appeared a month ago respectively in The Outlook and Lippincott's.

The fine country house of Stanford White at St. James, L. I., is the subject of an elaborate article by Barr Ferree in the current number of The Scientific American Building Monthly. It is the first time that this house, which is filled with hundreds of objects of art, gathered by its owner abroad, has been described and illustrated.

Persons who have read the Hon. Emily Lawless's new life of Maria Edgeworth, just issued in the Macmillan Company's English Men of Letters Series, may be interested to learn that the author is herself an Irishwoman, the eldest daughter of the third Baron Cloncurry. Her home is Hazelhatch, in Surrey, and, besides her "Story of Ireland," published in 1886, and "A Garden Diary" of three years ago, she is the author of various novels and poems.

Martin Hume is preparing to publish next week through McClure, Phillips & Co. "The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth." The author, who is principally known in America through his historical work of a year ago, "Love Affairs of Mary Queen of Scots," has charge of the Elizabethan Calendars in the British Public Record Office, and access to state papers hitherto neglected, which have given him an immense amount of data. For the American edition he has added two new chapters dealing with the purely personal side of the virgin Queen's love affairs, including a newly discovered yarn of a son born to Elizabeth and Lord Darnley.

Ellen Douglas Deland, author of the story for girls and boys, "Josephine," lately published by the Harpers, was born at Lake Mahopac, N. Y. She is, however, a resident of Boston. Previous stories from her pen are "Oakleigh" and "Alan Ransford."

Roy Rolfe Gilson's new romance, alluringly named "The Flower of Youth," will be published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers on Sept. 15. The author of "In the Morning Glow" and "When Love is Young" has made this story about a man unsuccessful in winning the world's glittering prizes—finding happiness, nevertheless, in other things, in his home and books. Mr. Gilson has added glimpses of child life of the sort his readers are familiar with.

"Little Precious" is the soothing-syrupy title of a new story for small children which Harpers will publish Sept. 15. The author is Gertrude Smith, who has previously written for the same audience "The Roggie and Reggie Stories," "The Lovable Tales of Janey and Josey and Joe," &c. The new story will be illustrated and bound to match the others.

Laurence Housman, author of "Bethlehem," "An English Woman's Love Letters," "Green Arras," "A Modern Antæus," &c., has written a new novel which the Macmillan Company has down for publication at the end of this month or the beginning of October. This is a study of a woman's life in one of the coast counties of England. It is said to be by far the author's most considerable and serious piece of work. He has been engaged on it since the publication two years ago of his "Bethlehem: A Nativity Play."

Arthur Stanwood Pier has with Charles Scribner's Sons a book about school life and education entitled "Boys of St. Timothy's." Clark Harding, the hero, is said by those who have read the advance sheets to be a worthy American cousin of Tom Brown. Harding's experiences display the best qualities of the American boy. The social as well as the literary and athletic interests of school life receive attention. There are football, hockey, baseball, rowing, track, tennis, and other stories. The book will be illustrated. It will probably appear Sept. 24.

W. Hale White, author of "Clara Hopgood," "Pages from a Journal," &c., is putting the finishing touches to the volume on "John Bunyan," to be added to Charles Scribner's Sons' Literary Lives Series, Sept. 24. The book will be illustrated. Besides being biographical, it is a critical study of Bunyan.

H. W. Boynton, in his volume of essays entitled "Journalism and Literature and Other Essays," to be published next Saturday by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., writes about books, their writers and readers. Most of the contents of the book have appeared in The Atlantic Monthly and other magazines. The essays include "The Serious and Morbid in Fiction," "The Man of Affairs as an Author," "The Reading Public," "Cleverness and Originality," and "American Humor."

The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, author of "The Influence of Christ in Modern Society," "The Quest of Happiness," &c., is finishing a story to be called "A Forgotten Hero." The "forgotten hero" is a man, well known and liked in his day, who spent his life introducing fruit trees, especially apple trees, into Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, and other States of the Middle West in pioneer days. A thread of love story runs through the book, which, it is stated, will appeal especially to those interested in early history or susceptible to the romantic side of religious teaching.

Carmen Sylva's new book, "How I Spent My Sixtieth Birthday," has been translated into English by H. E. Delf, and will be published by Charles Scribner's Sons this month. It will make a little 16mo of 14 pages, and will be bound in white cloth.

Admiral Schley is now at Lake Placid, where he has completed reading the final proofs of his "Forty-five Years Under the Flag," which D. Appleton & Co. will publish Sept. 10. The book comprises 450 pages, and has many illustrations. About one-third is devoted to the Spanish-American war. An interesting chapter is said to be that in which the author describes the opening of Korea to the commercial world.

Miss Helen Dawes Brown, the well-known juvenile writer, author of "Her Sixteenth Year," "Little Miss Phoebe Gay," "Two College Girls," &c., has compiled a new volume for boys, called "A Book of Little Boys." There are twelve tales in all, illustrated and decorated by Helen Sinclair Patterson. The book will appear next week with the imprint of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Robert Herrick's new novel, "The Common Lot," which ran serially in The Atlantic Monthly, the Macmillan Company will publish. This is a story of the corruption by dishonesty of a young architect, due to his desire to become wealthy more quickly than is legitimately possible through his profession. The man is, later on, redeemed through the influence of his wife, who left him during his prosperous days, having discovered his dishonest dealings. "The Common Lot" is a study of the conditions of modern business environment.

R. A. Lehfeldt, D.' Sc., Professor of Physics at the East London Technical College, has in press with Longmans, Green & Co. Vol. I. of a textbook on "Electro-Chemistry," entitled "General Theory." It will include a chapter on "The Relation of Chemical Constitution to Conductivity," by T. T. Moore, B. A., B. Sc., lecturer at the University of Birmingham. The second volume, on "Applications to Electrolysis, Primary and Secondary Batteries, &c.," is in the hands of Prof. Lehfeldt.

The forthcoming book by George Madden Martin, author of "Emmy Lou," is to be called "The House of Fulfilment." It is a novel dealing with Southern life and has a heroine who was about the age of Emmy Lou. The underlying motive in the book is said to show the natural solution of social problems constantly arising through the antagonizing elements in Northern and Southern natures.

The Rev. Dr. George Hodges, Dean of Cambridge, is bringing out through Thomas Whittaker another volume of his sermons, with the title "The Human Nature of the Saints." The publishers report that there is always an advance demand for Dean Hodges's sermons when it is known that a collection is to be issued in book form.

The editors of "Pictures by George Frederick Watts," just issued by Fox, Duffield & Co., are Julia Ellsworth Ford and Thomas W. Lamond. The former is the wife of Simeon Ford, author of "A Few Remarks." The latter is Secretary of the Bankers' Trust Company, a Harvard man who, while in college, gave great promise of literary ability.

Miss Virginia Gerson, who wrote and illustrated "The Happy Heart Family," on the list of Fox, Duffield & Co., is a sister-in-law of William M. Chase, the well known artist and art teacher.

John D. Fort, who as fleet engineer under Dewey wrote "An American Cruiser in the East," has just been promoted to the rank of Rear Admiral. His book, which is published by A. S. Barnes & Co., is just now meeting with increased demand owing to the war in the East.

Miss Hewa [illegible] Yeaton has devoted [illegible] years to the [illegible]

King Olaf of Norway.

THE NORTH STAR. A Tale of Norway in the Tenth Century. By M. E. Henry-Ruffin. Illustrated by Wilbur Dean Hamilton. 12mo. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.50.

Mrs. M. E. Henry-Ruffin has presented in her "The North Star" a subject of brilliant and very often impressive pageantry. In fact the story, in spite of the continued plot which runs through it, impresses one more as a series of moving pictures than as an ordinary tale of adventure based upon history and legend and touching upon the lighter elements of love.

Olaf Tryggvesson, the Viking King of the race of Harold the Fairhaired, exiled for many years from his native land, comes back to his own. He had married in Ireland to wed an Irish Princess, and there learned the lessons of Christ. Afterward when the homing call was strong in his ears and he sailed back to his kingdom in the North, he bore with him the Sign of the Cross, and, with sword and bloodshed, planted it upon the gates of his kingdom. At Nidaros, where now stands the City of Drontheim, he was crowned King, the first sovereign of all Norway.

But treason was rank in the land; all his subjects did not take kindly to the white Christ, and the fear of Odin and of Thor was hard to drive from men's minds. Nor did the love affairs of the King always prosper. One maid there was, fair and frail as a lily, who drooped for love of the great King; another, dark as a gypsy and of a sullen beauty, vowed on the downfall of Thor to kill the King; and a third beside is an attempt to keep her vows. Still another there was, Thyra, his wife, who taunted him and jeered until he rode forth to battle, there to lose his kingdom at last.

And later we have him again kissing the feet of Pope Sylvester at Rome, renouncing his kingdom forever, and starting out, a holy pilgrim, to the land of Palestine; and, last of all, the scene stretches out into desert wastes where Olaf, shrunk and withered by the hot breath of Syria, lies dying in a hermit's cell, his fair kingdom in the North ruthlessly divided among his victors.

Germany at the Fair.

Strictly patriotic in every detail is the "Official Catalogue of the Exhibition of the German Empire at the International Exposition in St. Louis." Even the pages display the national colors, as the text is printed in red and black on white; the handsome leather cover is paneled to represent a stained-glass window and shows the imperial crown and the German eagle flanked by the insignia of the Life Guards. The reverse of the cover carries out this idea still further and is strewn with large W. II. in honor of the Kaiser. The book marker is a long silk ribbon of red, white, and black. The type is as nearly the real German, so strongly favored by the Kaiser, as the foreigner can be expected to read with comfort, and it is surprisingly legible. Not only did every part of the book—type, paper, ink, cover, binding, and translation—come from the confines of the Fatherland, but every man or firm responsible is given credit in a sort of special title page. The work was done at the Imperial Printing Office, and the book is on sale by George Stilke, Berlin.

WORN-OUT MILITIA REBEL AGAINST REVIEW

IMPOSING MILITARY SPECTACLE

Special to The New York Times.

WELLINGTON, Va., Sept. 10.—The Manassas manoeuvres, the working out of which has made this vicinity the centre of a cyclonic whirl of dust for the past four days, culminated here to-day in a grand review of all the troops engaged, an impressive function which was surrounded by all the pomp and circumstance of war and devoid of its hardships.

Previous hardships, however, had so played out the militia that not much more than one-half of their original number—which was three-quarters of the 27,000 manoeuvre troops—was in the picture. The brigade commanders of both Brown and Blue armies were very lenient with their men and readily excused those who were not in a fit condition to march to the review ground, the distance being about seven miles from Gen. Bell's Brown headquarters at Thoroughfare and about five miles from the headquarters of the Blue commander, Gen. Grant, at Manassas.

Notwithstanding the leniency of the commanding officers, some of the troops rebelled against being compelled to take part in the review. The Vermont regiment, in the Fourth Brigade of the Brown Army, refused to move from Thoroughfare to Wellington until transportation was furnished them. When arrangements had been made to take them up by railroad, something else was wrong, and the regiment declined to go under any conditions.

Major Eldridge's battalion of the Eighth Massachusetts, also in the Brown force, declined to make the march, with the exception of Capt. Canfield's company, which walked the whole distance. Later, however, most of the rebellious battalions arrived by train.

ALL THE COUNTY THERE.

Although the tactics of the past week have brought about many realistic fights and skirmishes, real marching, and brilliant flanking operations, and although the division commanders in carrying their plans into execution have uncovered many points of dramatic historic interest, Prince William County did not become enthusiastic over the operations until to-day, when they knew they could see both commanders, most of the distinguished guests, and all the soldiers at Wellington.

It was a great show, and all the county was there, including "Sue" Monroe of the Presidential family, who lives alone, and who, when she goes out, leaves all her doors and windows open in order that passers-by with piratical motives may be deceived into thinking that she is at home.

The spectators arrived at the review grounds on foot, on horseback, by train, and in all sorts of vehicles, from the trim, rubber-tired runabout to the antique hack. As for what they thought of the review—well, if the Presidential contest hinged on imperialism, a straw ballot yesterday wouldn't have uncovered a single vote for anti-imperialism.

The review itself was much in the nature of all similar military spectacles. It was the annual affair at Madison Square Garden greatly magnified. Lieut. Gen. Adna R. Chaffee, Chief of the Army General Staff and reviewing officer, was a striking military figure as he sat, erect and immovable, on his horse, while thousands of soldiers and horses filed past him.

The field chosen was a natural review ground. It was on a part of the Wheeler farm, which is just east of Wellington station. A cornfield hides the railroad track from the field, which mounts upward in a gentle slope to the red Wheeler barn, which has a windmill behind it, and its mile of width is flanked by trees of oak.

The reviewing staff stood in front of a stand in front of the barn, erected for the guests. On a line with the barn, and extending in both directions, was Prince William County, agape with wonder and admiration. All the girls came out in their finest raiment and insisted on standing out in front of the prescribed spectators' lines. A warlike cavalryman rode up and down, gruffly ordering them to stand back, but after he had been enfiladed twice by batteries of dimpled smiles and an artillery of soft voices, he decided that he was not quite sure where the line was, anyhow.

The Brown and Blue armies were in position on the field before 1 o'clock, the amended hour for the review, and a truly martial array they made as they rested with rifles stacked. The First Division, Gen. Grant's Blue army, constituted the right wing, and Gen. Bell's Brown army was the left wing. The troops of each division were in five lines, each brigade making one line, and between each line there was a distance of twenty-four yards.

ARRIVAL OF THE COMMANDERS.

Gen. Grant, the Blue commander, was the first of the high officers to arrive on the scene. With his staff he rode up to the stand in front of which was his wife with Mrs. Corbin and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt in an automobile. The crowd recognized him at once on account of his striking resemblance to the portraits of his father. Native politeness led them to cheer him, but an inherited antipathy, perhaps, prevented its being very long or very loud. After talking to Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Corbin for a few minutes Gen. Grant and his staff galloped back down the hill.

Gen. Bell, the Brown commander, arrived on the field shortly afterward, but he did not go up to the stand. Assembling his personal staff and his four brigade commanders, Gen. Lee, Gen. Barry, Col. Smith, and Col. Regan, he rode about before and between his lines, complimenting them as he went along, and tremendous cheering followed in his wake.

Lieut. Gen. Chaffee had arrived at corps headquarters at Gainesville at 9 o'clock and was saluted according to military regulations. He rode down from headquarters to the review field at the head of a distinguished, not to say picturesque and variegated body, including Major Gen. Corbin, Gov. Bates of Massachusetts, Gov. Terrell of Georgia, and Lieut. Gov. Willard of Virginia, and the whole corps of foreign military attachés in their service uniforms.

The review was carried out most expeditiously, the time required for the whole corps to pass in review being not more than two hours. Gen. Grant's army filed past first, Gen. Wint's, Gen. Bliss's, Col Price's, and Gen. Frost's brigades passing in the order named. The Fifth Regular Infantry, with its band, was the first to pass Gen. Chaffee. There was no enthusiasm at all until the Fifth New Jersey passed, its band playing "Dixie." Then there was a rattling volley of cheers, which ran along from one end to the other of the long line of spectators. The First Georgia passed, carrying a tattered battleflag, and this brought out more cheers.

The formation of the field made a good test of marching, as the troops came up a hill, saluted Gen. Chaffee, walked along a level for 100 yards, and then double-quicked down the hill and away in order not to impede the advance of the troops behind.

The first regiment to be applauded for its marching was the Fourteenth of Brooklyn, which is in the Blue Second Brigade. It was the only regiment in the entire corps which wore all blue—blue blouses and blue trousers—and they looked very smart and alert as they went in perfect step and alignment, breaking later into an equally faultless double. The spectators cheered heartily and spontaneously.

The Sixteenth Regulars also were cheered as they filed past in marching order, and the First Tennessee won applause when its band, like the New Jersey corps, played "Dixie."

COLORED TROOPS COLDLY RECEIVED.

The last company to pass was the First Separate Company of Conecticut, a colored troop made up chiefly of waiters at Yale. They marched erect and in fine order, but not a cheer greeted them as they filed past. One or two hisses even were heard, but the crowd did not encourage them.

On the whole, the Brown division was more favorably received than the Blue, and Gen. Bell, when he rode up with his staff to assist in the review of his troops, received quite an ovation, which was multiplied when a Tennessee regiment came on playing "Dixie" again.

The closeness with which the Prince William County people had followed the manoeuvres was evidenced by the fact that the sturdy Second Texas, which distinguished itself throughout the week by captures, attacks, and forced marches, and which forded Bull Run waist deep, got the greatest ovation of the day. The cheering began when its regimental colors were distinguished coming up the hill and continued until it had passed out of sight down the opposite slope.

The Ninth Massachusetts, which double-quicked across the manoeuvre map on the first day of fighting, also was cordially recognized when it passed, and the Boston boys had an excellent band which greatly added to the fine impression they made.

A big cheer was held in reserve for the crack Seventh Cavalry, which captured more prisoners and more flags, made more successful attacks and flanking movements, and broke more manoeuvre rules than all the cavalry of both divisions put together.

The militia regiments have been ordered to start without delay for their homes, and, although the Southern Railway has laid more than twenty-five miles of side tracks about the camps, undoubtedly there will be great delay and congestion. The Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine, and Texas troops were scheduled to start to-night.

The crowd at the little Wellington station, which seldom sees more than half a dozen persons at a time, was completely lost this afternoon in the sea of soldiers around it. Among the number was New York's Twelfth, which made a good showing notwithstanding its poor condition yesterday. At the station they made a raid on the local Commissary Department, and Lieut. Cornelius Vanderbilt, after a bargain-counter rush, managed to get two glasses of one-cent lemonade and a soda cracker. Then he started back with his regiment to get pay for the week's work done.

The division commanders will be relieved from duty to-morrow. Gen. Barry will remain in command of the regulars in camp, who will stay until the militia organizations get away.

NAVY MANOEUVRE PLANS.

Thirty Warships to Take Part in Operations at Virginia Capes.

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 10.—Capt. E. E. Winslow, United States engineer in charge of the river and harbor improvements at this port, and who is a member of the Army and Navy Board which is to arrange the programme for the manoeuvres to be held in Hampton Roads and Chesapeake Bay from June 11 to the 17th next, inclusive, said to-day that the manoeuvres would be on about the same scale as those held off Portland, and would be mainly to determine how efficient the army and navy is in electric searchlight work and position finding.

"Range finding is one thing and position finding another," explained the Captain. "You see, when a man is firing one of the big guns he is down below and the position of an enemy's ship or land battery must be determined acurately. Another thing is the working of the searchlights which play such an important part in the operation of the navy.

"Yes, old Fort Wool, opposite Fort Monroe, is going to be armed with modern rifles, but I am not at liberty now to state how many guns will be mounted or what their size will be. The old fort, when it was in commission, could mount 200 of the smooth-bore guns. I should say to-day, with modern rifles, about sixteen could be mounted."

In the manoeuvres next Spring about thirty war vessels will participate and all of the coast artillery and many of the troops of the regular army. It will be a test as to whether a hostile fleet could enter the Virginia capes and then do any damage to either Fort Monroe or old Fort Wool.

It may not be generally known, but the great feat of dredging Hampton Roads has about been completed. The work has been going on for eighteen months. When it is completed, Capt. Winslow says, the channel will have a width of 500 feet and there will be a depth of water of thirty feet at low water, which will permit the largest vessels afloat to enter with ease.

WHITNEY STUD TO BE SOLD.

Harry Payne Whitney, for the estate of William C. Whitney, authorized the announcement yesterday at the Sheepshead Bay race track that for the partition of the estate it had been decided to offer at auction all the thoroughbred stallions and brood mares that the late Mr. Whitney spent half a dozen years collecting for his great breeding establishment, conducted for several years on the leased farm La Belle, near Lexington, Ky.

The date fixed for the sale is Oct. 10 at Madison Square Garden, where the Fasig-Tipton Company will conduct the offering. The stallions to be sold number seven and include the sixty-thousand-dollar horse and successful sire Hamburg, the great English horse Meddler, the forty-thousand-dollar Nasturtium, the two Futurity winners Ballyhoo Bey and Yankee; Sandringham, own brother to King Edward's great English race horses and stallions Persimmon and Florizel, and the fast Blackstock. Eighty mares of the choicest breeding also will be sold at the same time.

As administrator of his father's estate, Mr. Whitney said his only purpose was to settle up affairs; but it is stated as a fact that the present turf arrangements, under which the Whitney horses in training are raced by H. B. Duryea, lessee of their running qualities, is for an indefinite period. Mr. Whitney declined to race in his own name so soon after his father's death, but it is not likely that he contemplates retiring from the sport, as he but recently secured a lease on the Brookdale Farm, at Redbank, N. J., from the heirs of Col. W. P. Thompson, and moved practically all the breeding stock to that place from Kentucky, where he declined to renew the leases on the farm used by his father. Aside from the settlement of the estate it is thought to be Mr. Whitney's intention to reduce the size of his breeding establishment, as, under the lavish expenditures of his father, it had grown to a size much too great for a private breeder.

PHIPPS CASE TO BE SETTLED.

Understood That Woman Will Keep Children and Phipps Pay Expenses.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Sept. 10.—The suit for divorce brought by Lawrence C. Phipps, the Pittsburg millionaire, against his wife will be settled next Tuesday in Denver.

Knox & Young, attorneys for Mrs. Phipps, have agreed to overtures made by the other side, and, while it is not officially so stated, it is understood that Mrs. Phipps will retain possession of the children, and that Mr. Phipps will bear all the expenses of the transcontinental litigation.

SHOT HIMSELF DEAD, FIREMAN AT BEDSIDE

"If You Don't, I Will," Lieut. Reid's Reported Words.

WIFE, TOO, SAW THE SUICIDE

Michaels, Now Dead, Had Been Attentive, His Wife Says, to Reid's Sister-in-Law.

Cloys Michaels, a young married man, who lived at 689 Tenth Avenue, near Forty-seventh Street, committed suicide under very unusual circumstances yesterday afternoon. According to Michael's young wife, who was in the room when the man shot himself, Lieut. Albert Reid of the New York Fire Department visited her home in the afternoon, and going to a room where her husband was in bed, said to him, "If you do not do it yourself, I will," and Michaels then pulled a pistol from under his pillow and ended his life with a bullet.

Michaels was the bookkeeper for the American Mineral Water Company at Forty-third Street and Second Avenue until Friday afternoon, when he resigned his place. Miss Clara Fargo of 738 Jackson Avenue, the Bronx, who is Lieut. Reid's sister-in-law, is a stenographer employed by the same concern. For several weeks, according to Mrs. Michaels, her husband had been attentive to Miss Fargo, and Lieut. Reid strongly objected to his attitude.

Lieut. Reid, it is said, had on several occasions told Michaels to let his sister-in-law alone. Mrs. Michaels says she knew of Michaels's infatuation and about three weeks ago she went to the company's office and begged Miss Fargo to discourage the attentions of her husband.

Both Michaels and Miss Fargo, it appears from the story told by Mrs. Michaels, failed to heed the advice.

The story of the suicide and the scene in which Lieut. Reid played an important part which preceded it was told by Mrs. Michaels last night.

"Last night," said Mrs. Michaels, "when my husband came home he told me that he and the Fargo girl were no longer friends. He said the trouble was all over, or soon would be, and then he showed me a new pistol. I thought his manner very strange, and watched him closely. He went out and mailed several letters about 11 o'clock and then came home and went to bed. This morning when he awoke he said he was sick and would stay in bed. I had no idea of the trouble that was coming until in the afternoon about 3 o'clock.

"At that hour Lieut. Reid came to our flat and asked to see my husband. I told him that Mr. Michaels was sick in bed and couldn't be seen. The fireman answered that he must see him, and without any further talk, walked into the room where my husband was.

"Lieut. Reid looked at Mr. Michaels a moment or two and then said: 'I see you haven't done it yet.' My husband did not answer, and then Lieut. Reid added:

"'Well, if you don't, I will.'

"I turned around and asked Reid what all the trouble was about, and then it was that my husband placed the pistol to his head and fired.

"I looked around when I heard the shot and seeing the blood, begged Lieut. Reid to go for a doctor. 'No, I will go for an officer instead,' he answered, and then left me alone with my dying husband. I saw Lieut. Reid later talking to a policeman on the street as I was on my way to telephone for a doctor. I knew that it was he because he was in full uniform."

Policeman Dowling of the West Forty-seventh Street Station was standing at Tenth Avenue and West Forty-seventh Street a few minutes after 3 o'clock when he noticed a fireman in full uniform approaching him. The fireman walked up to Dowling and said, according to the policeman:

"A fellow has just shot himself up stairs."

"Did you do anything?" Dowling asked.

"Yes, I sent in an emergency call," answered Reid.

"What were you doing up there when he shot himself?" asked Dowling.

"I was there on business," replied Reid.

Dowling left the fireman at this point, and, running up the stairs to the Michaels' apartment, found Michaels in bed with a bullet wound in his head. A few minutes later an ambulance arrived from Rooseveit Hospital, in which institution Michaels died half an hour later.

Dowling reported the affair to his precinct commander, Capt. Hussey, who detailed Detective Sergeants Carter and Frye to make a thorough investigation of the case. Late last night no arrests had been made, and it was said that in all probability none would be. The police confess that they are puzzled as to how they stand in the matter.

The Fargo girl is about eighteen years old, and had known Michaels about three months. Miss Fargo told Mrs. Michaels, the latter said last night, that she was a Sunday school teacher and a regular participant in other religious work in the Bronx.

Mrs. Mary Fargo, mother of the young woman, said at her home, on Jackson Avenue, last night that Michaels had been paying very marked attention to her daughter, and that a letter had been received from him yesterday in which he told the girl that unless she saw him he would kill not only himself but her as well.

For several days, she said, Michaels had been hanging around the house, and that finally, in order to protect her, the daughter had been sent to Long Branch. Michaels, she added, had led her daughter to believe that he was a single man.

Lieut. Reid, when seen at his company house, declared that when he went to the Michaels home he did not use the language attributed to him by Mrs. Michaels, but had insted told Michaels that if he persisted in his attentions to his sister-in-law he would take the matter to court. He was in the kitchen talking to Mrs. Michaels, he said, when Michaels killed himself. He added that Michaels had written to the newspapers that he was going to commit suicide.

STRIKE AT SCIENTIST CHURCH.

Building Held Up by Grievance of Unions Against Laborer.

ORANGE, Sept. 10.—Work is at a standstill on the erection of the new First Church of Christ, Scientist. The employment of a non-union laborer to help the slate roofers is said to be the cause of the trouble. Carrington Henning, the First Reader of the church, hasn't applied the doctrine of his church to the cure of the trouble, and he is fain to admit that the people of the Oranges are not merely imagining that there is a strike, but that it is a grim reality.

This is the second time that the church has been held up by labor troubles. As Mr. Henning understands it, the grievance of the unions is that Samuel J. Elsair of East Orange, who had the contract to put on the slate roof, permitted his driver to act as a laborer, in that he allowed him to carry slate from the wagon to him and his partner.

CLARKSON'S MORMON DEAL.

Said to Involve Administration Support of Smoot.

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 10.—Gen. John S. Clarkson, Surveyor of the Port of New York, after a visit of two weeks here, has left for his home, leaving politicians much excited over the report that before his departure he agreed to urge on President Roosevelt the wisdom of supporting Senator Smoot in the contest for his seat in exchange for Mormon assistance in carrying the States of Idaho and Wyoming for Mr. Roosevelt and a more or less direct pledge of Utah's Electoral vote.

Gen. Clarkson came to Salt Lake two weeks ago with his son, Grosvenor Clarkson. The General has for years been regarded as one of the best friends the Mormons have in the Nation. He was one of the Republican leaders who were charged at the time of the State's admission with having made a political deal with the heads of the Church by which the State was to send Republican Representatives to both branches of Congress in return for Statehood.

The best information is that Clarkson came to Utah at the request of the Smoot faction of the Republican Party. Smoot and Kearns, the two Senators, have been engaged in a struggle for control of the party machinery. Smoot has been signally victorious.

Kearns attributes his opponent's success to the fact that he is an Apostle of the Mormon Church, and hence able to utilize the organization of the Church in the political struggle. Smoot's candidate, Cutler, was nominated for Governor in the State Convention. Kearns, who owns The Salt Lake Tribune, the organ of the Republican Party, has declined personally and in his newspaper to support the State ticket named at this convention.

It was to get Kearns and his newspaper into line that Clarkson was originally sent for. Since his coming new complications have arisen. A new party has been organized by the opponents of the Mormon Church's dictation in politics, and Senator Kearn's support and the support of his newspaper have been pledged to this movement.

HE STOOD STILL 28 HOURS.

Man on Bowery Probably Has Muscular Catalepsy, Doctor Says.

A fairly well-dressed man about fifty years old walked slowly up to, and finally stopped in front of, Henry Miner's restaurant at 356 Bowery, at 8 o'clock Friday evening, and stood looking in. Not a muscle did he move, but stood rigidly looking almost blankly into the restaurant. At midnight, when Mr. Miner was leaving, he thought that the man might be hungry, and told him if such was the case he was welcome to go in and get a meal. The man mumbled a few unintelligible words, and Mr. Miner went away and left him standing there.

When he came back at 7 o'clock yesterday morning the man was in the same condition and the night clerk at the Planters House next door said that the man had not moved a particle all night, though at one time it was raining.

At about noon yesterday Mr. Miner called the attention of a policeman to the man, but the bluecoat said that as he had done nothing he had no right to interfere with him. The man kept standing still. Finally, shortly before midnight last night, Mr. Miner told Policeman Sloan of the Mercer Street Station of the man's peculiar lack of action and Flynn summoned an ambulance and the man was sent to St. Vincent's Hospital.

Dr. L. Flynn, the ambulance surgeon, said that in his opinion the man was suffering from muscular catalepsy, a malady which, he said, is not often encountered by the medical profession. In such cases, he added, it was not unusual for the afflicted person's muscles to remain perfectly rigid for ten days or two weeks, but that it was unusual for a person to remain on his feet for more than twenty-four hours.

A card marked "Epileptic Colony, Sonyea, New York," was found in the man's pocket. This seemed to bear out the diagnosis of the physician.

The man was sent to Bellevue Hospital. Nothing else in the shape of letters or papers which might assist in determining his identity was found on him.

MAY LYNCH SCORE OF NEGROES

ATHENS, Ga., Sept. 10.—Intense feeling has been aroused here and throughout Clarke County by the discovery that the negroes have organized a number of "Before Day" clubs with the avowed purpose of murdering and robbing white planters. Two negroes have been arrested who have confessed that they were members of the clubs, and have disclosed the plot against the whites.

According to the evidence thus far secured, twenty negroes are implicated in this plot. It seems that the conspiracy was talked of as far back as last September, but that it was not carried out, the leaders preferring to wait. They are all farmhands and live on the plantations of the men whom they are alleged to be plotting against. The men who have been marked for slaughter are T. J. Poss, W. J. Poss, F. S. Lester, W. T. Lester, Hugh Poss, and Adolphus Smith, all wealthy farmers.

The intention of the negroes is said to have been to wait until a few bales of cotton had been picked and sold, and then to kill the white men, burn their houses, and rob them.

The disclosure of the plot has enraged the whites, and it is feared that summary vengeance will be taken on the negroes implicated.

WILLIAMS MAKES CHARGES.

Former Seaboard Director Says Ryan-Blair Syndicate Broke Faith.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 10.—John Skelton Williams, ex-Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Seaboard Air Line, announced to-day that J. William Middendorf & Co. and John L. Williams & Sons had completed their deliveries to the Ryan-Blair syndicate of 140,000 shares of stock, 65,000 shares preferred and 75,000 shares common.

Williams accuses the Ryan-Blair party of throwing their stocks on the market to demoralize prices and of breaking faith with him. He also intimates that a change of management is necessary to obtain the results the property is capable of giving.

"My information," said Mr. Williams, "is that at the time we made this sale to Ryan the syndicate, in their efforts to keep down prices of Seaboard, had lost a large portion, if not nearly all of the 55,000 shares of stock, which they received as a bonus with the $2,300,000 Seaboard three-year 5s.

"If the statements made by members of the syndicate to the effect that they had bought no Seaboard stocks except the stock received with the three-year 5 per cent. bonds, and 140,000 shares purchased from Middendorf and Williams be correct, the syndicate's entire holdings of Seaboard at the present time amount to but little more than one-fourth of the stock of the company outstanding.

In Fine Humor, Makes Joke About Bosses.

HEARS STANDARD OIL RUMOR

Ex-Senator Henry G. Davis of West Virginia, the Democratic Vice-Presidential candidate, arrived at the Fifth Avenue Hotel early last evening from Philadelphia, having stopped off there for a short time en route from Baltimore.

The ex-Senator walked with a springy step, not a bit like a man of eighty-three, as his tall form appeared in the lobby. He carried in one hand a grip of antique architecture, and under the other arm a parcel wrapped in a newspaper. When pressed for details he admitted that it contained a nightshirt.

"I have come over to discuss campaign matters, to meet the party managers again, and to see how things look," said Mr. Davis in reply to questions.

"What are your plans, Senator?"

"Don't know yet. You know all us party men have bosses, and I have not yet seen my bosses."

"Senator, how about the report published here this afternoon that the Standard Oil Company has decided to close its works in West Virginia and move its men to Pennsylvania and Ohio?"

"First time I ever heard of such a thing." It was explained that the statement, apparently coming from Standard Oil sources, was to the effect that the move was taken to aid the Democrats, the argument being that the employes of the Standard Oil Company were Republicans and were being sent into Republican States. Mr. Davis was told that Senator Scott of West Virginia, one of the Republican campaign managers, was much disturbed over the report.

"Well, Scott need not be disturbed," said he. "I take exception to the statement that all of the Standard Oil employes in West Virginia are Republicans. I know many of them are Democrats, and I should feel as sorry as Senator Scott if anything should happen to take them away from the State at this time. I hope the report is not true."

"Would the total number of these employes reach 10,000, as has been stated?"

"Yes; I should say the total would reach a much higher figure—probably 25,000."

Pretty soon Mr. Davis emerged from the hotel wearing a dress suit, and was joined by Chairman Taggart. Both got in a carriage and the ex-Senator said they were going to the theatre.

When asked what he expected to do after the theatre, he replied:

"You ought not to ask a young bachelor like me what he expects to do after midnight. I hear that you have some very fine automobiles in New York and I may take a spin in one of them."

Senator Davis said he did not expect to see any of the campaign managers until Monday.

There was a story going the rounds last night in regard to the probable campaign contribution of the Vice Presidential candidate. It was said that Chairman Taggart had suggested that he should be assessed $2,000 for each year of his life.

"Well, Tom," the candidate is reported to have replied, "you have been going around saying that I looked and acted like a man of forty-five instead of eighty-three. Suppose we settle on the basis of forty-five years."

Senator Davis returned to the hotel shortly after 11 o'clock. He said that he did not go to the theatre, as he had intended, but spent the evening with Mr. Taggart and others at the Waldorf. He added that he thought Mr. Taggart was an extremely able campaign manager.

There was a rumor that Judge Parker was to be in New York on Monday, so Mr. Davis said that he would not go to Esopus until he had heard more definitely concerning the plans of the Presidential candidate.

Mr. Davis then offered to play whist with any of the reporters who cared to try a rubber with him, but no one accepted the challenge. One of them offered to play poker, but Senator Davis said that he had never learned to play the great American game.

SHEPARD NAMES CONDITIONS.

Wouldn't Accept Unless Party's Action Was Unanimous, He Writes.

In a letter sent from his Summer home at Lake George to Herman A. Metz, President of the Brooklyn Democratic Club, Edward M. Shepard defines his position with regard to the talk of his nomination for Governor. The letter was written as a result of the attempt of the club at a meeting on Thursday night to put Mr. Shepard in the field.

While the letter has not been made public it is said that Mr. Shepard deplored the "premature" action of the club members and settled the rumor that the delegates from the five anti-McCarren districts in Brooklyn would put him forward. Mr. Shepard, it is said, declared he would not allow his name used for factional purposes and would not be made an instrument of division in the Kings County organization. He is said to have stated frankly that if the party, with substantial unanimity nominated him to head the State ticket he would accept, but that he would not figure as the choice of a mere faction.

The names of Mr. Shepard and William Travers Jerome were practically the only ones mentioned among Democratic politicians yesterday as probabilities for the Governorship nomination, with a strong drift toward Shepard.

There is a hesitancy on the part of the leaders to take up the Jerome boom, owing to the fact that Tammany has indicated through quiet channels that as an organization it would oppose him, but would not oppose Mr. Shepard. At both National and State headquarters yesterday the leaders declared frankly that from the present indications they expected Mr. Shepard would be named at the Saratoga Convention.

William F. Sheehan, Chairman of the National Executive Committee, went to Esopus yesterday to confer with Judge Parker, and when he returns to-morrow it is expected some announcement will be made concerning Judge Parker's proposed speaking tour.

MRS. WIDENER'S JEWEL FOUND.

$5,000 Pendant Picked Up at Newport and Returned to Owner.

NEWPORT, Sept. 10.—The five-thousand-dollar pendant which Mrs. Joseph E. Widener of Philadelphia lost while going to Mrs. Fish's ball on Tuesday night has been recovered. The jewel was found on Bellevue Avenue, near the residence of Mrs. Richard Gambrill by a man who gave it into the custody of one of the local jewelers.

As soon as an advertisement appeared the Chief of Police was notified, and the jewel returned to its owner. Just how the jewel was lost is unknown, but it is supposed that the clasp had become loosened and the pendant slipped from its fastening.

JAPANESE LOOTED CITY.

Officers Were Unable to Restrain Troops After Entry Into Liao-Yang.

LIAO-YANG, Sept. 7, via Tien-Tsin, Sept. 10.—The Japanese officers were unable to restrain their soldiers after six days of desperate fighting, and looting became general.

Last night the soldiers, in attempting to rob the missionary and Red Cross compound, stabbed Dr. A. M. Westwater, a well-known medical missionary, in the neck and hand.

This is said to be the first instance the Japanese soldiers have been known to be uncontrollable.

The Japanese were welcomed by the Chinese, but they abused the good name which they established in the Chino-Japanese war.

Chinese refugees are still arriving from the battleground, where native fortune-seekers are scouring the field for treasure. Most of the dead have been buried, but broken accoutrements strew the trenches.

The Japanese reinforcements are en route north by all roads.

Prince Kaiyen, brother of the Emperor of Japan, and commander of the Second Brigade of Cavalry, has passed Hai-Cheng.

HELPED PRINCESS TO ESCAPE.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—A much-talked-of personage in Germany this week is Dr. Albert Suedekum, the Socialist member of the Reichstag who aided Princess Louise of Saxe-Coburg to escape.

He is an eminent authority on insanity, and for years has spent much time in investigating cases in which persons have been incarcerated in asylums by rich relatives. Through these inquiries he became interested in the case of the Princess.

Other Socialists, however, are not satisfied with Dr. Suedekum's part in the affair. A prominent member of the Reichstag remarked to-day that it was an effort to obtain notoriety.

LOSES FOOT AT BRIDGE.

The foot was crushed and Mr. Dennis was taken to the Hudson Street Hospital in an ambulance, where it was found necessary to amputate it at once. On account of the patient's great age, it is feared that the shock may prove fatal. At a late hour last night, however, he was resting easily.

MUSHROOMS KILL A MINISTER.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Sept. 10.—The Rev. William Francis, assistant pastor of the First Baptist Church of this city, is dead as the result of eating mushrooms picked by himself.

Three other members of the family are recovering from severe illness caused by partaking of the same dish.

BANKER ARRESTED FOR FRAUD.

Charged with Being Involved in Wrecked Denver Bank.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 10.—H. J. Johnson, a banker of this city and Denver, was arrested to-day on indictments found in Denver alleging frauds in connection with the Fidelity Bank there, recently placed in the hands of a receiver.

Johnson is being held awaiting the arrival of an officer from Denver. He expresses willingness to return to Colorado without requisition papers. The Fidelity Bank of this city, a branch of the Denver concern, has also been placed in the hands of a receiver.

MR. ISELIN HELPS ENTERTAIN.

Banker Assists Daughter in Reception for Italian Children.

NEW ROCHELLE, Sept. 10.—Miss Georgianna Iselin, daughter of Adrian Iselin, the banker, has made the hearts of nearly a thousand children glad this Summer by giving them outings at her father's country home at New Rochelle on the Sound. Nearly every week she has entertained large parties of boys and girls from the various Catholic institutions and schools. To-day Miss Iselin entertained the entire Sunday School of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church of New Rochelle. This church was erected recently by her father at a cost of $50,000, and is attended exclusively by Italians.

The children were accompanied by Fathers Manzelli and McNichol and their teachers. They played games, danced, and enjoyed a sail on the Sound aboard Mr. Iselin's yacht Helvetia II. A tea was given for the teachers by Miss Iselin, and her father, who is now past eighty, helped to entertain the Italian children, and seemed to get much enjoyment from seeing them happy.

TOWN A VAST PUMPKIN PATCH.

Freshet Washed Farmer's Crop Away—Belvideres Got the Seed.

BELVIDERE, N. J., Sept. 10.—A remarkable visitation of pumpkins has made Belvidere picturesque, and pumpkin pie the most popular dish that ever came to town. Asher Brands, a farmer about two miles up the river, experimented last year with the culture of a particularly large specimen of the pumpkin family, and he had just harvested a barnful of them, when the freshet struck the Delaware Valley. The pumpkins came along with the waters, and seeds were scattered everywhere.

With the arrival of Spring pumpkin vines sprang up all over and in the most inconceivable places. Now the town is yellow with them. They are in the streets, in the flower gardens, in the yards, and some sprouted even in Joshua Ketcham's coal bin. A vine that climbed up the side of Sharp Mellick's cottage has placed two thirty-pounders on his parlor window sill. The brick-paved patch around The Warren Journal's printing office looks as if a dozen delinquent subscribers had been settling their scores.

Wherever the eye turns it sees only pumpkins, pumpkins, pumpkins, all from the scattered seed of Asher Brands's freshet-swept crop.

FOUGHT IN EQUAL NUMBERS

Highly Nervous Muscovites Often Fired Without Sighting.

SPLENDID DASH OF KUROKI

WILD FLIGHT FROM STRONGHOLD

LIAO-YANG, Sept. 4, via Tien-Tsin, Sept. 10.—The Japanese at 8 o'clock last evening discovered that the Russians had evacuated Liao-Yang, and at 11 o'clock they sent scouting parties to the southern and western walls of the city.

At 3 o'clock this morning the troops of the victorious army quietly entered and occupied Liao-Yang, Gen. Kuropatkin's former base and stronghold. This success was achieved after five days of glorious fighting.

The battle of Liao-Yang is accepted here as determining the mastery of Manchuria. In it the Russians were fully equal in numerical strength to the Japanese, who had approximately 180,000 men in the field.

The Russian artillery was superior in range and rapidity of fire to that of the Japanese. The Russians forced the Japanese attackers to take dangerous positions by means of intrepid assaults.

In the fighting on the plains, where the Russians believed they would have the upper hand because of their superiority in cavalry and of the opportunities to deliver bayonet charges, the Japanese resisted successfully.

Heavy Losses on Both Sides.

The Russian losses in the fighting around Liao-Yang are estimated at 10 per cent. of the number of troops engaged. The Japanese assert that their losses were very heavy.

The fact that the Japanese artillery maintained its fire for six days without diminution astonished the Russians, who could not account for the rapidity with which the Japanese must have transported their ammunition.

The railroad has proved itself to be inadequate for the requirements of the Russian army in retreat.

The belief is expressed here in certain quarters that the active campaign is at an end for at least four months to come.

After Gen. Kuroki had noted the march of the Tenth Russian Army Corps, which he had driven in from the An-Ping Road to the plain, on its way to join the Russian centre, which Gen. Nodzu had forced in from Tao-feng-Shi, he divided his forces stationed on the An-Ping and Feng-wang-Cheng Roads. He took care to have a sufficiently strong force on the Feng-wang-Cheng Road, on Gen. Nodzu's extreme right, and sent reinforcements to Gen. Nodzu, who was pushing with the Japanese centre army along the south roads. Gen. Kuroki in the meantime waited quietly with two divisions on the south bank of the Tai-Tse River.

On Aug. 29 the artillery under Gen. Nodzu bombarded fiercely the three hills at Chiao-fan-Tun. On the same day Gen. Oku, in command of the Japanese left army, working his way with rifle fire and artillery, slowly advanced along the railroad in spite of the Russian opposition from neighboring elevations and fortifications. The Russian cavalry were not able to locate the Japanese trenches on this advance.

Kuropatkin Prepared to Retreat.

The character of the Japanese advance apparently had served as a warning to Gen. Kuropatkin to make sure of his retreat, and his transport was at once seen moving rapidly out of Liao-Yang over the railroad bridge.

On Aug. 30 the Japanese closed in on the Russians in their mountain position at Chiao-fan-Tun. Here the guns of the opposing forces were very close to each other.

At 10 o'clock on the morning of the 30th Gen. Kuropatkin's staff moved out of Liao-Yang. At the same time rifle fire was heard drawing nearer to the railroad station, and this was an indication of the advance of the Japanese left army. The fences around all the houses at Liao-Yang had been removed in order to facilitate the movement of wagons and troops. Wounded men, of whom none was seen on the 29th, were trailing along the roads from the south and southwest into Liao-Yang on the 30th.

The Russians made use of a field balloon all day long on the 30th, and by means of it they got the range of one Japanese battery, which they succeeded in putting out of action. As a general thing, however, they failed to find either the enemy's batteries or his troops, while the Japanese continued to silence Russian battery after Russian battery.

Unsuccessful Japanese Assaults.

At 3 o'clock on the afternoon of the 30th the Japanese shelled a Russian battery posted on a hill within three miles of Liao-Yang, but shortly after this hour it became apparent that the Russians had begun to hold their own. By 4 o'clock in the afternoon the Japanese shrapnel fire was confined to the position at Chiao-fan-Tun, where the Russians were disputing every hillock. The Japanese made repeated but unsuccessful assaults upon this position. The fighting of the 30th came to a close at 7 o'clock in the evening.

The Russian casualties for the 29th and 30th totaled more than 5,000 men.

The Japanese, from a low range of hills to the southeast and south of Shu-Shan, began shelling the northern end of the Russian line at Shu-Shan at 9:45 on the morning of the 31st. This artillery fire was preceded and accompanied by infantry rushes over the valley and the lower hills south of the road. They began before dawn and were continued until evening, the Japanese officers urging their worn-out and fainting men with the points of their swords.

There was very hard fighting at a round-topped hill in the Russian line opposite the point where the two Japanese armies under Nodzu and Oku came together. The Russian position here was protected with wire entanglements, and a small body of Russian troops absolutely refused to retire. In one trench seven men fought gallantly until they were surrounded by the Japanese.

At the end of this sharp fighting the Russians were hurling down sandbags upon the enemy. They succeeded in killing one Japanese officer and injuring another, after which they surrendered, and the hill was occupied by the enemy.

At 5 o'clock in the evening the fighting, which had raged all day long, centred along the south road, where for two hours there was a heavy artillery fire and a vast amount of ammunition was expended. The valley in front and under the Russian guns during this artillery duel was an inferno of shrieking and moaning shrapnel, while beyond the Russian shells burst continuously at the head of the Japanese advance.

Furious Rifle Fire.

During the day the Russian rifle fire was indescribably furious. The Russian trenches for a distance of several miles threw out all day long a continuous hail of lead, accompanied by unceasing flashes of fire. In spite of its continued ferocity this rifle fire was comparatively ineffectual, the Russians often firing without sighting the enemy.

This hail of Russian rifle bullets did not cease before 10 o'clock at night. It is estimated that 1,000 Russian shells were thrown into the valley beyond the South Road, where the only evidence of the presence of the Japanese was a Red Cross camp.

During the night of the 31st the Russians deemed the position of the enemy to be so threatening that they made preparations to fall back.

Gen. Mistchenko was on the extreme left of the Russian line with a division composed of cavalry, artillery, and infantry. During the night of the 31st his force was sent out in a northeasterly direction to gain information concerning Gen. Kuroki's movement around the Russians' left flank in the direction of the railroad.

Gen. Ivanoff and his command were stationed on Gen. Stakelberg's right, facing Gen. Nodzu and the Japanese centre army. Gen. Ivanoff had succeeded the late Lieut. Gen. Count Keller in the command of the Russian Eastern Army. He had removed his headquarters from the village of Tashi, in the middle of the southern plain, to a point within the shelter of the city walls and on the road which leads to Yen-Tai by a pontoon bridge across the Tai-Tse River. During the night of the 31st the Tenth Corps, which had assisted in holding the Feng-wang-Cheng road against the Japanese, began moving its transport out of the city to the north.

The Seventeenth Corps, which had not as yet been in action, and which was being held on the north bank of the Tai-Tse River, was deployed in the hills, and had been partly moved to the northward. Part of the Fifth Corps, which arrived here a short time before the fighting began, had been sent at once to the front, while the remainder had reported with the Second Corps and was being held in reserve.

Chinese Graves Razed.

All the trees and Chinese graves on the firing line, which in any way might obstruct the operations, had been removed by the Russians.

On the morning of Sept. 1 all the non-combatants were ordered to leave Liao-Yang, and the Russian Commissary of Police sent an order to the Chinese Magistrate of the city that all Chinese must leave Liao-Yang within two days. The Japanese were seen to be in possession of the Russian positions at Shu-Shan, and it was learned also on the morning of Sept. 1 that Gen. Stakelberg had withdrawn during the night.

The Chinese at Liao-Yang became alarmed, and they began secretly to make Japanese flags. There was much confusion throughout the city. Proprietors of foreign shops made frantic efforts to sell their stocks on the streets at ridiculously low prices to any one who would pay cash, and others endeavored to have their property loaded on railroad cars. The flight of Japanese shells over the railroad station stampeded them, however, and they fled in disorder, glad to get away with their lives.

The foreign military attachés who were in Liao-Yang were taken North under escort.

The correspondent noticed that morning an unbroken line of ammunition wagons, batteries of artillery, and Russian troops using the railroad bridge to get out of Liao-Yang to the north.

It became known that Gen. Kuroki was making a dash around the Russian left for the railroad at a point fifteen miles north of here. He crossed the Tai-Tse River the night of Aug. 30 and took the splendid Russian defenses at Pensihu with very little effort. He continued to advance steadily and turned the Russian left. His army covered fifteen miles in quick time.

The effect of this movement was to force the Russians to leave Liao-Yang and retire in the direction of the coal mines east of Yen-Tai. Kuroki had threatened to cut Gen. Kuropatkin's army of seven corps in two.

Panic at Railway Station.

The correspondent of The Associated Press was eating lunch at the railroad station at noon when the first Japanese shell struck the foreign settlement. Within fifteen minutes all the troops, hospital attendants, merchants, and other people in the vicinity had cleared out and only a few Chinese remained.

The Japanese shells continued to fall in the settlement. Chinese, under the direction of Russian officers, were making hurried efforts to remove the stores and ammunition from the railroad sheds.

The Japanese shells came from Shu-Shan, and a Russian shrapnel fire was soon turned on the battery there. One Japanese shell killed a horse a few feet from the correspondent as the animal was passing the telegraph office. Others burst in the Post Office, in the hospital, in the Red Cross tent, which had been put up in the garden around the station, and in the public park under the ancient pagoda.

The crowd of refreshment takers fled helter-skelter with restaurant keepers and waiters, panic-stricken officers, orderlies, soldiers, and the riff-raff of the streets, all seeking refuge beyond the northern wall of the city. The Chinese immediately began to loot, but wherever they were caught immediate punishment was meted out to them.

This was at noon of Sept. 1. On that day the Russians filled all the trenches, rifle pits, and forts to the west and south of Liao-Yang with fresh troops. They kept up a continual shrapnel fire upon the Japanese approaches without being aware of the other movements of the enemy. During this time the main body of the Russian army was in active retreat.

Splendid Japanese Advance.

At 6 o'clock in the evening the shells were falling just outside the western walls, and on the Russian heliograph station at the northwest corner of the city.

From this station the Japanese could now be seen. They were advancing splendidly over the southern hills. Their formation was regular and open. The ranges of the Japanese positions were known to the Russian gunners, who poured in a terrible and destructive fire upon the enemy. A Japanese battery and two companies of infantry were seen skirting the main south road. They were moving toward the city and finally disappeared behind Kow-Liang.

The positions at Chiao-fan-Tun were seen to be deserted. The right flank of Gen. Nodzu's army had previously taken up a position to the west of Chiao-fan-Tun, whence his troops charged the Russian breastworks.

Many Japanese Officers Slain.

One Japanese battalion lost every officer in this charge, and a Corporal was seen to take command. The Japanese intrenched in the vicinity of Tishi, near where Gen. Ivanhoff had his headquarters the day before.

The Russian Red Cross worked continually on the firing line.

Late that night, as the correspondent was seeking a place to sleep, a wounded Russian soldier was borne past him, shouting out in a delirious voice that Gen. Kuropatkin had gained a great victory over the Japanese.

At 8 o'clock on the morning of Sept. 2 the transport of the Russian Army was still going out to the north, and the head of the train was almost opposite Yen-Tai.

Effect of Kuroki's Dash.

Gen. Kuroki severed his connection with the Japanese centre army and left the An-Ping road unprotected. His army was in front of the last Russian position in the coal mining district to the east of Yen-Tai.

The importance and effect of Kuroki's dash to the rear of the Russian army was particularly noticeable that morning. The foreign military attachés had been escorted from Liao-Yang to the north. They left their train at a point near Yen-Tai, and proceeded in the direction of the fighting between Kuroki's troops and the Russians, who were attempting to hold them back.

Here the Russians had lost an important hill position, had gained it again, and had lost it a second time. This greatly discouraged the Russian soldiers.

It is declared that the immediate precipitous retreat of the entire Russian army at Liao-Yang was prevented by the retaking of this hill, which lies to the east of Yen-Tai. The Russians, however, could not hold the hill, and the Japanese were again soon in possession.

Gen. Kuroki's attack at Yen-Tai was soon relaxed, however, and Gen. Mistchenko and his command were withdrawn from the Russian defenders of Yen-Tai and sent over to the west side of the railroad to make a demonstration and to aid in covering the retreat of the main army.

Russian Regiments Routed.

At 5 P. M. Sept. 2 two Russian regiments which had been beaten to the east of Yen-Tai retreated toward Yen-Tai. They were ordered back to the fighting line while still under a sharp Japanese rifle fire.

The correspondent, who was working his way south along the railroad, passed a number of Russian troops who had been driven back from around Yen-Tai. He also passed a train bearing 300 Russian wounded to the north. The road was filled with Chinese refugees from the coal mines as well as wounded men, all hurrying to the rear.

The cannonading came to an end when the sun went down. Throughout the night of Sept. 2 it broke out again fitfully, but the periods were of short duration.

Final Day's Operations.

The morning of Sept. 3 showed that Gen. Kuroki had not attained his object, but the victory of the Japanese over the Russians appeared to be complete. Russian troops and refugees from Liao-Yang in rickshaws were pouring north along the railroad and along the main highway on the way to Mukden.

The Russian press censors, who were stationed at Liao-Yang, Yen-Tai, and Mukden, had fled to Harbin. Newspaper correspondents were instructed to send their telegrams to Harbin.

The night of Sept. 2 had been marked throughout by furious rifle firing outside of Liao-Yang. The Russian troops were in a highly nervous and excited state. They were convinced that the Japanese were creeping forward irresistibly all the time.

Sept. 3 saw the resumption of the cannonading at dawn, and the vast clouds of smoke which arose slowly from the burning warehouses in the foreign settlement at Liao-Yang could be seen for a distance of ten miles.

As the correspondent was attempting to get into Liao-Yang he heard Russian cheers in the direction of Kow-Liang, to the west of the railroad, where it was reported that Gen. Mistchenko had been successful in clearing the enemy away from the Russian right flank.

Smoothed Road for Retreat.

Gen. Sassulitch of Kiu-lien-Cheng fame, with 1,000 men, on Sept. 3 was smoothing the road north of Liao-Yang for the retreat of the Russian artillery and troops. He was also trying to put into effect various devices calculated to delay the advance of the Japanese.

When the correspondent passed the fire-swept bed of the Tai-Tse River on his way into Liao-Yang at noon of Sept. 3 the Russian infantry had retired from the immediate front to shelter behind the south wall of the city.

On getting into Liao-Yang it was seen that the Japanese rifle bullets were falling around the railroad station and that all the stored lumber and wooden buildings in that vicinity were in flames.

Two hundred and twenty Chinese who had been wounded by shells falling inside the city had been brought together at the Chinese Red Cross station and were being cared for.

It was apparent that the Russians were using the walls of the city for protection. This the Japanese discovered, and consequently they continued to throw shells into Liao-Yang. The number of Chinese wounded increased.

Japanese Captured Correspondent.

On the assurance of a member of the staff of Gen. Sassulitch that the evacuation of Liao-Yang would not take place before Sept. 4, the correspondent devoted his attention to caring for Chinese wounded until nightfall, but during the night the Russian sentries were withdrawn from Liao-Yang.

The pontoon bridges across the Tai-Tse River were hurriedly removed, the Japanese entered and took possession of the city, and the correspondent was taken prisoner before he was aware of what had occurred.

TO ASK POWERS TO INTERVENE.

Council of the Inter-Parliamentary Union Decides on a Resolution.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 10.—The powers signatory to The Hague Convention will be asked by the Inter-parliamentary Union, the twelfth conference of which is about to be held here, to intervene in the Russo-Japanese war; President Roosevelt will be requested to call a second session of The Hague Congress; compulsory arbitration will be advocated; the use of submarine mines in time of war will be deplored, and many kindred resolutions will be presented during the deliberations of next week.

The decision to attempt to bring about intervention in the Far Eastern war was only reached to-day by the Council of the Union after a heated discussion, at times bitter.

When the proposition was brought forward M. Cochéry, a French Deputy, and ex-Minister, was on his feet in an instant. He objected vigorously to any attempt whatever to inject the matter into the conference. He was supported by Marquis di San Guelanio, President of the Italian group.

Dr. Gobat, a Swiss Deputy, and Secretary of the Union, said:

"If this Union, heralded everywhere as deliberating in a peace conference, so signally fails of its opportunity and duty as to neglect to deplore the bloodiest war in the history of the ages, we may count ourselves as certain to become the laughing stock of the world."

The resolution was finally adopted.

Then the suggestion was made that President Roosevelt would be the proper head of a State to tender mediation. This proposition was left in the air, with the understanding that no further step in regard to it would be taken without information as to the President's personal wishes in the matter.

The council organized to-day by the election of Congressman Richard Bartholdt of St. Louis as President.

There were submitted to the Council dozens of resolutions, the discussion of which occupied hours.

NO NEW LOAN TO RUSSIA YET.

PARIS, Sept. 10.—One of the bankers who made the recent French loan to Russia informs the correspondent of The Associated Press that considerable time must necessarily elapse before Russia can safely apply again to the French market.

Russian credit continues good, but the financiers of St. Petersburg and Paris recognise that it would not be wise to strain French credit, and therefore the overtures for another loan were recently addressed to Berlin instead of Paris.

Russian bonds of 1904 made the highest record, 508 to-day.

PORT ARTHUR ATTACK IS SET FOR TUESDAY

Elaborate Japanese Preparations to Capture Two Forts.

RUSSIANS MAKING POWDER

It is Not Smokeless and is of Inferior Power—Garrison Also Using Old Chinese Shells.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 10.—Japanese who left Dalny yesterday say that the grand assault on Port Arthur, which, it was rumored, was planned by the Japanese for to-day, has been postponed until next Tuesday, and that a still further postponement is possible, as the Japanese intend to make every possible preparation before again hurling themselves upon the worn-out garrison.

Gen. Nogi's next attack will be directed chiefly against Rih-lung-Shan and Kikwan-Shan Forts, which are the strongest forts on the northeast flank. This information is derived from an unquestionable authority, who has just made a visit to the Japanese line around the forts and conversed with the Japanese officers, who allowed him to make personal observations.

The elevation of Rih-lung-Shan is 350 feet. Three hundred yards away on the same range is another hill so much lower that Rih-lung-Shan protects it from bombardment, except from Tiz-Shan and Kikwan-Shan. This hill is part of the section which the Chinese call Pali-Chwang, in the capture of which the Japanese lost many lives. Here the Japanese have strengthened two forts previously mentioned in the dispatches as having been established.

This position is the foundation for the Japanese preparations for the next assault. The work of constructing trenches is advancing rapidly, considering the fire which the diggers are compelled to endure.

Preparations for the attack on Kik-wan-Shan are proceeding in a similar fashion, although the Japanese in the nearest battery bearing directly on this fort are somewhat more distant than those at Pali-Chwang are from Rih-lung-Shan.

The range of hills crowned by Kik-wan-Shan and Rih-lung-Shan has irregular slopes, enabling a large force of Japanese to rest securely some distance up. The Japanese have tents pitched, and they are relieved every three days.

Food and ammunition and other supplies are brought to them at night only for the reason that the detachments are obliged to cross a level stretch before reaching a place of safety. Japanese trenches almost under the noses of the Russians are now partially constructed. The Russians endeavor constantly to level the incline, shelling the projections which afford shelter to the Japanese, who in turn bombard to prevent the Russians from succeeding.

There seems little doubt that the attack on Rih-lung-Shan and Kik-wan-Shan will be more trying than any the Russians have yet experienced. Everything which ingenuity can suggest is being done by the Japanese to render the attack successful, particular attention being paid to measures which will enable the Japanese to retain the forts in the event that they capture them.

Among the contrivances to be employed are numerous heavy portable shields, which have been constructed at Dalny, and which will be used to afford protection. Guns and shields will be moved as closely together as possible through the trenches before the assault is made, in order that they may be quickly hauled to the summit when the forts are taken.

Two full divisions are available in this vicinity, under Gens. Oshima and Tushya. The entire Japanese force now surrounding Port Arthur is estimated at 80,000 fighting men.

The Russians are now using exclusively powder evidently manufactured at Port Arthur. The smoke from the powder enables instant detection of the source of the fire. The explosive power of the powder is far less than that of smokeless powder, which the Russians seem to have exhausted. The Russian shells are frequently discovered to be old Chinese affairs, filed down to fit the Russian guns.

The Japanese plan for the coming attack does not, it is understood, include an assault on Itz-Shan. The nature of the ground there, the Japanese have found at severe cost, prevents a successful issue. Itz-Shan, however, will, it is said, be engaged by artillery from Louisa Bay and Shu-shi-Yen, for the purpose of attracting the fire of Itz-Shan away from the main attack.

The informant of The Associated Press quoted an Argentine Colonel who is with the Japanese as saying that the Russian defenses facing the Japanese have been made with a perfection undreamed of. The inner sides of the forts, however, are not so well constructed, and are supposedly far weaker.

With Rih-lung-Shan and Kik-wan-Shan captured, the Japanese will practically control an entrance along the railroad, and they contemplate attacking other forts from their weaker sides. The Japanese say they are prepared to lose heavily in taking Rih-lung-Shan and Kik-wan-Shan.

These forts, like a majority of the fifty-four forts surrounding Port Arthur, have six-inch steel shields loopholed with rapid-fire guns at intervals. These guns, according to The Associated Press information, and not land mines, have proved most disastrous to the Japanese. The shields are impervious to field artillery. Nothing but siege guns will make an impression on them.

The press correspondents with the Japanese are two miles from the front, but the hilly ground prevents them from seeing anything. The fighting since Aug. 31 has been unimportant. The Japanese bombard daily in the morning, when the sun assists them in aiming. The Russians reply in the afternoon, when the sun is in their favor.

The Japanese authority for the foregoing statement of conditions before Port Arthur says that its publication will not be harmful, as the Japanese preparations are fully evident to the Russians.

Correspondents John F. Bass and A. Diniwiddie arrived here to-day. They do not expect to return to the front. Bennet Burleigh is expected here soon.

A Chinese who left Port Arthur on the evening of Sept. 5 confirms the reports of heavy fighting from Aug. 27 to Aug. 31, when he and many others worked night and day burying the dead, which included Chinese, Russians, and Japanese indiscriminately. He says that during the fight four forts in the vicinity of Rih-lung-Shan were captured.

The Russians signaled the garrisons of these forts to retire, whereupon the Japanese occupied them, but they were compelled to retire later under a heavy bombardment. Previous reports said that the Japanese had only entered one fort during this attack.

The Novy Krai of Port Arthur, (official organ of Viceroy Alexieff,) in its issue of Sept. 3, a copy of which was received here to-day, says the Japanese have erected a hospital at Louisa Bay, and apparently confirms previous reports to the effect that a Japanese vessel was sunk while laying mines off Port Arthur Aug. 31.

The Japanese squadron on the horizon Sept. 1 consisted of the protected cruisers Matsushima, Itsukushima, Hashidate, and Akashi, the armored cruiser Adsuma, and twelve destroyers.

He says the Japanese losses at Port Arthur during the last few days were very heavy, exceeding 15,000, and that the Japanese killed or wounded at the battle of Liao-Yang exceeded 20,000.

A VISIT TO ADMIRAL TOGO.

He Speaks English Well—Has Stood the Strain of the War Excellently.

Published by Arrangement with The London Times.

ON THE MANSHU MARU, July 21.—We left our anchorage at 6 A. M. on the 16th. After steaming to the westward as far as the entrance to Talien-Wan Bay, about thirty-five miles from Port Arthur, we turned round, after being permitted only to view the hills surrounding the great Russian stronghold, and stood off to the eastward again, arriving at an anchorage at the Blonde Islands at 2 P. M.

Here we found the first-class battleships Mikasa (flagship) and Asahi, and two destroyers. About 2:30 P. M. steam launches came alongside and conveyed all the passengers from the Manshu Maru to the Mikasa. Arriving on board the flagship the representatives of the press were conducted to the wardroom, where a few minutes later Admiral Togo joined them amid great applause.

Speaking in Japanese, which was interpreted by Commander Takarabe, the Admiral said he felt honored by their visit, and it was a great pleasure to him to meet them.

Your correspondent, speaking on behalf of the representatives of the British press, expressed their appreciation of his kindness in receiving them on board his flagship, and their admiration and gratification at his success, and also their earnest hope that it would continue and that he would soon have the good fortune to bring the naval operations to a final and successful issue. Similar sentiments were expressed by the representatives of the American, Italian, German, and Japanese press, to all of which the Admiral replied in a few gracious words of thanks. Wine having been served, he proposed the health of his guests, which was responded to heartily by his staff and the officers present.

In return your correspondent proposed the toast of "Admiral Togo and his Gallant Fleet," which was responded to with enthusiasm and shouts of "Banzai" from the visitors.

The gathering in the wardroom then broke up, and the visitors were soon scattered throughout the ship, each anxious to see as much as possible of the vessel and her crew. All that can be said of the ship is that, as far as could be judged from the superficial inspection it was only possible to make, she is in as good fighting condition as she was on Feb. 6 last, the day she sailed from Sasebo to attack the Russians. It seems scarcely credible, but it is a fact that after six months' war service the two battleships we had a good opportunity of examining, at least externally, bore absolutely no marks of the enemy's shot. During the six months, in action several times, the Mikasa has been hit once; a ricocheting shell struck the under side of the main lower top, doing no more damage to it than marking the paint, but the splinters wounded a Lieutenant and five or six men, and it is said the Asahi has never been hit. This does not say much for the marksmanship of the Russians.

Your correspondent had the honor of a few minutes' conversation with the Admiral before leaving. Although Admiral Togo addressed the representatives in Japanese, (as there were many Japanese among them,) he speaks English well. There is little change in his appearance since the beginning of the war—perhaps a few more gray hairs—and he seems to stand the heavy strain of his great responsibilities very well indeed, much as he must necessarily feel it. All the officers and men seemed in good health and excellent spirits.

Talking with my old friend the fleet Surgeon, he said officers and men had stood the strain of the past six months very well, indeed; he attributed it to the frequent change and exhilarating excitement involved in going out to seek the enemy, which acted beneficially in effectually relieving the monotony of the six months' confinement to the ship. Indeed, the only time ships' companies were discontented was when their ships had to stay at the base when others went out to fight.

BANDITS ATTACK RUSSIANS.

Army of 15,000 Worrying Kuropatkin's Troops Below Mukden.

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—The Che-Foo correspondent of The Daily News reports from a bandit camp of Chunchuses near Shinoontun a concerted movement against the Russians on the part of five mounted bands of armed Manchurians to the total number of 15,000 under Gen. Dhzin, with seven Japanese advisers.

The bandits lately intercepted a Cossack convoy bringing 2,000 cattle and 500 horses from Mongolia. They ambushed two sotnias and killed nineteen Cossacks.

Six Cossacks were captured. One of them, an officer, was decapitated.

RUSSIA ADMITS WAR A FAILURE SO FAR

RAIN AIDING KUROPATKIN

Stops Japanese Advance—It Was Supposed in St. Petersburg Liao-Yang Was Impregnable.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sunday, Sept. 11, (1:20 A. M.)—The War Office is reluctantly disposed to admit that with the defeat of the Russians at Liao-Yang departed practically all hope of turning the tide of war this year.

Patiently and doggedly, in spite of successive reverses on land and sea, Gen. Kuropatkin's friends had pinned their faith in his assurances that when he accepted battle victory would crown the Russian arms, but now that his attempt to turn the scale has failed they face another indefinite period of waiting. Kuropatkin must retire, await reinforcements, and prepare for a new campaign next year.

But, disappointed as the Russians are, and discouraging as the situation is, no word is heard in favor of making peace.

"Russia will be victorious in the end—if not this year, then the next; if not the next, then the year after. The war must continue," is the unvarying sentiment.

Liao-Yang Defences Useless.

Military officers who are familiar with the skill, care, and arduous labor with which the positions on both sides of the Tai-Tse River were prepared at Liao-Yang consider that the historic battle there will make the flanking movement celebrated in military annals.

Redoubts, trenches, gunpits, entanglements, ditches, tunnels, and every method of protection known to military engineering skill proved useless against a single turning movement. Mobility and strategy throughout the campaign have vanquished fixed fortified positions, and flanking operations again and again have forced the abandonment of the most elaborate entrenchments, sometimes without the firing of a shot.

According to the best information from the front both armies are now tired, and are resting after the exhausting days of fighting and marching. The general opinion is that the Japanese will again push on as soon as the rains cease and the roads are dry. In the meantime Gen. Kuropatkin is enjoying the advantages of the railroad. He has sent north his baggage and the wounded, and doubtless a portion of his troops.

The prevailing idea is that Gen. Kuropatkin will not make a stand at Mukden if the Japanese come on again in earnest, but that he will retire at least to Tie Pass. Once he is through the pass the general impression in military circles is that the Japanese will not attempt further pursuit. Exceptional precautions have been taken to prevent the Japanese from cutting the communications below the pass.

No Winter Campaign Expected.

Not more than two months remain for military operations this Fall, and despite reports from Tokio of a Winter campaign, competent critics, who are familiar with the rigors of the Manchurian Winter, do not think that the Japanese will attempt it. Unless the unexpected happens the withdrawal of Kuropatkin's army above Tie Pass, they believe, will mark the end of the campaign for this year, the Russians wintering at Harbin with their rearguard at Tie Pass and the Japanese at Liao-Yang, with their advanced base at Mukden.

The General Staff has no news confirming the report of a Russian movement northward from Mukden, though it is frankly admitted that, whether Gen. Kuropatkin intends to remain at Mukden or not, the transport and baggage and a portion of the troops will be sent north.

The report that Kuropatkin himself has gone to Tie Pass is positively denied, as also is the current rumor that Major Gen. Orloff will be court-martialed for disobedience of orders.

Dispatch from Kuropatkin.

"No fighting has taken place in the sphere of operations and the enemy showed no perceptible activity Sept. 8 or Sept. 9. Heavy rains continue, which prevent the roads drying or being repaired."

Lieut. Gen. Sakharoff reports that the rains and the condition of the roads prevent the Japanese from advancing.

The Red Cross officers fear that an epidemic of disease will break out in both armies, the torrents of rain which fell after the ten days' battle having compelled the worn out and hungry troops to sleep without shelter in mire by the roadside. In any case it is believed to be certain that the hardships endured by the soldiers will result in a great increase in sickness.

Japanese Using Railroad.

MUKDEN, Sept. 8, (via Peking, Sept. 10.)—The rearguard of the Russian Army, which has been under fire for a week, has succeeded in bringing most of its transport and guns through here.

The Japanese are coming by the railroad. The Japanese force under Gen. Kuroki is now in the hills to the east of here.

"Marshal Oyama reports that our right army occupied Yen-Tai colliery and Yumentse Hill after the fighting of the 4th and 5th. Retreat of enemy's main force is believed to be retarded north of Hun River.

"Natives say enemy sent by train over 100,000 (?) killed and wounded. We buried over 3,000 Russians.

"Enemy burned magazines near station before evacuation. We captured, however, immense quantities of provisions and ammunition."

PARIS, Sept. 10.—The French Government authorities recently received advices from disinterested persons who have just returned from Manchuria.

One of them, though strongly favorable to Russia, reluctantly says that the Russian Army is much broken and demoralized.

It is added that the Siberian Railroad is working perfectly, six trains running over it daily. The officials here attach importance to these statements.

OVER 60,000 MEN FELL.

TIE PASS, Manchuria, Sept. 10.—The losses on both sides from Aug. 26 to Sept. 5 are estimated at from 60,000 to 70,000 killed or wounded.

The Japanese are experiencing great difficulty in bringing up supplies of ammunition.

The breakdown of Gen. Kuropatkin's strategy when he had withdrawn his main army to the right bank of the Tai-Tse River, after Gen. Kuroki had crossed the stream above Liao-Yang, is explained as follows:

The movement was beautifully planned. Kuropatkin intended to engage Kuroki, push a column up the right bank, and completely isolate him from Oku and Nodzu on the other side of the river. Only an accident upset this plan.

Gen. Stakelberg's corps, which was still on the left bank, at the extreme right, failed to stand up against the superior force of the Japanese. When Stakelberg reported that he was retreating it seemed to Kuropatkin that a portion of his army, which he had faced eastward, with the right resting on the river and the left unprotected, might be enveloped by the Japanese in pursuing Stakelberg. He therefore drew off and reformed his front, and the retreat from Yen-Tai began and continued the rest of Sept. 3, the Russians reaching Shakhe Sept. 4.

TOKIO, Sept. 10.—Gen. Kuroki reports that after last Monday's battle the Russians removed over 10,000 wounded to Mukden, and that the Russians left 3,000 in the vicinity of Liao-Yang.

MUKDEN, Sept. 10, 10:55 P. M.—Chinese reports, which are partly confirmed by information received by the Russians, are to the effect that the Japanese at Liao-Yang had a total of 300,000 men with 700 guns.

Their rear guard, it is alleged, consisted of 40,000 Koreans and 30,000 Chinese, but, as far as can be judged, only a portion of these participated in the fighting.

The troops on both sides are resting.

ODELL AND PLATT OFF FOR THE CONVENTION

Saratoga Now Scene of the Governorship Confabs.

STILL HIGGINS OR WOODRUFF

Supporters of Brooklyn Man Trying to Break Down Governor-Chairman's Power to Dictate.

The scene of ante-convention conferences among Republicans was transferred yesterday to Saratoga. The convention will meet there on Wednesday at noon. Governor-Chairman Odell took a noon train for Saratoga, and Senator Platt followed a few hours later.

Republican Headquarters at Saratoga will be at the United States Hotel, where the caucus to agree upon a candidate for Governor will be held either on Monday night or Tuesday afternoon. There was no change in the situation yesterday. The delegates will assemble in Saratoga with Lieut. Gov. Higgins and ex-Lieut. Gov. Woodruff the leading candidates, Higgins being the favorite of Gov. Odell and Woodruff the choice of the Platt followers. Judge Werner's boom is understood to have been exploded by himself, he preferring a nomination for Associate Judge of the Court of Appeals.

It was noticeable yesterday that there was an increase of confidence among the Woodruff men due to a belief, they explained, that something was likely to happen at Saratoga which would weaken Gov. Odell's influence over the organization. They are confident that if a poll of the delegates was taken if would be found that a majority favored Woodruff. It is said that this procedure will be urged, and that if Gov. Odell refuses to agree to it they will raise the cry of dictation and stir up more trouble than Mr. Woodruff stirred up two years ago over the proposed nomination of George R. Sheldon.

Until the Gubernatorial nomination is settled no definite decision on the Lieutenant Governorship is possible, for if a New York man be selected for Governor the nomination for second place would have to be given to an up-State man, according to all precedents, and vice versa.

If Woodruff should win, the second place may go to Mayor Erastus C. Knight of Buffalo, who has the support of Erie County for Governor. Should the nomination go to Mr. Higgins, or any other up-State man, then the nomination for Lieutenant Governor would lie between M. Linn Bruce, Senator Elsberg, Julius M. Mayer, and Job Hedges. Bruce and Hedges are also mentioned in connection with the nomination for Attorney General.

It is well understood that Otto Kelsey of Livingston is to be renominated for Controller and that Henry A. Van Alstyne is to be the nominee for State Engineer. The other places are still open. Secretary of State John F. O'Brien can have a renomination if he desires it, but his friends have declared that he does not want it.

The local delegations to the convention will leave for Saratoga Tuesday morning.

ADVANCE GUARD AT SARATOGA.

Woodruff the First Gubernatorial Candidate to Arrive.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Sept. 10.—The hotel corridors here assumed a lively appearance to-night, although the Republican State Convention is still four days away. Gov. Odell arrived at 7:45 o'clock with Col. Reuben L. Fox. Either on the same train with the Governor or here when he arrived were National Committeeman William L. Ward of Westchester, Chairman William Barnes, Jr., of Gloversville, Speaker Fred Nixon of the Assembly, and others.

United States Senator Thomas C. Platt and Mrs. Platt, arrived about 10 o'clock, and on the same train came former Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff and many others, including former Insurance Commissioner Louis F. Payne, Postmaster Cornelius Van Cott, former Representative Lemuel E. Quigg and Robert C. Morris of New York.

Neither Gov. Odell nor Senator Platt would say anything to-night regarding the Governorship. Mr. Woodruff also declined to talk.

MAINE REPUBLICANS SANGUINE.

State Committee Chairman Predicts Sweeping Victory.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 10.—The final day of the State election campaign in Maine was a busy one for the workers of the four parties. Chairman M. F. Simpson of the State Republican Committee gave out the following statement concerning the outlook for Monday's election:

"We will carry the State for Mr. Cobb, the Gubernatorial candidate, by a plurality of 10,000 to 18,000. We will carry every Congressional district in the State by pluralities which will equal those which we have had in previous years when the opposition has made a hard fight. We shall elect a majority of the legislative ticket throughout the State and at least twenty-seven of the thirty-one State Senators, with even chance for the other four."

Dr. Edgar L. Jones of Waterville, Chairman of the State Democratic State Committee, said:

"The Republican claim on the stump and in the press of 10,000 or more majority is an old trick of theirs of claiming more than they expect."

The Democratic State Committee affirms that any reduction of the Republican majority of 33,284 four years ago will be regarded as a Democratic victory.

FAIRBANKS AT HEADQUARTERS.

Vice Presidential Candidate Confers with Republican Managers.

Senator Fairbanks called at Republican National Headquarters yesterday and had a conference with Senator Scott and Treasurer Bliss. He and Senator Scott will be the guests of Gov. Murphy of New Jersey over Sunday at Elberon.

Senators Fairbanks and Scott will be the speakers at the noonday meeting at 596 Broadway Monday. Senator Fairbanks will also be the orator at the celebration of the semi-centennial of the birth of the Republican Party at Saratoga on Wednesday night.

Senator Proctor of Vermont was in the city yesterday and received the congratulations of the Republican managers on the result of the election in his State.

It was announced yesterday that Senator Dillingham of Vermont would speak at Schoharie, N. Y., on Sept. 15. He will also speak with Senator Fairbanks at Dover and Wilmington, Del., on Sept. 19.

JERSEY POPULISTS TURBULENT.

Nominate Honnicker for Governor and Indorse Watson.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 10.—After a turbulent session to-day the delegates to the People's Democratic Party Convention nominated George A. Honnicker of Jersey City for Governor and indorsed Thomas E. Watson and Thomas Tibbetts and the Populist platform.

At one time the meeting almost broke up in a riot. The trouble was caused by Irving A. Salmon of Morris County and William Pintard of Red Bank, who tried to prevent a bolt to Populism. The names of Jackson, Bryan, and Hearst were cheered. The platform says the managers of the St. Louis Convention deceived their followers. It declares for equal taxation, public ownership, and the election of United States Senators by the people.

APPROVES PARKER'S STAND.

Senator McCreary Says It Is Not Necessary for Him to Stump.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—Senator McCreary of Kentucky was a caller at the headquarters of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee to-day, and he and Chairman Cowherd had a long conference over the prospect of carrying the districts needed to give the Democrats a majority in the House. Senator McCreary has spent the Summer in the West, deferring his visit to the East until late in the campaign. He says that he has found in the South and West an undivided desire on the part of Democrats to get back on the path to power, and believes there is a good prospect of electing Judge Parker.

"The important feature of this campaign, as I see it," he said, "is that our candidate has constantly grown in the estimation of the people. The issues for which he stands appear to commend themselves to the sober judgment of the people.

"I think it would have been unwise had Judge Parker conducted himself any differently in relation to making speeches. In the case of a man who has been out in campaigns many times, it is quite natural that he should jump into the arena and take a part of activity, but in the case of Judge Parker there was a very natural modesty in relation to his action, and I think the people think better of him for it. He represents issues that are well-known to every one of the country. It is not necessary for him to go among the people to explain them."

SENATOR BAILEY MISQUOTED.

Did Not Admit That Roosevelt Would Be Elected.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 10.—Garbled reports have been sent to Northern newspapers of a speech made by United States Senator Bailey at Brownwood to the effect that he admitted Roosevelt would be elected. The stenographer's notes show that he said:

"I believe the promise of Democratic success is good in this election, but I want to leave with you this prediction, that though we do fall and Roosevelt is elected he will so disgust the thinking people of this country that four years from now it will hardly be a contest for Democratic success. I believe we are going to win this time."

CALLERS AT SAGAMORE HILL.

Two Publishers See the President on Private Business.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., Sept. 10.—President Roosevelt had only two callers to-day, both of whom were at Sagamore Hill this evening. They were Austin B. Fletcher and Orison Sweet Marden, publishers. Their visit was of a personal nature about which neither cared to talk. Mr. Fletcher only a day or two ago returned to New York from Massachusetts. He says that Massachusetts will give Roosevelt and Fairbanks a heavy plurality.

President Roosevelt to-day confirmed the court-martial sentence of dismissal from the service of the United States Army in the cases of First Lieut. Harry J. Collins, Twenty-eighth Infantry; Second Lieut. William White, Thirteenth Infantry, and Second Lieut. Charles F. Smith, Thirteenth Infantry.

FIREMEN RACED TO SAVE LIFE.

Laddermen Got There First and Rescued Woman and Two Children.

Racing to the fourth floor of a burning tenement at 771 Tenth Avenue early yesterday morning to save a woman and two little children, Laddermen Joyce and Harkey of Truck 4 got there ahead of Firemen Campbell and Heenan of Engine 54, who had run up through an adjoining building.

The men of Truck 4 gained the top of the thirty-five-foot ladder, which was yet four feet below the window where were the woman and the children. The laddermen told her to drop the children first and then jump into their arms. About this time the other firemen appeared at the adjoining window four feet away, from which they intended to swing themselves across. The woman's coolness helped the rescuers, for she followed their directions as Ladderman Joyce stood on the topmost rung with Harkey hugging his legs. She threw the children and then jumped.

The fire is believed to have started in the rooms of the Frank Goodman Association on the first floor and "mushroomed" in the roof. It was not discovered until Mrs. Thomas Starrs, on the top floor, was awakened by the crackling of the flames outside her door. Twelve families occupied the house, and the most of them got down by the fire escapes. The woman rescued by the laddermen is Mrs. Patrick Devlin. The children were her two boys, aged three and five.

GIANT RUSSIAN ON RAMPAGE.

Puts Fist Through Window—Then Fights Seven Policemen.

Henry Zurlob, thirty-five years old, of 153 Chrystie Street, a Russian of giant stature, drove his fist through the plate-glass window of the store at 217 Chrystie Street last night, and, going to 137 East Houston Street, created such a disturbance that Capt. Flood of the Eldridge Street Station sent out six policemen.

Meanwhile Policeman Murphy had grappled with him, and Zurleb took a hasty trip down the front steps, landing on the back of his head. He got up and came back for more. Murphy was having a hard fight when the six other policemen came along. It took the combined strength of the seven men to get Zurlob to the station.

BOY ASKS RESCUERS TO HURRY.

They Were Chopping Away Floor of Elevator That Held His Foot.

While the flooring of the elevator which had crushed his foot was being chopped away yesterday, Thomas Shepard, ten years old, of 421 West Sixteenth Street, urged the men to hurry because the pain was increasing. Then he directed them how to cut so as not to hurt him so much.

The little fellow was playing around a freight elevator in a house next door, when the lift came down, catching his left foot. It was found impossible to get his foot out without cutting away the flooring of the car. An ambulance surgeon from the New York Hospital, who treated him, said Thomas was one of the bravest boys he had ever attended.

Suffolk Republicans Choose Delegates.

BABYLON, L. I., Sept. 10.—The delegates and alternates elected to the Republican State Convention from this Assembly District to-day are: Delegates—Ex-Sheriff Benjamin F. Wood, Elliott J. Smith, C. Melville Smith, and Emmatt W. Hawkins. Delegate-at-Large—Senator William McKinney. Alternates—William Hirsch, Harry P. Hoff, George L. Thompson, Charles E. Sheppard. Orlando Hubbs was nominated for the Assembly.

Sereno E. Payne for Congressman.

Special to The New York Times.

GENEVA, N. Y., Sept. 10.—The Republican Convention for the Thirty-first Congressional District, comprising Cayuga, Wayne, Ontario, and Yates Counties, held here to-day, unanimously nominated Sereno E. Payne of Auburn for Congressman from this district. Resolutions were passed indorsing the Federal and State administrations.

March Association Has Outing.

More than 2,000 members of the J. E. March Association of the Sixth Assembly District attended the annual outing at Greenwood Lake yesterday. Before the members left in the morning, Port Warden James E. March, Republican leader of the district, received a handsome solid silver loving cup.

FAIRBANKS EMPHASIZES PROTECTION AS ISSUE

Vice Presidential Candidate Speaks in Jersey City.

NEAR A TOMBSTONE YARD

His Reference to McKinley as the Peer of Lincoln and Washington Meets with Great Applause.

Charles W. Fairbanks, United States Senator from Indiana and Republican candidate for Vice President, spoke in Jersey City last night under the auspices of the Hudson County Republican Committee in Columbia Hall, at Ocean and Cator Avenues, in the Greenville section, the Republican stronghold of the city.

On the block adjoining the meeting hall there is a tombstone establishment, and as the parade, headed by the Senator, hove in sight, a large and varied assortment of these cheerful hoodoos loomed up under the glare of the redfire. Everybody in the parade saw them, and the Republican statesmen in the first coach turned their heads the other way.

But even the proximity of the graveyard annex did not dampen the enthusiasm of the meeting. Senator Fairbanks received a rousing reception as he entered the hall, accompanied by Gov. Murphy and Senators Scott, Dryden, and Kean and Col. Samuel D. Robinson, Secretary of State.

While waiting for Senator Fairbanks to arrive the audience was regaled with a campaign song entitled "We will send back our Teddy again." It was sung to the plaintive tune of "Bring back my bonnie to me" by a young man who admitted that he was responsible for both the words and music. Here is some of it:

We'll hear of great crimes we've committed,
How dreadfully wicked Ted is;
While Ted calmly sits in the White House,
Just strictly attending to "biz."

We all love our strenuous Teddy,
Don't believe in race suicide —
At election, we'll show him his children,
The millions we'll point to with pride.

We all will work hard for our Teddy —
And Fairbanks; we'll work for him too;
We'll vote for them both in November —
I will, with much pleasure;—so'll you.

Senator Dryden was introduced as the presiding officer. Among other things he said the only thing on which Democrats seemed to be united was the tariff question, and then introduced Senator Fairbanks.

Senator Fairbanks began by declaring that Democratic policies had played havoc with American industry, and that the Republican policy of protection had fostered National prosperity. There was great applause when he referred to the late President McKinley as the peer of Washington and Lincoln. He said, in part:

"There is some division in the Democratic Party with respect to the gold standard, but there is entire unanimity of opinion with respect to protection. Protection is denounced as robbery, without a dissenting voice.

"The Republican protective system and the Republican administration have brought the country a measure of prosperity never hitherto enjoyed. The people must decide between the present administration and Republican policies and Democratic administration and Democratic policies. The great question is to be settled at the ballot box.

"The public mind cannot be diverted from the Democratic record by intemperate attacks upon the President. What set of the President would you record if you could? What one has been in derogation of the National interest or in contravention of the National honor? The President has been loyal to his high trust and has met every responsibility which has rested upon him in a manner to promote prosperity among the people, peace and good order, and maintain unimpaired our prestige among the nations of the world.

"The violent and groundless personal campaign in which the opposition indulges will not serve to obscure these marked achievements of Republican Administration. The Republican Party stands upon a record unequaled by the Democratic Party.

"The opposition may indulge in intemperate criticism, but they cannot reverse the splendid record of the last three years, which impeaches their every profession of distrust. They may assail the President, if they will. His complete vindication is found in ardent deeds well done.

"Let us continue to uphold a sound protective system, revising the schedules whenever necessary in the public interest, but revising them to promote and not to defeat the protective policy. Let us inflexibly maintain the gold standard which has been established through the wisdom and courage of the Republican Party, and let us sustain the eminently successful Administration of Theodore Roosevelt."

Senator Fairbanks told funny stories along with his political arguments. He told one which set the audience roaring with laughter, and somebody yelled for another.

"All right," said he, "I will tell you another."

"Our Democratic friends have criticised—" but Senator Fairbanks stopped as he saw the reporters taking notes. Then he whispered something to Senator Dryden, who asked the newspaper men not to take down what the Senator was about to say. They all complied, but nevertheless Senator Fairbanks seemed to think that this was not a good time to tell that particular story and branched out on the tariff question.

"I know the Vice Presidential nominee of the Democratic Party," he said. "I know him well and very favorably. He is a very nice old gentleman and exceedingly well liked in the State where he lives, so well liked in fact that the Democrats hope to carry West Virginia through him."

The last speaker was Walter Chandler, a New York lawyer, who said his heart was with the Democratic Party, but his head with the Republicans.

REOPENS OLD "SUICIDE" CASE.

Criminologist Clemens Convinces Coroner That Woman Was Murdered.

Special to The New York Times.

FREEPORT, L. I., Sept. 10.—Justice of the Peace A. B. Wallace, also the acting Coroner, has never been satisfied that the woman who was found dead near the Greenfield Cemetery last April with a bottle of carbolic acid by her side, and who was buried under the name of Martha Laimbeer after an anonymous letter inclosing $100 for funeral expenses had been received, was a suicide, and another inquest will be held next Friday. District Attorney Niemann, who was convinced of the suicide theory, did not learn of this to-day, having gone to Esopus to visit Judge Parker.

Judge Wallace to-day made public parts of a letter from William M. Clemens, a criminologist, who is a nephew of Mark Twain, and who has studied the case closely. He says that the woman was murdered in her own home and the body carried into the woods. Judge Wallace says he knows that the slayer of the woman lives in Brooklyn. The man, he says, has light complexion, with blue eyes and brown hair.

This man, he says, has been kept under a certain surveillance, and on the days when the crime was engaging public attention, stealthily emerged from his home and bought every newspaper extra that was sold in the street.

Harlem Assault Victim May Die.

Henry Yupiter, thirty-six years old, of 57 East One Hundredth Street, who was taken to the Harlem Hospital on Friday morning with a fractured skull, is still unconscious, and according to the physicians will probably die. The Coroner has been notified, and if the patient regains consciousness an ante-mortem statement will be taken. Carmina Avatelo, proprietor of an ice cream parlor at 2,407 First Avenue, was held in the Harlem Court yesterday in $1,000 bail for examination to-morrow, charged with assaulting Yupiter.

A Safe 8½% Investment.

The President of a Western National Bank, who is in New York for a short time, invites calls or communications from conservative investors to whom a sound investment in a prosperous financial institution yielding a handsome return and having a promising future will be attractive. To distribute the interests somewhat generally throughout the East is desirable, and applications for small amounts will therefore be welcomed.

About 2-3 of the cash capital has already been subscribed by prominent interests in N.Y. and vicinity.

This offer must not be compared with financial propositions such as are usually offered to the general public, and it will prove to your interest to send for further particulars.
The character and standing of the institution and its sponsors can be shown to be beyond question. Address

PARKER NOT ANXIOUS TO COME TO NEW YORK

SATISFIED WITH COMMITTEES

Holds Conference with Sheehan, Rodie, and Cord Meyer—Other Influential Visitors Also Received.

Special to The New York Times.

ESOPUS, N. Y., Sept. 10.—Judge Parker is not any nearer establishing personal campaign headquarters in New York City than he was before the agitation for such a change began. At the present at least, it is his earnest conviction that he should continue to remain at Rosemount and do his share of campaign work, as he has been carrying it on since he became Presidential nominee.

William F. Sheehan, Chairman Cord Meyer of the State Committee, and William S. Rodie are with the Judge to-night. Whether the three members of the Parker advisory board are arguing against the candidate's desire to remain here is uncertain. None of them will so admit. Indeed, it is intimated that the visit of Messrs. Rodie and Meyer was unexpected by either Judge Parker or Mr. Sheehan.

Arthur McCausland, Judge Parker's private secretary, gave out the following statement this morning:

"The stories to the effect that Judge Parker is to go to New York to take personal charge of the canvass or to assist the committees in its conduct or that he is dissatisfied with the work of either the National or State Committee are untrue. He is gratified with the efforts of both the committees. He believes the members of all of them are working intelligently, harmoniously, and effectively, and that they are wise in not telling about it. The Judge has thought of going to New York for a day or two, after the publication of his letter of acceptance, but he may not even do that."

It has been recalled that the most influential members of the Republican Party importuned William McKinley in 1896 to take the stump, and that Mark Hanna was as insistent as anybody, but the candidate stood flatly against the proposition, and not only won Hanna to his side, but all the others.

Many of Judge Parker's visitors to-day advised the candidate to go on a speaking trip. They said his presence is needed in the doubtful States, where rousing, enthusiastic meetings could be held. Judge Parker discussed the questions with Col. Daniel S. Lamont, Herman Ridder, and ex-Representative C. A. Pugsley of Peekskill, N. Y., who were some of his important political callers.

GOOD REPORTS FROM UP STATE.

Harrison Returns After Tour of Organizing Democrats.

Representative Francis Burton Harrison, the chief aid of William S. Rodie of the Democratic State Executive Committee in the work of organization up State, returned yesterday from a ten days' trip. Mr. Harrison reports that the work is progressing rapidly and indicates a heavy Parker and Davis vote.

Among the visitors at headquarters yesterday was Senator George E. Green of Binghamton, a Republican, who called to see Chairman Meyer. His visit created something of a sensation at first, but the Senator said he had only called to see about getting Democratic speakers for the Broome County Fair.

ALL HARMONY IN NASSAU.

Delegates Chosen to Various Democratic Conventions.

MINEOLA, L. I., Sept. 10.—August Belmont, with ex-Senator James Norton of Oyster Bay and Eugene P. Parsons of Hempstead, were delegates to the District Democratic Convention held to-day to elect delegates to the State and other conventions. Instead of the fight that had been expected from the rumors of dissatisfaction in the party for the past six months, all was harmony. A resolution passed by the convention indorsed Townsend Scudder for a place on the State ticket.

Delegate at Large to Senatorial Convention—Josiah Pearsall of North Hempstead.

Delegates to State Convention—Oyster Bay, James Norton and James H. Cocks; Hempstead, John H. Carl and Girdell V. Brower; North Hempstead, Charles Hahn and Frank P. Krug; Fifth Ward of the Borough of Queens, Philip T. Cronin and John P. Croning.

Delegate at Large to the Congressional Convention—Philip T. Cronin of the Fifth Ward.

Delegates to Congressional Convention—Oyster Bay, William H. Jones and Edwin M. Franklin; Hempstead, W. H. S. Smith and William H. Patterson; North Hempstead, Edwin O'Connor and Thomas Willets; Fifth Ward, Joseph P. Powers and Edwin J. Healy.

Working for Parker at Morristown.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., Sept. 10.—A Parker and Davis banner was raised to-night by the Morristown Democratic Club, which is one of the strongest organizations in New Jersey. Speeches were made by former Congressman De Witt C. Flanagan of this city and William Hepburn Russell of New York. Morris County, it is believed, the Democrats will capture by a large majority, owing to the disaffection in the Republican machine.

Parker Banner Swung from Waldorf.

For the first time since the opening of the Waldorf-Astoria, the management has consented to the placing of a political banner in front of the hotel. It swings across from the Thirty-fourth Street side of the building to Democratic National Headquarters and bears pictures of Parker and Davis.

WOMAN ACCUSES LAWYER.

Alleges That Crummey Converted $5,675 to His Own Use.

Safford A. Crummey, a lawyer at 30 Broad Street, was arrested yesterday on an order issued by Justice Clarke of the Supreme Court in an action brought by Mrs. Soledad Parken, who is said to be the widow of a prominent politician in Florida, to recover $5,675, which amount Mrs. Parken alleges he converted to his own use. Crummey gave bail, which was fixed at $5,000.

The ulaintiff alleges that on Nov. 24, 1902, she gave the defendant five United States registered 4 per cent. bonds, becoming due in 1907, to be sold by him, and that he agreed immediately to procure for her other bonds which would pay her a larger income. Her bonds were sold prior to July, 1903, by him for $5,475, she says, and he also received $200 interest upon them.

The defendant, it is alleged, informed her that he had purchased two Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad adjustment 4 per cent. bonds, and one Oregon Short Line collateral trust and participating bond, the former for $1,825 and the latter for $931.25. He afterward told her he had purchased two New York Gas, Electric Light, Heat, and Power Company's 4 per cent. bonds for $1,882.50, leaving a balance in his hands of $1,036.35. He failed to deliver the bonds to her, she alleges, or the cash left in his hands, and she charges him with never having made any such purchases.

SAYS SHE WAS HYPNOTIZED.

New York Girl Accuses Companion of Robbing Her in St. Louis.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 10.—Miss Helen Moore of New York is the name given by a young woman who was the cause of endless excitement at Broadway and Pine Street this morning. The excitement ended in a trip to the Chestnut Street Station, where charges of larceny were preferred by the young woman against Frank M. Silvey of 408 Olive Street.

According to the statement obtained by the police, the couple came here from New York. Miss Moore claims that Silvey hypnotized her in New York, brought her here under his influence, and left her Thursday, after taking her watch and chain from her trunk.

She played detective on her own account and met Silvey to-day. She says he was wearing her watch and chain, and she grabbed them. A crowd surrounded the struggling pair. Miss Moore said that Silvey lives at 21 Stuyvesant Place, New York, and that he was employed by a New York magazine.

IROQUOIS WITNESS GONE.

Man Who Operated Spot Light on Fatal Day Has Disappeared.

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—William F. McMullen, who was operator of the spot light at the Iroquois Theatre at the time of the disaster, Dec. 30, has disappeared. Efforts of the State Attorney's detectives and those of O. C. Wierum of New York, attorney for New York theatrical managers, have failed to reveal his whereabouts.

Assistant State Attorney Barnes, at the opening of the September Term of the Criminal Court, began the preliminary arrangements to put Will G. Davis, manager of the theatre; Thomas J. Noonan, Assistant Business Manager, and Edward Cummings, the stage carpenter, on trial on a charge of manslaughter. It was then learned that McMullen was not to be found.

TURNS DOWN LEADER KEAHON.

Sergeant Refuses to Lock Up Motorman at Tammanyite's Request.

Patrick H. Keahon, Tammany leader of the Seventh Assembly District, of 344 West Fifteenth Street, with his wife and a maid, were at Twenty-third Street and Tenth Avenue yesterday afternoon waiting for a cross-town car. When the Tammany leader got on the car he noticed that the maid was missing. He asked the motorman to stop the car, but the latter refused.

Mr. Keahon alleged that the motorman insulted him all the way to the ferry, where he called a policeman and asked that the motorman be arrested. The motorman was taken to the West Twentieth Street Station. The Sergeant refused to lock him up, however, saying that the Tammany leader should go to court and get a warrant. Mr. Keahon said he would get the warrant when he returned from Nyack, where he was going to spend a few days.

BUTCHERS FORM NEW UNION.

Denounce President Donnelly and Leaders of Recent Strikes.

Delegates of the local Meat Cutters and Butchers' Union, who seceded from the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butchers' Workmen of America, met last night at 456 West Fortieth Street and formed a National organization after bitterly condemning President Donnelly of the Amalgamated and the other officers for the late strike.

A long public letter to this end was adopted and signed by John Kennedy, the President, and G. L. Hydrick, the Secretary, of the new body. In this manifesto it was said that the New York strikers had sent a man to Chicago to report on the conditions. The second strike, it was declared, was without reason or justice. Strikes are upheld in this manifesto, but the hope is expressed that if the new body shall find it necessary to embark in another one, the men will "go out under sane and sober leaders." The new body will be known as the Brotherhood of Butchers' Workmen.

CAR WRECKS AMBULANCE.

Driver's and Policeman's Hurts Dressed by Doctor, Also Injured.

As an ambulance of the Bushwick Central Hospital, Brooklyn, was passing along Reid Avenue to answer a call at 509 Macon Street last evening, it was run down, upset, and badly wrecked by a Reid Avenue car. The ambulance was driven by Frederick Sands of 1,418 Fulton Street and in it were Surgeon Huyser and Policeman Meyer of the Ralph Avenue Station. All were thrown out. The driver was the worst injured; two of his ribs were broken. Both of the others, however, were cut and bruised.

Dr. Huyser dressed Sands's hurts and sent him to the hospital; attended to the policeman, whose wrist was sprained, and sent him to the station house, and then went to the hospital to have his own hurts attended to.

SEARCHED FOR GAS WITH CANDLE.

Explosion Followed in Which Mrs. Lawrence Was Severely Burned.

Mrs. Mary Lawrence, who keeps a boarding house at 368 West Twenty-ninth Street, smelled gas coming from a closet in a vacant room in her house late yesterday afternoon. She lighted a candle and started to investigate.

An explosion followed, in which Mrs. Lawrence was severely burned about the head and arms. She would probably have burned to death had not Thomas Cummings, a boarder, who heard her screams, wrapped her in a blanket in time to smother the flames. The Fire Department was called out and quickly extinguished a small blaze in the room where the explosion occurred.

Minister's Son Shoots Self at Play.

EAST MORICHES, L. I., Sept. 10.—Launcelotte Stafford, the twelve-year-old son of the Rev. H. W. R. Stafford of the Episcopal Church in Centre Moriches, accidentally shot himself while playing with a revolver to-day. The bullet entered his right side, below the ribs, causing a dangerous wound.

Arrest Motorman for Homicide.

Daniel O'Neill of 2,195 Eighth Avenue, a motorman, was arrested last night and taken to the West One Hundredth Street Station. He is said to be the motorman of the south-bound Columbus Avenue car that knocked down Paul Winter, sixty-five years old, a retired butcher, of 947 Columbus Avenue at One Hundred and Sixth Street and Columbus Avenue Friday morning last and died that night in the J. Hood Wright Hospital.

TOBY, M. P., TELLS HOW FREE TRADE IS "RUINING" BRITAIN

Blue Book Figures Fatal to Chamberlain's Arguments—Redmond in the Roles of Politician and Landlord—Rosebery as the "Lonely Furrow."

By HENRY W. LUCY.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—The Blue Books in their courses fight against Chamberlain. There is something grimly humorous in the way in which the various departments, prominently the Board of Trade, from time to time issue tables of statistics fatal to protectionist theories. They are the more effective because of their placidity, their innocent appearance of knowing nothing about the controversy that has riven the Unionist ranks.

Latest in the accumulated list of evidence is a Blue Book comparatively small, not exceeding 300 pages, bearing the unimpassioned title, "Statistical Abstract of the United Kingdom." It purports to give the results of material national progress through the last fifteen years. It is a long and intricate story, but is here and there dashed off in figures of lurid significance. For example, there is the stupendous fact that within the period named, during which, as we have been assured at Welbeck and elsewhere, a country undermined and honeycombed with the curse of free trade is with increased rapidity going to the dogs, the national revenue has increased from 89 millions to 141 millions.

The fact standing alone would point to a condition of growing prosperity, taxation at its lowest point, food and drink at their cheapest. Unhappily throughout this period, through which with brief interval the country has had its affairs administered by a Unionist Government, expenditure has gone up by leaps and bounds far exceeding the stride of revenue. As compared with the year 1889, when Lord Salisbury had been only three years in office, and the expenditure stood at 86 millions, in 1903 it had run up to 147 millions.

NATIONAL DEBT'S BIG INCREASE.

Nor is that the full story of the revolutionary change created. Fifteen years ago the national debt was 688½ millions. In accordance with the principles of sound finance, insisted upon in all circumstances by Mr. Gladstone, whose example was rigidly followed by Conservative Chancellors of the Exchequers, prominently including Sir Stafford Northcote and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, national indebtedness steadily fell to 628 millions. Then came the war in South Africa, and last year the national debt had romped up to the long unfamiliar figure of 762 millions.

Among pages of the Blue Book more directly bearing on the controverted points of National prosperity or decadence under existing fiscal arrangements are those containing charts illustrating the statistics of trade, employment, and conditions of labor in the United Kingdom. These were prepared by the Board of Trade for the St. Louis Exposition, and are here presented in reduced form. Whether by accident or design, one goes beyond the period avowedly under review, showing at a glance how free trade, at work for half a century, has affected the domestic condition of the workingman.

A couple of diagrams show that between 1850 and 1900 the wages of the agricultural laborer have increased 35 per cent., an equal diminution in the price of food and drink being recorded. Whence by the simple process of putting two and two together it would appear that under the influence of free trade the agricultural laborer has benefited to the extent of 70 per cent. Steadily growing prosperity in upper strata of British citizens is demonstrated by the fact that in the course of the last fifteen years the produce of each added penny on the income tax has risen from £2,238,130 to £2,535,862.

One can imagine Mr. Balfour, in the serenity of the recess, chuckling over this retort courteous which—again whether by accident or design—came out promptly on Mr. Chamberlain's speech at Welbeck specially directed toward the conversion of the agricultural laborer to Protectionist principles. Up to the end of the session, in spite of constant pressure, the Prime Minister maintained his non-committal attitude with respect to Mr. Chamberlain's programme. It was noted that in the very last hours of the session, when nothing could avert safe entry to the haven of the recess, he plucked up courage to the point of declining to accede to Mr. Chamberlain's demand for the summoning of a colonial conference in London to discuss the whole question of preferential tariffs.

Students of his tactics are divided into two camps. One camp insists that he is at heart a Protectionist and is in secret alliance with Mr. Chamberlain. The other believes that he is playing his own game, which takes the historical form of giving an adversary rope enough, with quiet assurance of final happening.

These are conjectures, probably influenced by personal predilection and prejudice. What is certain is that in the course of a succession of set speeches and a multitude of answers to questions the Premier has never strayed a step from the shelter of that blessed word retaliation. When the general election comes he will have to be more explicit. Meanwhile he has with unfailing adroitness kept the pathway clear so that on its termination he may take whichever turning seems at the moment the more propitious.

WILLIAM O'BRIEN'S ELECTION.

William O'Brien's uncontested return for Cork promises sport in whatever may be in the way of a Parliamentary session next year. He evidently means business, or would not otherwise run the risk of being charged with childish behavior in throwing up his seat in a pettish moment and clambering back into it after a few months' sulking.

We shall next session see an anti-Redmond combination small in number but mighty in power. Between them, Tim Healy and William O'Brien are more than a match for John Redmond and the motley crew of nonentities who, mindful of the amenities of the weekly pay sheet, answer to the crack of the whip. Long parted in that bitter animosity born in the days of Parnell's fall and his obsequies in Committee Room No. 15, the ancient foemen have come together, drawn by the patriotic design of making in the interests of the tenant the most out of the latest Land act.

Mr. Redmond, feeling that it is the duty of an Irish Nationalist Member to oppose, even when the object of assault is a beneficent settlement upon which he at one time insisted, has done his best to make the act unworkable. Only in one instance has he shown complacent attitude. That was when he availed himself of its provisions to dispose of his small estate to his tenants at the rate of twenty-four years' purchase. When, following him in debate where he had been denouncing Irish landlords who demanded more than eighteen years' purchase, Tim Healy blurted out this fact, the ground was cut from under the Irish leader's feet. Even in Ireland, where strange things sometimes happen, the contrast between the Parliamentary demagogue who insisted on a maximum price of eighteen years' purchase and the shrewd landlord who exacted twenty-four years' was too striking to be ignored.

In the next, the final session of the present Parliament, Tim Healy and William O'Brien will count as two only. If they determine to give battle all along the line, they will come back to Westminster with a following that will establish them in their true position as captains of the Parliamentary Party.

ROSEBERY'S PERSONAL INFLUENCE

Even in his retirement Lord Rosebery displays the quality of personal influence he shares with the memories of Disraeli and Gladstone and the active life of Mr. Chamberlain. His denunciation of the Anglo-French Convention, the one ewe lamb of Mr. Balfour's first administration, is matter of keen discussion in the capitals of Europe. At home it looms scarcely so large, the British public being disposed to welcome any advance in the direction of drawing closer the bonds of amity with France. It is, moreover, recognized as quaintly characteristic of Lord Rosebery that his protest is belated.

It is true that when the matter came before the House of Lords he made casual protest. But if things are as black as he paints them, it was obviously his duty to make persistent effort at arresting the progress of the convention through the stages of Parliamentary acquiescence. What is of closer interest at home is the attitude the ex-Liberal Premier is likely to assume when the general election imposes on the Liberal Party the task of forming an administration.

I was much struck with the persistent inquiries under this head made by a prominent American man of affairs, who, after some weeks' sojourn in London, had gone home to take his part in the Presidential campaign. By a course of severe cross-examination he extracted from me the personal opinion, given for what it is worth, that, while in the next Liberal administration under whatsoever Premier there will be a strong section of Roseberyites, the head and founder of the clan will himself coldly stand aside, pursuing the labor self-allotted in his lonely furrow.

"Very well," said this shrewd observer, looking on British affairs with the advantage of the perspective of the Atlantic, "if that is so Rosebery is played out. His talk about the 'lonely furrow' reminds me of a chant I used to hear as a child, when before the war I lived way down in Virginny. It goes like this:

I tolls in de furrer
For to make ma bread,
When de sun lak a blistah
In de sky oberhead.
En Ah won't git res'
Till de worl' turn roun'
En Gabrel mak a fluttah
En de trumpet soun'.

"If Rosebery does not stir himself in the floodtide of Liberalism that will sweep the country at the next election, he 'won't git res.,' at least not in Downing Street, till 'Gabrel make a fluttah en de trumpet soun'.' I'm not going to quote Shakespeare with his reference to the tide in the affairs of all men. But, obviously, even a man of supreme capacity like Rosebery can't go on past middle age irresolutely letting opportunities slide by."

VATICAN ANSWERS COMBES.

ROME, Sept. 10.—Concerning the speech made Sept. 4 at Auxerre by M. Combes, the French Premier, the Osservatore Romano, the organ of the Vatican, says that it has been authorized to declare that the Holy See has never refused to consider propositions by the French Government regarding the appointment of Bishops, even when the Holy See has not been informed privately of such propositions, as is customary.

The propositions of the present French Cabinet, the paper says, were never rejected because the candidates were adherents of the republic, the reasons for such rejections always having been canonical, and therefore permitted by the Concordat. The French Government was always notified of the reasons for such rejections, although the Pope was not obliged to so notify it. The Holy See had always admitted that the obligatory character of the Concordat should be scrupulously observed, but it considered it quite distinct from the organic articles.

Finally, the paper says, the Holy See never forwarded to France any statement regarding the separation of Church and State, nor any threat concerning the French protectorate over Catholics in the Far East.

In the speech referred to by the Osservatore Romano, Premier Combes said that regarding the future he would continue to carry out his policy for national sovereignty and the complete laicization of society. The religious power had openly torn up the Concordat, and it was not his intention to try and mend it. The risk of France losing her position as the protector of Eastern Catholics, the Premier said, was a wholly insufficient motive for foregoing the separation of Church and State.

SHIP'S ESCAPE FROM ICEBERG.

Abandoned Anchor and 150 Fathoms of Chain Off Newfoundland.

ST. JOHN'S N. F., Sept. 10.—The Gloucester schooner Squanto, which has arrived here from the Northern Banks, reports that she had a narrow escape from being overwhelmed by an iceberg during a storm and had to cut her cable and abandon her anchor with 150 fathoms of chain to avoid the loss of the ship and crew.

The Canadian schooner Conquest has also arrived here in a crippled condition owing to the recent storm.

She bears no tidings of the unknown French barkentine which was reported Sept. 1 by the schooner Coleraine as being 170 miles off Cape Race with only three men left out of a crew of thirty-four, the others having been lost while fishing with their dories. It is feared here that the French vessel has foundered.

TURKISH TROOPS MUTINY.

Situation in Old Servia Reported to be Critical.

VIENNA, Sept. 10.—The Neues Tageblatt's Belgrave correspondent says that reports from Mitrobitsa and Prizren, Albania, are to the effect that a mutiny has broken out among the Turkish troops marching against the Albanians.

Prince Herbert Bismarck Ill.

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—Contradictory reports about the health of Prince Herbert Bismarck, who is seriously ill at Friedrichsruhe, have for some time been circulating. One version pronounces his condition hopeless, hinting at abdominal cancer. Another says the Prince is merely suffering from ptomaine poisoning, due to eating bad fish in England several months ago.

THE DISCOVERY IS HOME.

Antarctic Exploring Expedition Sailed Over Three Years Ago.

PLYMOUTH, England, Sept. 10.—The British antarctic expedition steamer Discovery arrived here at 4 P. M. to-day. She was heartily cheered by the crews of the warships in the harbor.

The officers and men of the Discovery all appear to be well.

The Discovery, specially built at Dundee for exploration work in the antarctic region, was launched early in 1901 and sailed from England in August of that year. She is commanded by Lieut., now Capt., E. F. Scott of the Royal Navy, and is regarded as one of the most perfectly equipped vessels for use in the polar regions ever built.

The expedition, which was sent out by the Royal Geographical Society and subsidized by the British Government, arrived at South Victoria Land in January, 1902. There the Discovery was stopped by ice, being compelled to remain in the floes during the Winter. A party composed of Capt. Scott, Lieut. Shakelton, and Dr. Wilson penetrated to a point at 82 degrees, the furthest point south ever reached.

After terrible experiences during the Winters of 1902 and 1903 the Discovery got out of the ice in the Spring of the latter year and went to New Zealand and thence to the Falkland Islands.

TO AID THE GERMAN NAVY.

New Department of Hamburg-American Company to be Established.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—Emperor William while at Hamburg had several conferences with Herr Ballin, Director of the Hamburg-American Steamship Line, and I learn that the line is about to become more intimately connected with the German naval department.

The Kaiser, observing Russia's unpreparedness for the war in the Far East, desires to make the German Navy as well prepared as the army. With this object in view a special department of the Hamburg-American Company is to be established, with Capt. von Grumme at its head. He resigned as Adjutant to the Emperor in order to take this position.

The Hamburg-American Company is now building a large transport which will be used by the Admiralty.

Capt. von Grumme was with Prince Heary of Prussia in the United States.

PRINCE PROUD OF HIS FIANCEE.

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—The Crown Prince, responding to congratulations upon his betrothal to the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, telegraphed to a friend at Hamburg as follows:

"A thousand thanks. I am immensely glad to be able to call such a charming and sensible little bride my own.

"WILLIAM, Crown Prince."

The Protestant provincial newspapers suggest to the Government that the Duchess ought not to be called Cecilia after her marriage. They regard this as an objectionable name for a Prussian Queen, and a German Empress, because it is associated with a Catholic saint, and many Catholic Church societies are named after her. The papers affirm that such an association would injure the Pretestant religion in Germany, as the uninformed might think their future Empress is a Catholic. It is proposed that the Duchess take one of other names, Augusta, for example.

BRITISH TREATY WITH TIBET.

Avoids Interference with Internal Affairs, Younghusband Says.

LHASA, Tibet, Thursday, Sept. 8, via Gyang-Tse, Sept. 10.—In a speech after signing the treaty with Tibet on Sept. 7, Col. Younghusband, the British political agent, pointed out that the British therein avoided interfering in the smallest degree with the internal affairs of the country.

They had not annexed any territory and had fully recognized the continued suzerainty of China. They had merely sought to insure the observance of the treaty of 1890, that trade relations between India and Tibet be established, and that Tibet should not depart from her traditional policy in regard to political relations with other countries.

OPPOSE ANNEXATION OF CRETE.

European Powers Not Likely to Adopt Prince George's Plan.

PARIS, Sept. 10.—There is reason to believe that the visit of Prince George of Greece, Commissioner of the Powers in the Island of Crete, to Paris, London, and other capitals in the hope of securing the annexation of Crete to Greece will not prove successful.

Russia, who is chiefly interested, has let it be understood that she does not desire the change. Influential Cretans also oppose the annexation of the island, and therefore the European Chancelleries are unfavorable to Prince George's mission.

ALFONSO DEFERS PARIS TRIP.

Spanish King's Action Considered Significant in France.

PARIS, Sept. 10.—King Alfonso's visit to President Loubet has been postponed until the Spring. This is considered significant in view of the continued failure to secure a Franco-Spanish agreement relative to Morocco.

LINERS HAVE EASY TRIP.

Two In Yesterday—Another Sighted—Mrs. Sartoris Back.

La Touraine and the Etruria were the only large transatlantic steamships to make their piers yesterday of the big fleet that was due. The Cedric with, almost 1,000 people on board, was reported off Fire Island early last night, and should land her passengers this morning. Unusually good weather prevailed all the week.

The Touraine brought Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris and her daughter, Miss Rosemary Sartoris; James B. Reynolds, who was secretary to ex-Mayor Low, and a number of French officials, including Camille Eulart, Director of the Museum of Sculpture; M. de Nerville, Inspector of Telegraphs, and Jean Reville, Director of the School of Protestant Theology. The passengers on the Etruria included United States District Attorney H. L. Burnett, H. S. Dewey, and Judge J. K. M. Norton.

Asuncion's Population Restless.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—Consul General Ruffin has cabled the State Department under to-day's date, from Asuncion, the capital of Paraguay, that conditions there are much disturbed and the population is very restless. The Government is hampered in its efforts to overcome the revolutionists through lack of gunboats.

SAFEGUARDS IN SUBWAY AN INTRICATE SYSTEM

Protective Devices Meet Contingency of Wreck or Fire.

POWER ALWAYS IN CONTROL

Automatic Shut-Off to Prevent Collision —Third Rail Rendered Harmless— Cars Non-Inflammable.

Since the rapid transit subway was begun, four years ago, there have been hundreds of suggestions from outsiders as to what the builders ought to do in the way of providing safeguards for patrons of New York's first underground railroad. As one of the engineers remarked the other day, it has seemed as if everybody who knew, or thought he knew, something of railroading has ventured to air his opinions on the subject.

"And now that we are nearly ready to open," added the engineer, "I believe we have satisfied all of them except those who insisted that it was essential to have cars built entirely of steel."

The officials of the operating company say they would have all-steel cars if it were necessary. They explain that the cars now on hand are as nearly fire-proof as they need to be; that other precautions render the spreading of a fire impossible in the tunnel; that the signal system is so perfect as to preclude collisions; that arrangements to protect passengers at the stations are as complete as human skill can make them, and that the covering of the third rail renders it improbable, if not impossible, for employes of the company to be injured along the line.

Granting that human judgment and skill are fallible, the tunnel operators have added to their anti-accident equipment all possible devices to minimize the effects of a mishap due to faults in their protective inventions. If there is an accident, it is promised, there will be every facility for preventing the spread of the damage. For instance, if misfortune befalls one train, all the rest will be protected by a system that causes the operation of the entire tunnel to cease instantaneously and to remain so until the first mishap is a thing of the past.

To begin with, the trains themselves are fitted out with every safety appliance known to modern railway engineers.

The vestibuled doors, successors to the old gates seen on the elevated railway trains, are designed to prevent accidents from crowding on station platforms and to shut out the possibility of a passenger falling off while the train is in motion.

AUTOMATIC SHUT-OFF AND BRAKE.

The electric motor of each car—and all the cars are fitted with the apparatus necessary for leading a train—is so arranged that it ceases to move when the pressure of the motorman's hand is relaxed on the controller. This is not new—the elevated train motors are the same—but the tunnel train has a supplementary mechanism that shuts the brakes automatically in case the train tries to rush past a danger signal. If the motorman should die or fall ill in his box, the current would cease to turn the wheels at once. If the grade were upward the train would stop without the help of the brakes, but if it were a down grade the air brakes would force it to stop as soon as the next danger signal had been passed.

The signals are set automatically by the passing trains, and the arrangement by which no two trains can run in adjoining blocks simultaneously was designed to prevent a collision due to a failure of the automatic brakes. Should the brakes refuse to work altogether, allowing the train to rush into the block ahead of the danger signal, it could not strike the forward train before running a considerable distance unchecked. In the interval there would be a second chance for the automatic apparatus to get in its fine work, as well as almost a certainty that the platform guards on the rear cars would discover "something wrong." Any guard through the entire length of the train is enabled to stop the train from his platform, and any switchman or other employe along the tracks can stop it by pressing an electric button that shuts off all power on every track.

The electric button is an all-important feature of the subway. It is handy at stations and in little boxes placed at frequent intervals along the tracks. There is no point from which a button cannot be reached in a few seconds, and one press of the button brings everything to a standstill.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR FIRE.

If there is a fire or a smash-up—and neither of these things can happen unless several systems of safeguards fail utterly—the station man or lineman, or even the passenger, if he happens to know where the button is, can stop the great system of underground travel, deadening the electric third rail, halting every train from the City Hall to Harlem, calling assistance, and notifying the Division Superintendents of the exact locality of the accident. Every employe, high and low, will have been drilled to know all about the safety devices, the signals, and the emergency calls.

At frequent intervals throughout the tunnel are hydrants and long lines of hose, which can be brought into use on the instant. These are for a last resort. The tunnel company does not expect a fire to get started. The only way a dangerous fire can originate in an electric train, it is asserted, is through some accident in the machinery beneath the car, where the electricity is converted into power. The subway cars are built to make this impossible. Every car floor is a multiple affair—practically five floors laid on top of each other. The lowest one is made of asbestos a quarter of an inch thick. Next to this comes a layer of wood, replaced over the motors by plates of steel. Then there is a layer of fire-proof felt, above which is a maple floor with an asbestos lining. The top floor, on which the passengers walk, is a stratum of wood seven-eighths of an inch in thickness. Besides the fivefold protecting floor, the car is shielded from flames by a covering of lacquered copper extending from the bottom up to the window sills.

It has been suggested that the smoke and gases following a tunnel fire would result in fatalities despite all the devices for a speedy quenching of the flames. This idea the company meets by saying that the New York tunnel is roomy enough and sufficiently ventilated to make it safe against a disastrous collection of smoke or gases. They point out that the stations, with plenty of exits which are never closed and have no doors, are at short intervals, ready to aid stranded passengers in reaching the outer air before the tunnel could become dangerously full of smoke.

SEPARATION OF POWER.

One feature of the tunnel's safeguarding is the separation of the electric power. The current that operates trains is entirely different from that which regulates the signals. Both are different from the current for the thousands of lights strung along the walls. Though an accident should render useless the third rail and the signals the lights would remain as brilliant as ever. It would be next to impossible to meet such a catastrophe in New York's tunnel as was suffered in Paris last year. When the Paris subway train was destroyed by fire all the lights went out, and probably scores who might have escaped were consumed because of the sudden darkness.

There are those who still believe the subway's ventilation is faulty, but Chief Engineer Parsons maintains that the fast traveling trains will circulate the necessary air in the down-town sections, where the stations are close together. Under Washington Heights, where the tunnel is deepest, there are to be artificial ventilators. In case it is found that mechanical aid is needed to furnish air in any other portions of the road, the company says it will make the installation at once.

One of the scientific magazines, in summing up recently what it considered the three faults in the safeguarding of the tunnel, stated that improper ventilation, inflammable cars, and scarcity of convenient exits were likely to be the causes of accidents. As explained above, the operators of the tunnel road hold that they have met the questions involved, and they say they have spared neither time nor money to procure every safety device and install every protection that human ingenuity could suggest.

CONVEYS LIBERIA'S THANKS.

American Minister Brings Letter About Fleet's Timely Appearance.

Ernest Lyon, the American Minister to Liberia, arrived home yesterday on the Cunard Line steamship Etruria after an absence of several years. He brought with him a letter from President Barclay of Liberia to President Roosevelt, thanking America for her support to Liberia in a recent crisis.

The letter to the President refers to the appearance of the warships under Admiral Chadwick in the harbor of the town where President Barclay was holding a conference with some hostile chiefs over proposed trade reforms. The chiefs were about to depart in anger, when they saw the fleet. Thinking that it belonged to Liberia, they gave in to all of President Barclay's demands.

Mr. Lyon said that the African Republic was prospering and that with the continued assistance of this country she would some day reach the place for which she was intended when started. He said that the negroes there were better satisfied than they were in their former homes, and that, with few exceptions, all were doing well. He added that President Barclay, by opening the interior of the country to foreign trade and by removing restrictions to trade throughout, had made a great step forward for the good of the country.

Operation on Coquelin Aine.

PARIS, Sept. 10.—The elder Coquelin underwent an operation for an affection of the glands of the throat to-day. It lasted half an hour and was performed without anesthetics. It was stated at M. Coquelin's house this evening that the patient was doing well and would soon recover.

Mr. Mackay Leases Bronson House.

Clarence H. Mackay has leased from Mrs. Frederick Bronson for the Winter season the four-story dwelling 174 Madison Avenue, between Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Streets.

FRENCH TROOPS CHEER RUSSIA.

Military Attache Enthusiastically Greeted at Manoeuvres.

PARIS, Sept. 10.—The grand manoeuvres opened at Dijon to-day with 60,000 men engaged in an attack and defense similar to Garibaldi's operations against the Germans in 1870. There was a continuous roar of cannons and rifles during the attempt to take the defenses of Dijon.

The Russian Military Attaché who attended the manoeuvres was received with shouts of "Long live Russia!" A German Attaché attended for the first time since the Franco-German war. The Japanese Attaché and Major Gen. Baden-Powell, the defender of Mafeking, in uniform, were received courteously but calmly Capt. T. Bentley Mott, the American Military Attaché, was among the military observers. A Chinese officer, in a quaint uniform, attracted marked attention.

JAPANESE PRINCE TO VISIT US.

Gen. Fushimi Coming as Special Representative of the Mikado.

TOKIO, Sept. 10.—Lieut. Gen. Prince Fushimi will sail for America on the steamship Manchuria in October. He will visit the St. Louis Fair and Washington as the special representative of the Emperor of Japan.

Prince Fushimi commanded the First Division at the battle of Nan-Shan Hill. He has returned to Tokio to make the trip to America at the request of the Emperor. He will remain in America one month, and will be accompanied by a numerous suite.

It is probable that Lieut. Gen. Hastagawa, Commander in Chief of the Imperial Guards Division, will be promoted to a Generalship and appointed Military Governor of that portion of Manchuria occupied by the Japanese.

BRITISH ENGINEERS ARRIVE.

Sir William White Heads Distinguished Delegates to St. Louis.

A party of about ninety engineers, including many of the most noted of England, arrived here last night on the Cunard Line steamship Etruria. They came at the invitation of the American Society of Civil Engineers to attend the international congress, which will be held at St. Louis beginning Oct. 3. A number of the New York members of the society met the visitors at the pier and escorted them to their hotels.

For a week the visitors will be entertained here. Then a special train will take them to Canada, where they will spend another week before going to St. Louis. Capt. W. J. Baxter, Naval Constructor in the navy, welcomed the party at Quarantine in behalf of the society and of Admiral Rodgers of the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

In the party of Englishmen are Sir William White, K. C. B., former Chief Naval Constructor and Deputy Controller of the British Navy, President of the visiting society; Cuthbert Brereton, who has been connected with many important construction works; Chief Engineer Alexander Ross of the Great Northern Railway; Prof. W. C. Unwin of the Central Technical College of London, Secretary J. H. Tudsberg, H. E. Jones, former Chief Engineer of the Commercial Gas Company of London; General Manager J. A. F. Aspinall of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, Chief Engineer W. H. Hunter of the Manchester Ship Canal, City Engineer J. A. Brodie of Liverpool, Chief Engineer H. H. Wake of the Sunderland Harbor Board, W. Barrington, P. W. Meik, Joseph Lobley, A. C. Hutzig, and J. G. Hudson.

The Rev. Mr. Morgan Sails for Home.

The Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, the English evangelist, who has been in this country this Summer, attending the Northfield Bible Conference and preaching in many of the large cities, sailed yesterday with his family on the steamship Minneapolis for London. He said that he was well satisfied with the results of his labors here.

THOUSANDS AT OPENING OF PELHAM BAY PARK

Parade, Sports, and Speeches Dedicate Recreation Grounds.

ITS AREA OVER 1,700 ACRES

Seven Miles Frontage on Sound—Athletic Field Among the Best in the Country.

The Bronx enjoyed yesterday one of the most notable days in its history, when 25,000 people from that borough and other parts of the city turned out to witness the military and civic exercises attending the formal opening of the athletic field and military parade grounds in Pelham Bay Park.

Extensive preparations had been made for the event, and, notwithstanding the threatening weather, the full programme was carried out. When night came the happiest man in the Bronx was Park Commissioner William P. Schmitt, who had planned and executed the work of constructing what is said to be the most thoroughly equipped athletic field in this part of the country.

Mayor McClellan, together with President Fornes of the Board of Aldermen; Borough President Haffen, State Senator John Hawkins, Senator Dowling, and other public men participated in the celebration. Congressman Joseph A. Goulden was Grand Marshal of the day.

As early as 8 o'clock in the morning people began to arrive at the Park, and by 9 o'clock a crowd of several hundred had assembled. The Mayor and his party arrived an hour later and were escorted to the park by Squadron A with military honors. The parade moved at precisely 2:30, the order of formation being as follows:

Mayor McClellan and the city officials; Grand Marshal Goulden, Gen. George B. Loud, Chief of Staff, and his aides; a detachment of regulars from Fort Schuyler; the Eighth Regiment of the National Guard, in command of Col. J. N. Jarvis; a battalion of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, commanded by Col. Edward Duffy; the First Battery, commanded by Capt. Louis Wendel; the Second Battery, under Capt. David Wilson, and the First Signal Corps, under Capt. Erlandson. These were followed by Posts 96 and 136 of the Grand Army of the Republic, and Garrison No. 63 of the United Army and Navy Veterans. In the line were nine bands from different parts of the Bronx which furnished music for the crowd during the remainder of the day.

The opening address was made by Commissioner Schmitt, who outlined the history of the park from the Colonial period down to the present time. He described how it had been developed and told of its transformation, thanking the Mayor for his interest and co-operation in the undertaking. "I hope," he said, "that the citizens of this borough and city may learn to appreciate this playground in the fullest measure." In conclusion, the Commissioner formally turned over the park to Mayor McClellan.

In accepting the grounds in behalf of the city, President Fornes said:

"The citizens of the Bronx are to be felicitated and the energetic Commissioner of Parks is to be congratulated upon the opening of these splendid athletic grounds to public use. This recreation ground is ideally situated in one of the finest parks in the world, a park containing over 1,700 acres and a frontage of more than seven miles upon the waters of the Sound.

"Within a few feet of this spot we have perhaps the turning point in the revolution. A memorial tablet near here marks the place where the gallant Col. Glover held the British forces in check to enable Washington to retreat with the main body of his army. I believe it to be an essential duty of our Government to foster the practice of athletic games and sports in order that the coming generations of American citizens may develop healthy bodies and sound minds. I believe that every dollar expended by the municipal government in this direction will be a wise and wholesome expenditure and will make for the best type of manhood."

Interspersed with music by the bands and songs by the German Singing Societies of the Bronx, speeches were then made by President Haffen, Grand Marshal Goulden, and Senator Hawkins. All the speakers complimented Commissioner Schmitt on the success of his undertaking. Congressman Goulden departed from his text long enough to refer in a jocular way to "Acting Mayor Fornes" and the possibility that he may some time become Mayor in fact, "if he should chance to head the right ticket."

When this part of the ceremony was ended the Mayor stepped over to the big flag which hung at the foot of a tall pole near the grandstand and slowly raised it to the top of the staff. During the raising the bands played the "Star Spangled Banner" and the National salute of twenty-one guns was fired by the Second Battery amid a burst of cheers which could be heard half a mile away. This marked the official assumption of the park by the city, and was the only part taken by the Mayor in the day's exercises.

The final ceremony of the day was the planting of a "Vehmie Linden" tree by H. C. Clausen and its acceptance by Commissioner Schmitt. When this was over, the Mayor and his party went over to view the games which were in progress on the athletic field. After the ceremonies, Commissioner Schmitt and the Reception Committee entertained the city officials and other visitors at dinner in a large tent.

Half a hundred policemen, under Inspector Albertson, were on the grounds to keep order, and as a measure of precaution, ambulances were there from the Fordham and Lebanon Hospitals. A few minor accidents occured during the day, whose victims were treated at the emergency hospital in the park which was in charge of Miss Emma Adams, a nurse provided by the Board of Health.

ANTI-BULLFIGHT CAMPAIGN.

Missouri Authorities Take Further Action to Stop the "Sport."

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 10.—Prosecuting Attorney R. L. Johnston of St. Louis County today filed informations in the Clayton Circuit Court against D. Canty, J. Cornelius, Fred Essen, Hugo Essen, Felix Robert, Louis Capordo, J. Bosco, José Balseiro, Antonio Alouno, and Manuel Laurez. The defendants are charged with keeping an arena for the baiting and fighting of bulls, with charging admission fees to bull fights, and with baiting and fighting bulls.

A previous information had been filed against Robert and some of his fellow-bull fighters, and they are now under bond to answer to the charge in the Clayton Circuit Court Monday. The additional defendants named to-day are believed by Attorney General Crow to be in some manner connected with the exhibitions given in the last week.

A motion will be made in the Clayton Circuit Court on Monday to dissolve the injunction issued Friday by Judge McElhinney against the fights. The trials of the defendants named in the first information will also be held Monday. The Attorney General to-day caused subpoenas to be issued for Señora Marianna Cervera and Roseier Meigs, President of the St. Louis Humane Society, as witnesses in the cases

The bull fights scheduled for to-morrow afternoon and evening have been canceled on account of the injunction.

MAY HEAR CRIMINAL CASES.

Jersey Justices of the Peace Discover "Joker" in Revised Statutes.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, Sept. 10.—The discovery was made here a few days ago by Justices of the Peace, who have been barred from acting in criminal cases since the Hicks act of 1895, that a repealer of this law was enacted in 1898. The repealer is in Chapter 238 of the laws of that year.

The discovery of the Justices was already known to a few lawyers. They were under the impression that a substitute law, the same as the Hicks act, was in force, for in 1898, when a general revision of the State laws was made, a criminal procedure act was passed, and was supposed to embrace all previous acts relating to that branch of the law. The Hicks act was one of those specifically repealed, but it has been generally believed to have been contained in the general act.

As the case stands there is nothing now to prevent Justices of the Peace from continuing their old practice of acting in criminal cases. The method has been held responsible for many abuses since the Justices were paid in fees, and it was to their financial interest not to be over-discriminating in taking complaints. There is no doubt that the Hicks law was the means of saving large sums in the past three years, and if it turns out that it is actually inoperative it probably will be re-enacted next Winter.

IT WAS HIS LIFE OR CHILD'S.

Clark Didn't Hesitate, Drove Engine on Sidewalk—May Die.

Engine Co. 129 was going to a fire at 14 Herbert Street, in Brooklyn, last night. Driver Peter S. Clark held the reins and the horses were plunging along at their best. Suddenly Clark saw a little child dash out just in front as he started to make the turn from Forest Street into Graham Avenue. To think was to act with Clark. He pulled hard on the reins and the horses dashed up on the sidewalk and the machine toppled over. When Clark's unconscious form was unstrapped from the seat it was said he probably would die.

Every man on the engine was injured. Standing upon the ash pan at the rear rode Lieut. Radd and Engineer John Galvin. The crash as the engine went over was terrific. Wood and splinters of wood and pieces of metal flew in all directions. The crowd first found Radd and Galvin lying stunned on the paving, while Clark was under the forward part of the engine. A hundred willing hands applied to the wrecked engine lifted it sufficiently for others to rescue Clark, and Ambulance Surgeon Short hurried him to the Eastern District Hospital. His skull is fractured, several ribs are broken, and he is internally injured. The others were not so badly hurt.

The child which caused the wreck darted back to the sidewalk as rapidly as it came out, and was lost in the crowd before being identified, even as a girl or boy.

ADVISES AGAINST STRIKE.

National Board Urges Coal Miners to Accept Reduction—Says Struggle Would Be Hopeless.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Sept. 10.—Preparations are about completed for a vote in District 19 on the proposition of the operators of the district to make a reduction of about 7 per cent. in the miners' wage scale. The National Executive Board of the United Mine Workers has issued a circular advising the men to accept the proposition.

The board admits that it "believes a strike at this time could only end in defeat, resulting in lower wages, worse conditions of employment, and menacing the welfare of those in other districts."

The National board also says it "cannot be expected to furnish financial assistance to what it considers a hopeless struggle from the beginning."

Maryland Trust Company's Receiver Makes Terms with Speyer & Co.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 10.—Creditors of the Maryland Trust Company will receive a dividend of between 50 and 60 cents on the dollar on Oct. 10. The receiver has concluded negotiations that will supply over $3,000 000 in cash. The claims against the company, with interest, amount to less than $6,000,000.

The dividend payment is made possible by a deal with Speyer & Co. for the sale of the bonds of the Vera Cruz and Pacific Railroad. These bonds are guaranteed by the Mexican Government to the Maryland Trust Company in settlement for the purchase of the railroad last April by Mexico. The issue is of $7,000,000 4½ per cent. thirty-year gold bonds.

BURGLARS BLOW OPEN SAFE.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Sept. 10.—The bank at Murphy, N. C., last night was robbed of $4,500. The large vault and safe within it were both blown open and completely demolished. The robbers went to a blacksmith's shop a little way from the bank and secured tools.

With these they made breaches within the safe and vault large enough to enable them to insert dynamite. There were two explosions. The robbery was not discovered until this morning.

Automobiles in Ceylon.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—According to Indian Engineering, writes United States Consul Haynes from Rouen, the Ceylon Government is seriously considering the proposition of substituting on all fit roads light automobiles for the old stage coaches which still exist on important routes for mail and passenger traffic. The required speed is thirty miles an hour, and each vehicle must carry six passengers, three hundred pounds of letters, and twenty-six pounds of baggage

DEATH MAY BE MURDER BY THIEF'S COMPANION

Man Found Asphyxiated—All of His Belongings Gone.

MONEY AND BUNDLES MISSING

Gas Tip Had Been Pulled Out—Police Have Few Clues to Strange Lodging House Pair.

What was probably a murder, with just enough outward semblance to give the impression of suicide, was revealed when the door of a second-story hall room at 61 East Fourth Street had been broken open yesterday morning, the flow of unlighted gas stopped, and the discovery made that a stocky man who was lying on the floor was dead.

There were the usual evidences of suicide; a towel had been stuffed into a gaping crevice of the door at the top, and the only window was tightly closed. Where was the tall man who had gone into the room with the man later found dead? Both Mrs. Tessie Probst, from whom the two had rented the room, and her husband immediately began to look for him. He was not found, and has not been found yet, although a large force of detectives looked for him all day. There seems to be little likelihood that the missing man ever will be caught, because the police have only the vaguest notion of what he looks like. That he wore a very dirty Fedora hat is practically the only clue to his identity.

Equally little is known of the identity of the dead man. Not a scrap of paper was found on him—absolutely nothing but 30 cents and two keys. One of these was for the room which he had rented, the other the commonest kind of house key. On a black derby hat, printed on the hatband, appeared the word "Hamburg."

When he entered the room in which he was found dead on Friday evening he carried a bundle big enough to give evidence that it was all he could do to carry it, and when he handed Mrs. Probst $2 to take $1.75 out of it he displayed quite a snug roll of bills rather carelessly crumpled up. These articles disappeared with the man's associate.

Both men put in an appearance at the Fourth Street house on Thursday afternoon. They arranged with Mrs. Probst to rent a room. Although it did not appear queer to her then, it seems as if there was something significant about the negotiations. Mrs. Probst had two rooms to rent. One was a room of considerable size, the other the little hall room. For the large room Mrs. Probst wanted $3.50 a week, for the hall room only $2.50.

"Oh, let's take the big one," the short, stocky man suggested.

"No; what's the use?" said his tall companion. "The little one will do just as well."

The short man pressed hard to get his companion to agree to take the big room, but to no avail. The big room had two windows in it, and only one gas jet. The men paid only $1 on the room, to "clinch the bargain," as they said. The big man paid the money. They explained that they would come on the following day with their luggage and pay the other $1.50.

On Friday afternoon about 3 o'clock the two men again put in an appearance. This time they were loaded down with luggage, and, as it appeared to Mrs. Probst at least, had also been drinking. The little man carried a very heavy bundle tied up with paper, the other a dress-suit case. They told Mrs. Probst that they now wanted to take the hall room and pay the remainder of the rent.

It was the little man woh did the paying this time. The tall man appeared again in the hallway of the house about an hour later with the water pitcher, and that was the last seen of him by any one in the building.

Between the hall room and a large front room there is a door, which is the one over which the towel was stuffed. Mrs. Rosie Wenk occupies that room, and when she went to bed she thought there was still a light in the room and thought she heard the two men talking.

The murder, or suicide, was traced by the odor of gas. The dead man was dressed with the exception of his shoes and stockings. The gas jet, too, had been taken out.

The dead man was about twenty-eight or thirty years old. His hair and mustache are light. His weight is probably 160 pounds. He was dressed in a black suit and wore a red-striped shirt. His hands indicate that he may have done hard work, but not recently.

The first impression of those who discovered the men was that the two men were thieves who had committed a robbery between the time when they paid the first dollar on the room and when they showed up the second time with the bundles. The bundles, these persons contend, constituted the booty which they secured, the money which the little man had representing some of the pawned stuff.

ARRESTS TWO AT HIS DOOR.

Policeman Gray of the West One Hundred and Fifty-second Street Station and Mounted Policeman Cavanagh live in the same apartment house at 1,468 St. Nicholas Avenue. Yesterday afternoon Gray came home and found two young men loitering around near the door. Inside Mrs. Cavanagh told him that the pair had been there a couple of hours.

Gray, in his citizen's clothes, went out and asked the two what they were doing, and, failing to get a satisfactory answer, arrested them as suspicious persons. They gave their names at the station as Harry Mix of 118 East Twentieth Street and Benjamin Hall of 1,681 Clay Avenue.

On the floor outside the door of the apartment house was found a bone-handled case knife such as might be used for slipping a lock. When searched at the station house pawntickets for a diamond ring pledged for $25 and for a dress suit case pledged for $10 were found on Mix. On Hall were found a gold watch, chain, and locket and $48. Many robberies have occurred in the neighborhood recently and the police will look carefully into their antecedents.

GUARD OFFICERS DECLINE.

Reluctant to Take Instruction in Army Service Schools.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—The plan of affording opportunity for officers of the National Guard to take instruction in the various service schools of the army is not working out well. Few National Guard men take sufficient interest in perfecting themselves in military knowledge to drop their daily occupations and avail themselves of the offer.

Only five States have made any reply to the circular letter by Secretary Taft making the formal offer for the benefit of officers of the guard. These are Florida, Maine, Colorado, North Dakota, and Nebraska. With the exception of Florida they all decline. Florida has two officers who desire to attend service schools. One designates the artillery school and the other desires a garrison school.

Officers who accept the offer are required to undergo the physical and mental examination required of civilian candidates for appointment as Second Lieutenants in the army.

SUNKEN DYNAMITE SHIP MENACES OTHER CRAFT

Schooner Longfellow Founders Off Massachusetts Coast.

HAS CARGO OF THE EXPLOSIVE

Crew of Sixteen Men After Battle with the Sea in Open Boats Succeed in Getting Ashore.

HIGHLAND LIGHT, Mass., Sept. 10.—The steamer Longfellow, loaded with dynamite, bound from Wilmington, Del., to Lake Superior, sank off here during the night, and lies a constant menace to other ships. Her entire crew of sixteen men, after several hours in open boats on a boisterous sea, succeeded in getting ashore.

The vessel was sighted about 9 o'clock last night off the Pamet River Life-Saving Station blowing whistles of distress and burning red lights. This continued for nearly an hour, when the lights went out and the whistling ceased. Early in the morning two boats were discovered a short distance off shore, and the Pamet River life-savers warned them not to land until daybreak. They heeded the warning until about 5 o'clock, when one of the boats attempted to get ashore four miles up the cape and was capsized in the surf. The eight men were all hauled ashore in safety through the breakers.

The other crew kept off, so the Highland and High Head life-savers launched their boats and towed the steamer's crew still further up the cape, and at 7 o'clock they all landed without difficulty opposite the Peaked Hill Bar Station, the life-savers of that station assisting.

Capt. Riley of the Longfellow reported that his vessel sprang a leak under the engine room when on Nantucket Shoals yesterday afternoon. She was abandoned off Pamet River Station at 10 o'clock last night, and sank in forty fathoms of water about midnight, a mile off shore.

Capt. Riley estimates the loss on vessel and cargo at $25,000. He is a resident of Brooklyn, and took command of the Longfellow when she was purchased, not long ago, by H. P. Cabell of Wilmington, Del., from the New York and Porto Rican Transportation Company.

BOSTON, Sept. 10.—A tugboat Captain, who returned to-day from the wreck of the steamer Longfellow, reports that the vessel is a dangerous menace to navigation round Cape Cod. She lies in thirteen fathoms of water one mile off shore, abreast of the Pamet River Station. One mast projects out of the water.

AUTO TO CAPTURE AUTOS.

Policemen on Ocean Parkway Will Have Fast Machine.

An automobile filled with policemen in uniform is to be put in service on Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, by Deputy Police Commissioner Farrell, to catch speed law violating automobilists.

The policemen will have a fast machine, and the Commissioner believes that speeding will be discouraged when they begin patrolling the Parkway.

The Commissioner says he is determined to put a stop to the reckless speeding of automobiles in the borough, and to-day the bicycle and mounted policemen stationed on Bedford Avenue, and Eastern and Ocean Parkways will be heavily reinforced.

Mississippi Planter Accused of Causing Negro and Wife to be Burned.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 10.—W. C. Eastland, a planter of Doddsville, Miss., is in custody of the Sheriff at Indianola, Miss., charged with having caused Luther Holbert and wife to be burned at the stake last February.

Road Locomotives in South Africa.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—Road locomotives have been and are still wanted in South Africa because of increasing mining industries, writes United States Consul Haynes from Rouen, France. It is found that much of the water utilizable produces damage by incrustation, hence motors using other than steam power are gaining preference. It is asserted that there is a future in South Africa for oil and gasoline engines in which beauty is sacrificed for solidity.

SNOW SHEDS BURNED.

California Forest Fires Are Abating and Reservation May Be Saved.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 10.—About 1,800 feet of the Southern Pacific Company's snowsheds near Blue Cañon were destroyed by yesterday's fire. A large force of men worked all night repairing the track, and at 6 o'clock this morning had the work completed so that the delayed passenger trains began to move. Freight traffic was also resumed. The fire destroyed the telegraph wires, but these have already been repaired.

A definite report from the scene of the forest fire raging in the Big Basin Park, in Santa Cruz County, states that the fire has been checked within a quarter of a mile of the Governor's camp, and it is thought the danger of the entire destruction of the reservation is now over.

The situation at Boulder Creek has improved, the wind shifting the blaze and driving the fire toward the coast. All danger to the town is not over, however, as the water supply is said to be precarious and the force of fighters is worn out with its sixty hours' labor in the other sections of the mountains.

VISIT HOME BETRAYED HIM.

Jersey "Bad Man" Arrested When He Came to See Wife.

SOMERVILLE, N. J., Sept. 10.—George Ewing, who was wanted by the Somerset County authorities on a charge of swindling, was captured yesterday as he was about to pay a visit to his invalid wife in the hills near Neshanic. Detective Totten held Ewing up with a revolver before he had a chance to resist capture.

Ewing was known as a "bad man." He started his "career" when he was twelve years old, and has been convicted several times for horse stealing and highway robbery. Recently Ewing borrowed $100 from his neighbor, Abram G. Chamberlin, and gave him a chattel mortgage on a valuable horse and wagon. Then he drove the rig to New Brunswick and sold it for $28, after which he disappeared. He was traced to Philadelphia and Pittsburg, but he evaded capture.

Acting on the theory that Ewing would sooner or later return to his young wife, whom he treated with great affection before his disappearance, Detective Totten kept a watch on his mountain home, and last night saw Ewing come out of the woods and enter the house. Ewing was committed to the county jail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

BURGLAR GANG AT FREEHOLD.

Five Breaks in Three Weeks—Fruit Orchards Devastated.

RED BANK, N. J., Sept. 10.—It is believed that an organized gang of burglars is operating in and around Freehold. Within the past three weeks five burglaries have been committed, besides numerous raids on peach and apple orchards and melon patches.

Last night L. S. Packard's general store was broken into and a large quantity of goods was stolen. Three butchers' shops were among those also burglarized. The farmers have lost heavily on account of fruit thieves, and though watch has been kept on orchards and melon fields the burglars have not been caught. The Commissioners are considering the appointment of an extra force of night police.

Think They Have Fur Robber.

Stephen Dunlow of 2,216 Second Avenue was locked up in the West One Hundredth Street Station last night on a charge of grand larceny. It is alleged that he was one of the men who for the last month have been robbing the firm of H. S. Bindseil & Son, at 42 West Ninety-ninth Street. The firm manufactures sealskins and has been systematically robbed of more than $2,000 worth of goods. Detectives went yesterday to Dunlow's home and found more than $2,000 worth of sealskin articles.

FORTY PAGES.

SHOWN UP.

The free lance is a joy forever. His loveliness increases, as Mr. FREDERICK W. WHITRIDGE proves in his second Roosevelt pamphlet. Until he issued the second the public did not know that he had written the first. It was some months ago that the pamphlet "Mr. ROOSEVELT and the Presidency" by "A Spectator" excited the community to curious speculations concerning its authorship. It was a mighty good argument for Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. WHITRIDGE now confesses that he wrote it. Several eminent Republicans who have been flattered by attributions of the pamphlet's parenthood will be freed from suspicion now that a Mugwump acknowledges it.

The second pamphlet from Mr. WHITRIDGE'S pen, entitled "ROOSEVELT or PARKER," is not so good as the first; that is, it is not so good an argument, not so successful a plea. But there is a heap more fun in it. Mr. WHITRIDGE is under political obligations to nobody, and he lays about him with a fine disregard of everybody's feelings. Were he working for a client he would never dare to go to trial on such a faulty preparation of his case as through a love of ease or a scorn of serious things he exhibits in his defense of Mr. ROOSEVELT'S course on the Isthmus of Panama, in the issuing of the pension order, and in the settlement of the coal strike. But when he lays a disclosing and pitiless hand upon the disguises which hide Republican humbugs he is just as diverting as when he shows up the Democratic stalking horses. There is not much said about the Northern Securities case in this campaign, but Mr. WHITRIDGE has his fling just the same. He hates humbug, and the Northern Securities case was a veritable Colossus among humbugs. Here is the Whitridge philosophy of the matter:

> The Northern Securities case, over which the fiercest denunciations were launched at the President, and which has left much soreness behind it, need hardly now be mentioned. The Supreme Court of the United States has sustained the prosecution which the President directed, and some of the principals affected by its decision have confessed that the Northern Securities Company was a mistake. On the one hand the supremacy of the law, though it appears stupid, has been made clear, which is a good thing, and on the other hand the anti-corporation shriekers have been compelled to see that even after the dissolution of a corporate combination has been ordered there are still a multitude of individual rights to be ascertained and protected, which is a still better thing.

True, all true, and it is well that the truth should be pointed out. The public is only beginning dimly to see it. For either the Northern Securities decision, with the decisions yet to be rendered in supplementary litigation to which the decree of the court gave rise, will leave the control of the Northern Pacific Road in Mr. HILL'S hands where it was the cause of all the fuss, or will place it in the extended hand of Mr. HARRIMAN. If Mr. HILL continues to hold it, how is competition re-established, how is that terrifying spook, restraint of trade, got out of the way? As for Mr. HARRIMAN, he already controls two transcontinental roads. If as the result of the suit begun by President ROOSEVELT and Attorney General KNOX he shall acquire control of a third, he will be a monopolist and restrainer of trade in the Anti-Trust act sense of such magnitude as to make Mr. HILL seem a babe in the business.

It took the trust builders and great financiers of Wall Street a good while to comprehend the true nature of the great Northern Securities case humbug. When the truth at last became clear to them they laid aside all fear of Mr. ROOSEVELT. They are now his most ardent admirers and chief among his contributing supporters. Eight months ago he had not a friend in the financial district. Now he is their rock of safety, and, having removed KNOX from the circle of his advisers, they count on him, they trust him, they feel that he is their man for President.

FRIENDS IN NEED.

It is, we suppose, in order to congratulate Mr. ROOSEVELT on the fact that the support of the Republicans of Columbia County has at last been unreservedly pledged to his candidacy. This valuable political commodity, together with the support of Dutchess and Putnam, is one of the personal assets of the Honorable LOUIS F. PAYN of Chatham, and is carried in his capacious pocket. At the Senatorial convention of the Twenty-fourth New York District, held on Friday, Mr. PAYN caused the Administration of Mr. ROOSEVELT to be indorsed and due declaration to be made that the "sterling qualities of mind and character" of the President qualify him for continuance in the high office to which he succeeded on the death of Mr. MCKINLEY. At the same time Mr. PAYN "pledged the faith of the Republican Party in the honesty of the Governor." The opinion of Mr. PAYN on "character" and "honesty" is that of an expert, and Mr. ROOSEVELT, who has an intimate knowledge of Mr. PAYN'S peculiar authority in these matters, must feel that he has gained "approbation from Sir Hubert."

Meantime we note with interest that that eminent organizer, Mr. CLARKSON, nominally of New York, is diligently pursuing the discharge of his duties in the Custom House of this port at Salt Lake City, Utah, where the interests of Republicanism and those of polygamy are somewhat conflicting. With such aid there is no reason why the stern moral purpose of the President in reforming his party should not progress to his entire satisfaction.

THE "YELLOW PERIL"?

Two European dispatches floated into the office of THE TIMES one evening last week which, by an accident of "make-up," were put one after the other in the same column, but which have more than a chance relation to the important subject discussed in one of them. One was a summary of an editorial article in The London Times on "The Yellow Peril," which not unnaturally engages the attention of British publicists, and the other was a statement from an official of the Japanese Legation in Paris, that Japan expected and was prepared for a war of at least three years with Russia.

We have from time to time given the reasons why we cannot regard the future of the Oriental nations, either in war or peace, in military and naval or in commercial aggression as constituting any serious danger for the nations of the Occident. The statement of the Japanese official in Paris sustains that view. Japan is engaged in its first war with a modern and Western Power. Her rulers have been looking forward to the necessity of it for at least ten years and have used extraordinary energy in developing and organizing the resources of the country to conduct it with success. Unquestionably the strain has been very severe, and will become more so the longer the struggle is continued. The actual direct cost is great. The deduction from productive power by the withdrawal of the flower of the population to the number of nearly a million is still greater, and this number must be at least doubled if the war is to go on for three years. If we suppose that Japan has aggressive purposes at heart, of which there is no proof, such an experience must certainly make her rulers hesitate. It will be all the surer to do so because these rulers have shown in the most undisputed manner that they are careful, far-sighted men, that they are not reckless, that they know accurately all the details of the matters with which they have to deal, and that they have the habit of calculating in advance the consequences of any policy they pursue.

In any policy of aggression which is attributed to them they will have to face some very serious facts bearing on the degree of success, wonderful as it is, that they have already attained. They must know that what they have won from Russia is won as much by the blundering of their enemy as by their own superior intelligence and activity. They would not expect to do as much or as well with any other European foe. The Russian Government, though following plans that were sure to provoke resistance from Japan, was caught at the very outset of the war utterly insufficiently prepared. It sadly underrated its enemy and overrated its own strength. It must have known that the control of the sea was absolutely necessary to the slightest hope of success in any degree on the part of the Japanese, and they were allowed to secure it almost in a night. It must have known, surely it should have known, that Korea was necessary to the initiation of any promising land operations of the Japanese, and it did not contest Korea, offering its first serious resistance at the mouth of the Yalu with an army only half as great as that of Japan and inferior artillery, and with a commander who allowed himself to be deceived and outflanked. This is but an example of the ineptitude of Russian action almost through the entire campaign. It is not possible that the Japanese would count, in a contest, say, with Germany, or with any European Power having interests in the Orient, on any such amazing aid from the stupidity of its foe.

If, then, it be assumed that Japan would wish, after driving Russia from Manchuria, to secure a controlling voice in the Chinese Empire and to organize and discipline its millions with the purpose of driving all Western Powers from the Orient, it is clearly very improbable that its actual experience with Russia would encourage it in such a gigantic enterprise. But why should not the general opinion of the world take cognizance, in the case of Japan, as it would in the case of any other Government, of the facts bearing directly on the question of motive? No such tremendous task as is attributed to Japan will be undertaken without a very strong and definite motive. Where is the evidence that any exists in the minds of the Japanese rulers or of the people? Not in this war. It was begun and is still carried on as a defensive war. Russia was directly threatening the outlet for the population and trade of Japan which is necessary to her safety and progress and was indirectly but plainly threatening the destruction of her nationality. That is the ground on which Japan says she went to war, and the utterances of responsible Russians since the war began are corroboration that Russian intention was not misunderstood. If Japan has taken up arms for defense only, why should we infer that she will hereafter take up arms for aggression? And what can we see that is an inducement to such a policy? Her people are an industrial island people, with rare aptitude for war, but not in any usual sense warlike. Their hope of development and prosperity lies in secure peace. Her leaders say that is what they seek, and that only. Why should they not be believed?

THE BRITISH AND TIBET.

Lord CURZON has scored another and brilliant success in Tibet. The commander of the British expedition has obtained his treaty, and though the terms are not yet known, the mere fact of an agreement, signed in the absence of the Grand Lama, under conditions amounting to a proclamation of his abdication, is a substantial advantage.

The chief point gained for the Indian Government is the decided addition to British prestige, which was intimately involved in the Tibetan affair. Had the expedition failed, had it even been compelled to withdraw from the unendurable rigors of the Winter climate and then have been forced to return to its task, the injury to British influence over the mind of India would have been very serious. Not only has this outcome, which at one time appeared inevitable, been avoided, but Col. YOUNGHUSBAND has in effect dissipated the Tibetan myth of absolute seclusion, driven into retirement the ruler who represented it in its most impressive form, and brought into action a set of rulers with whom the Indian Government and that of China as well can deal. This he has done with a moderate force, facing dangers, hardships, obstacles deemed insurmountable. He can now retire in safety, and one of the most threatening elements in the Indian situation may be regarded as removed. A new lease of life and an added certainty is given by his exploit and that of his little band to the tradition of British invincibility, on which British rule practically rests in Asia.

SKY MOTORS.

Major BADEN-POWELL, as President of the Aeronautical Society, has given the members of the British Association some facts about flying machines which are likely to be of much popular interest. From what Major BADEN-POWELL tells us, the conclusion is irresistible that the aerial navigator is much in the state of preparedness displayed by the man who said to his companion: "John, lend me your pipe, and give me a pinch of tobacco. I've got a match."

Naturally enough, Major BADEN-POWELL assumes that practical flight is imminent, and that "the day is undoubtedly drawing near when we shall utilize the highway of the air for travel." The hopes and expectations of the modern Icarus centre in and upon the aeroplane. Theoretically, this meets the requirements very perfectly; practically, there are still some little difficulties to be overcome which are just great enough to be interesting. Some of these little problems are:

To make the plane light enough, stiff enough, and smooth enough.

To build an engine at once light enough to be carried by it and powerful enough to propel it.

To devise the form of screw which shall develop the maximum effective thrust in proportion to the horse power expended in driving it.

To Major BADEN-POWELL it appears that the best way of obtaining the data needed for solving these problems is to gather them experimentally by shooting the chute from an inclined plane, and thus getting into the air. The results are sufficiently interesting to warrant describing them in the Major's own words. He says:

> During this Summer I have had an inclined track erected beside a small lake at the Crystal Palace and have built up a machine consisting of a canvas boat on wheels, with various forms of aeroplane fixed above it. With this I have made a number of glides, and though the experiments are not nearly completed—for I have been delayed beyond expectation by trivial mishaps and difficulties—a good deal has already been learned, notwithstanding the short duration of the glides.

Some information as to the temperature of the water in the lake, and whether this method of entering it adds to the pleasure of bathing, would have had a touch of popular interest, if not of great technical value.

From all of this it will appear that the practical sky motor is as yet a long way off—which is not exactly a new discovery nor one for which the approval of the British Association is needed to make it probable.

THE CHILDREN OF THE CITY.

If the observations as to the increase of nervous disorders among the school children of Chicago are accurate and the data are available for comparisons with the average condition of Chicago children at earlier periods and of those brought up under simpler conditions of country life, it is perhaps natural that the health authorities of that city should look for an explanation in what they are pleased to call the strenuousness of Chicago life, its incessant noises, its impure atmosphere, and the restriction of juvenile exuberance of muscular energy to the limitations of the overcrowded "flat." That these are causes contributing in greater or less degree to physical deterioration in children may be admitted without discussion. It is by no means true, however, that the condition of country children is conspicuously favorable, on the average, to good health, a robust physical development, and long life.

There are conditions of country life for fortunate children which may be considered ideal; equally so are there ideal conditions for the more fortunate children of cities. Perhaps the best conditions of all are those which surround the children of parents in comfortable circumstances, who are able to alternate between country and city, with long Summer vacations in the woods and fields and comfortable Winters in urban homes. For the millions for whom this is impossible and who live continuously either in country or city on the average plane of the so-called middle class, above sordid poverty but below the standard of luxury which even relative wealth permits, it is an open question whether the city children are not better off as a class. In either case the poverty of parents puts a child at a measure of disadvantage, and while those attending the city child are very different from those to which the country child is subjected, the net result in normal infant mortality is not very different in the two conditions.

What the city child has to contend with in noise, excitement, restriction of physical energies, and bad air is well known. The country child, however, has troubles of his own which hamper his development. As the rule he is insufficiently nourished. This does not mean that he has not food enough, but that in its quality and preparation it is far below the standards of the city child. His Winter exposure is much more trying than that of the city child. As the rule he sleeps less comfortably, bathes less frequently, is subjected to more constant danger from contagion and infection by reason of the total lack of precautions against the spread of local epidemics, and gets a purer air than his city cousin only when he is a hundred feet or more away from his home. As to his moral environment it is a matter of experience that the deadly monotony of country life tends to make even the most repulsive vice an excitement.

It is unfortunately true that the residential districts of our cities are steadily filling up the cemeteries with small graves; but these are not absent in those of rural communities, where they are found in winrows. The type of manhood and womanhood which survives in the cities exemplifies a much higher standard of development, physical and intellectual, than that of the country district, and the average city man or woman of fifty is many years younger in mind and body than the farmer or the farmer's wife of equal age. These generalizations are fully sustained by vital statistics and by intelligent observation. They warrant the conclusion that the city child, while deprived of many things which would contribute to his happiness and welfare, is not at a hopeless disadvantage by reason of his environment, and that he has offsetting advantages which are probably fully compensatory.

PHILANTHROPY AS A PROFESSION.

An interesting experiment in the special education of those desiring to engage in charitable and philanthropic work is about to be made in the New York School of Philanthropy, which will begin its first academic year in the United Charities Building. The course of instruction agreed upon has many novel and interesting features and is designed to be practical. It should be to the well-conducted charities what the medical school is to the hospital.

New York is probably the best city in the world for such an experiment, since its local charities are more numerous, more diversified, and generally better conducted than those of other cities. Whether the kind of training which can be imparted in school is of the kind needed in practical charitable work, or whether success depends upon a happy combination of natural aptitude and acquired experience, may be considered debatable by those who care to discuss it. It will be recalled that only a few years ago the establishment of training schools for nurses was opposed on the ground that they would spoil good nurses without making physicians, and that as a "ministering angel" the average woman could not work to advantage with "one eye on a book of rules and the other on the clock." Since then the point of view has changed, and the untrained nurse is the terror of the physician. It may be the time is not far distant that the prudent trustee would no more intrust the executive management of an institution or society organized for philanthropic purposes to a Superintendent without special training than he would build a bridge without the supervision of a competent engineer.

TRAINMEN IN THE SUBWAY.

It is not at all difficult to understand why a man who is out of work and needs a living should be anxious to get employment as a trainman in the subway; but it is very difficult to understand why one who has steady employment on the elevated system should be anxious to exchange it for work under ground, if no better paid and with no surer tenure of employment. For the passenger who wants to get up or down town quickly the fifteen to thirty minutes he will be in the subway count for very little. He is going somewhere in the least time possible, and in a well-lighted car may read his paper and scarcely know whether he is under or above ground. But for the man who must pass ten hours a day in train service, it would seem that almost any employment would be preferable to that in the subway.

It is a safe prediction that within three months a majority of the trainmen who have transferred from the elevated to the underground will be very glad to get back again. It will be an extremely monotonous service, and will lack every element of interest which resides in daylight, sunshine, and the shifting panorama of a change of neighborhoods. It may prove a not wholesome life for those who elect it, and the competition for places in the subway train service may quickly narrow to that among motormen, brakemen, and stationmen who cannot get steady work above ground.

LATE COMERS AT THE THEATRE.

The habit of coming late to the theatre is one which is naturally discussed at the opening of the season, but it cannot be corrected by any amount of talk. To state the obvious proposition that those who come early have rights which those who do not are under obligation to respect would be futile. Furthermore, there is no objection to a ticket holder coming as late as he or she pleases, and there may be a thousand good reasons why it is impossible to arrive on time. But there is great objection to seating late comers during the act then on the stage, and the difficulty could be minimized, if not corrected altogether, by establishing and enforcing the rule that those who come into a theatre after the curtain is up shall wait in the foyer or stand behind the orchestra chairs until the next intermission. It is unreasonable to inconvenience half the audience in a theatre by interposing a standing line of seat holders half way across the auditorium that a belated party may bustle into their seats, remove their overcoats and hats, and finally settle down into inconspicuous quiet, permitting the play to go on.

The same rule should apply to persons who leave the house during intermissions and fail to return before the curtain rises. A little firmness on the part of theatre managers would correct this nuisance, and would be much appreciated by the public.

BIRD OR BUG.

If a bird exists anywhere in the airy or arboreal or aqueous or terrean regions of birdland capable of coping with the boll weevil and arresting its ravages, a renown awaits it superior to that of any winged thing in fact or fable which has ever fluttered its feathers against the blue. If the noted ornithologist Col. ISAAC W. BROWN, who has just gone to Texas in quest of such a fowl, succeeds in finding it he will hang his plain, old-fashioned name in the top notch of celebrity, and Miss HELEN GOULD, who grub stakes him, will add another to her long line of gracious and beneficent deeds, adorning her more than the pearls of her costliest necklace or any of the glittering rosaries of her regalia.

But the salt is not dropped on the tail of that bird yet. It is of the kind whereof one in the hand is worth ten thousand in the bush. Not one has yet been authentically known in any hand; perhaps not one has bent the twig of any bush of forest or chapparal or garden boscage. One can but look; the need is pressing; the Guatemalan ant is a failure, a fiasco, a fraud; has melted out of sight and knowledge, for all the proud flourish of antennae with which it started in. No bird has been more ardently desired since the story of the species began; since the cuckoos hung their city in cloudland to stop the upward streaming flow of incense to the gods; since Simorg, king of birds, according to old Oriental fabulists, first took its place on a mountain top to be the oracle of all its kind forever; since the first phoenix rose out of its ashes; since the roc in the Arabian Nights brought up the beefsteak thrown into the abyss with precious gems clinging to it; since the first stork came slanting down out of heaven bearing its precious burden to the earliest mother. Could it be found it would mark an era in the world's story; two cotton shirts would grow on the back of fellah and roustabout and pariah and slave the wide world over where but one grew before; tides of prosperity would run bankfull in sluiceways of commerce far and near, copious and numerous as the canals of Mars where now is periodical ooze and low water. In short, the great American cotton crop, which last year brought in to its growers hundreds of millions of dollars, would be protected from its deadliest foe, against which there is so far no defense which is to be in any sufficient measure relied on. The best of luck will be wished for the adventurous and hopeful enthusiast who has gone to Texas to look around among its turkey buzzards, ruffed grouse, golden plover, prairie chickens, and other feathered inhabitants and see if he cannot find among them one inclined to adopt the boll weevil as an article of diet; but it will not be judicious to be oversanguine as to his success. In a balance of probabilities the chances are that when the efficient enemy of this destructive insect is found it will be no hen, no fowl acrocephalous or accipitrine; but something in the shape of another insect justifying the Dean of St. Patrick's metrical declaration, freely paraphrased, that:

> Big fleas have little fleas and lesser fleas to bite 'em,
> And these small fleas have smaller fleas, and so ad infinitum.

CALLS FOR COURT-MARTIAL.

Braggadocio and Bad Manners at Bull Run Manoeuvres.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have loked, thus far in vain, for some editorial comment in THE TIMES on your reports of the attitude of certain Southern officers at Bull Run toward the negro troops now there. The advisability of sending them there is not now in question. Apart from the braggadocio of your Marylander and the barbarism of your Texan and the bad manners of the Georgian, what is to be said of the military discipline that can tolerate these threats against another regiment, or company, of the same command?

Is not a court-martial the fitting way of dealing with these military braggarts? And as to the ex-Governor of Georgia, let us hope he is misreported! If not, are we facing another such episode as the chivalrous attack of Brooks on Sumner? "Damn the Yankees" has a rather interesting historical flavor. T.

BRILLIANT WAR DISPATCHES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is not a very great achievement to depict a great battle with tens of thousands slain, in a fashion so picturesque and real, as to make the reader thrill. But to combine the sensational element of the account together with absolute truthfulness, human objectiveness, and intelligent impartiality—this is something which hitherto has been hidden in the regions of Dreamland of Journalism, untrodden not only by common correspondents, but even by the omniscient "military critics" on the editorial staffs of most of our great dailies.

The London Times and THE NEW YORK TIMES have therefore good cause to pride themselves upon to-day's and yesterday's performances by their Liao-Yang correspondent. L. E. MILLER.

Much Learned About Liao-Yang.

From The Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

The special dispatches to The London Times and NEW YORK TIMES from a correspondent with Gen. Oku's army in the recent battle of Liao-Yang throw much light upon the fighting which resulted in Kuropatkin's retreat. With this story, written from the Japanese side, at hand, our knowledge of the respective size of the opposing forces, their respective losses, and the object of the Japanese commander, is considerably increased.

TO END SECTIONALISM.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In his speech before the Democratic editors at the Waldorf-Astoria banquet last night the Hon. Clark Howell, editor of The Atlanta Constitution, said:

From that text I want to preach a little sermon to the "New South" through your columns. First, let me emphatically declare that no party, no individual, is holding open the breach of sectionalism between North and South. But that wound is kept gaping by the continual stand, shoulder to shoulder, of the all-powerful elements of the South—true sons of their ancestors—who are to-day voting as their fathers and grandfathers voted fifty and one hundred years ago. There is not a live plank in the political platform of the Southern Democracy to-day. It makes no difference to it whether the party in its National campaign stands upon a gold or a silver plank; whether it is for or against this principle or that. All that the New South wants on its National ballot is a rooster surmounting the grand old name, "Democratic Ticket." The solid electoral vote of every former slave State is cast for that name only.

So long as that condition exists just so long will sectionalism between North and South remain. When some of the old "solid South" States shall break away from that phantom and cast their electoral votes for some other than the Democratic ticket, then and not until then can this Nation hope for the utter annihilation of the sectionalism bred by slavery. I care not what ticket they vote, whether it be Populist, or Prohibition, or Republican, or some other. But the North will never believe in the sincerity of the South's plea for an obliteration of sectionalism so long as the South itself stands up a solid phalanx and votes every four years simply as its fathers and forefathers voted.

Let just one State break away and see how quick the North is to recognize that the bar of sectionalism is broken down forever. P. E. BISSELL.

POPULATION OF FRANCE.

Interesting Phases of a Very Serious Problem.

From The London Standard.

PARIS, Aug. 27.—Although the official results of the General Census taken in 1901 have not yet been published, M. Levasseur of the Institute and Director of the College of France, has had the outlines communicated to him, and has drawn up an interesting statement concerning the general results.

In 1901 the total number of the inhabitants of France was 38,961,945; in 1896 the figures were 38,517,332. But although an increase of 444,613 souls is thus shown, M. Levasseur is careful to point out that this is probably fictitious, the returns of the births and deaths for the period showing that the excess of births over deaths had been only 220,042 souls. Compared with a previous census, when the deaths exceeded the births, the results of the 1901 census are more satisfactory, although, when the figures are placed against those of any other European nation, it is at once apparent that the birth rate in France is far below the general average, and that all other nations are increasing more rapidly. M. Levasseur remarks that at the commencement of the nineteenth century the decrease in population was confined to certain regions in Normandy, the valley of the Garonne, and the mountainous districts of Central France. Not only have these centres increased in extent, but new ones have sprung up, notably in the Ain and Champagne districts.

Of 86 departments and one military territory, that of Belfort, there are only 19 departments in which the population tends to increase. These 19 departments are all adjacent to the Seine Province, which includes the capital; or they possess a large town, or are close to the frontier, and receive a large foreign influx. The increase in the population is confined to the towns only. France possesses 37 cities with over 50,000 inhabitants, and since 1896 the population has increased in 31 of them. It is the same in the smaller towns, but in the country districts the old aversion to large families not only prevails but would seem to be increasing.

From The Philadelphia Record.

A New York man whose business has recently called him to Philadelphia was yesterday discussing the problem that confronted him of securing a home for himself and family. "Philadelphia is called the 'City of Homes,'" he said, "and yet I can't get suited. My wife and I have always been accustomed to living in a flat. We don't want a house. We haven't the furniture to fit it up. Yes, you have a few flats in Philadelphia, but what are they like? They are such as we would pay about $25 a month for in New York, yet here in Philadelphia, where rents are supposed to be cheap, they ask from $50 to $75 for apartments that in New York wouldn't be tolerated, even up in Harlem. The man who wants a housekeeping flat in Philadelphia at a reasonable rent is up against it. After a thorough investigation of the ground, I am sure that there isn't any such thing in Philadelphia."

Wages, Forsooth!

From Brooklyn Life.

Mrs. Annet—I'll tell you what I'll do, Bridget. If you'll consent to stay I'll raise your wages.

Bridget—Listen to her, wud ye? Raise me wages, indade! Ye'll increase me salary, that's phwat ye'll do.

Untimely Somnolence.

From The Philadelphia Press.

"He says he has so many business troubles they keep him awake nights."

"Yes, but they don't keep him wideawake during business hours, and that's his principal trouble."

POLITICAL APATHY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your criticism of the leaders of the Democratic Party is just, but I think it applies to all and everybody, even including Republican Party managers. There exists great apathy everywhere throughout the body politic this Fall, an apathy which does not argue well for the future of the Republic. There is a lack of harmony between the leaders of both parties. The Republican managers are not satisfied as a whole—they are not satisfied with their candidate—whom they have been compelled to nominate, being limited in their choice to him—a man who has manifested at times ideas and impulses dangerous to the equilibrium of constitutional Republican government; a man whose strenuousness threatens the peace of the world. The people of this Nation have not, it may be, grasped a true conception of its present place among the other nations as a consequence of its conquests outside its constitutional and geographical limits, and even if they have—many of them—they fear to assume the requirement of acts lest they affect injuriously the free institutions here established, or involve the Nation in a war requiring a large navy and the recruiting of a large army, involving, in fact, the morale of the whole people.

They fear that the man Roosevelt is ready to guide this Nation out on the ocean in a mad endeavor for the mastership of the world. They are not ready to back him in any such undertaking, and yet they doubt Parker's competency to take the helm.

If he could convince them that he is, they would be much more enthusiastic than they are for a change. They are aware that the United States is not where it was before the Spanish war. The results accruing to it through that war must not be lost. The opportunities which those results have given the Nation must be employed advantageously. What has been done in the Asiatic possessions must not be neutralized or rendered non-effective. They will run the risks that Roosevelt's election involves rather than trust the affairs of the Nation to an Administration that will return it to the status of antelucem times.

There is no doubt danger involved in the election of Don Quixotes, but there is also danger in returning to the old Chinese exclusiveness, which, up to the Spanish war, distinguished us.

There is a necessity that effort shall be made to put the legislative branch of the Government back into possession of its power, though that cannot be done without reducing the number of Representatives to a working limit. Until such is effected, the executive department must be ruled by a man who will measure up to the need of all exigencies as they arise, and they are likely to arise in the future any moment. Such cannot be dealt with by Congress without great evils resulting—especially Congress as now constituted, for constituted as it is it is unable to take at any time a necessary initiative. If we thought that we could trust Parker with this tremendous necessity we would gladly vote for him.

We are in a dilemma and are hesitant—yea, apathetic—is it the apathy of despair?

THE 72D STREET STATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your correspondent "West Sider" is right as to the station at Seventy-second Street. It is not only a miserable monstrosity as to architecture, but it is a danger point that has few equals. A person going east across the sidewalk in front cannot see approaching cars from the south until he is ready to take a step from the curb, which step lands him on the track of the trolley cars.

Compressed Air Plants for Tunnel.

S. Pearson & Son, Incorporated, who are building the Pennsylvania Railroad tunnels under the East River and Long Island City, have awarded the contract for two complete compressed air power plants, ready to operate, to the Ingersoll-Sergeant Drill Company of New York. The order includes eight low-pressure Corliss compressors and four high-pressure compressors, with the necessary boilers, condensers, pumps, and an elaborate system of piping. The same company recently secured an order from the O'Rourke Engineering and Construction Company for two compressed air power plants to be used in building the Pennsylvania Railroad tunnel under the Hudson River.

Talma on Balloons.

From The London Chronicle.

An interesting old letter dated 1784 has recently come to light, in which Talma, the French tragedian, discusses the future of balloons. At that period aeronauts were regarded as strange folk, but few people could resist the fascination of a voyage through the air, expensive and dangerous though it was. Talma remarks in this letter that "We are promised many advantages through the means of these balloonists. The most distant objects will be presented to the mind of the traveler almost in a glance. Where will it lead us? To the moon? They speak of a world in that planet. What vast fields are opening before us!"

THE TAG-HUNTERS' FAIR GOING.

Evangeline with trade-marks cut from Grafter's Shredded Rope;
When Margaret gets wrappers from a hundred thousand bars
Of Grandma's Washing Wonder she will board the choo-choo cars.
Fair Deborah cuts coupons from Aunt Dinah's Garden Sass,
Two hundred thousand catsup corks care Margery a pass,
A half a million sardine cans win Evaline a trip,
And Sarah's saving trademarks from the Sox-that-Neverrip.

Maria's saving pickle jars, Sophia's saving tags,
Rebecca's clipping coupons from the back of wheat flour bags,
Belinda's counting labels cut from Bocum-em's Coffee Tins,
And Arabella's one chance lies in Scalem's Sausage-skins.
The house is treasure trove with cans, corks, coupons, labels, tags,
With tins, stamps, trademarks, wrappers, bottles, boxes, bands, and bags,
From basement floor to attic roof the place is stored with trash,
For they are saving everything unless it may be cash.

They've set apart a day for folks who go to the Fair on tags,
Corks, coupons, wrappers, labels, boxes, trademarks, bands, and bags;
From East and West, from North and South the tag-brigade will march,
With labels cut from soap, gum, flour, tea, coffee, prunes, and starch;
But, woe is me! I have a fear not one of them will see
The harvest of world wonders there displayed for you and me,
For interest in such displays, however gorgeous flags

J. W. FOLEY.

"BOSS" JAMES FARLEY, KING STRIKE BREAKER

The Man Who Has Developed the Business to a Science.

HIS FIGHT-LOVING 600 MEN

No "Quitter" in the Picked "Bunch" That Came Here for Elevated Strike —Their Strange Freemasonry.

When an elevated railroad strike in Manhattan seemed not far from probability the other day the daily accounts of the trouble contained references to "James Farley and his crowd of strike breakers." What the union men said was, however, that "Boss Farley and his bunch had blown into town." The union men knew Farley and his methods a great deal better than the general public.

Although Farley has been breaking strikes for ten years he lays no claim to having invented the business. Strike breaking has grown out of modern industrial conditions. But he has earned the title as a "Captain of Industry" all the same, for he has reduced strike breaking to a beautiful and effective system.

To look at Farley out of real action one would not think that he was a man of such strenuous pursuits as strike breaking of necessity is. No more mild mannered man ever broke a strike. Farley in repose looks as if he might have been an evangelist. He is tall and of spare build, a little bent, with a kindly face and a soft, well modulated voice. There is a filmy depth to his blue eyes which at first sight would suggest the dreamer and religious enthusiast rather than the practical man of affairs. The only features in his appearance that fit in with his militant trade are a pair of black bushy eyebrows and a big drooping, raven mustache.

Those who know Farley, however, declare there is another side to the man. He did not have an opportunity to show New York his fighting face this time. But there was a moment last week when considerations of discipline necessitated stern and drastic talk and manners to suit for some members of his gathering band, and then people who were present had an opportunity to see what Farley would have looked like if, after his custom, he had mounted the front platform of the first car sent out to break a strike. His face looked like a storm cloud, and the filmy curtains in his eyes were raised for a minute to reveal a steely glitter and a few flashes of lightning; but that was only for a moment, for it never takes him longer to restore discipline among his men.

Not less interesting than their leader are the members of "Farley's Bunch." They number some 600, and Farley proudly asserts that there is not a "quitter" among them. They are a strange crew, who blow together with all the four winds of heaven the moment there is trouble, and after it is all over disappear as quickly as they came. All of them are experienced railroad men, and they have been selected with a special view to physical courage and staying qualities.

"Courage and a strong skeleton is what I look for in selecting my men," said Boss Farley to a TIMES reporter last week.

"Farley's Bunch" have often been referred to as the "Strike Breakers' Union." That is a misnomer. Yet Farley has a form of freemasonry by which he contrives to keep up among them a kind of organization that enables him to get them together at a moment's notice any time that an emergency arises, despite the fact that they are scattered all over the country.

The strike breakers are organized to the extent of keeping themselves constantly posted on one another's movements. In every big city in the country there are quite a number of them peacefully at work on street railways, and some in other callings in the intervals between hurry calls from their "boss." In each city Farley has a captain, with whom he keeps in constant touch. This Captain in his turn is in touch with the men who live in his community. Occasionally they have little reunions.

"During the nine years I have been in the strike breaking business," said Farley, in discussing this feature, "I have had at various times on my payroll some 30,000 or 40,000 men, all of whom I could call upon now in the case of a pressing emergency, though they are scattered all over the country. Among these there are 600 or 700 men whom I call my own men. Nobody can get a place among them unless he has been vouched for by another member. Whenever there is trouble I will send for those men wherever they may happen to be, and pay their fare to the strike centre. I can reach them at a minute's notice at any time.

"They are a peculiar lot of men, too. They are in no sense of the word adventurers or riff-raff. All of them are experienced railroad men, who are earning good salaries all the year round. It is not the money I offer them, though that is bigger than they usually earn, which is the inducement. I pay some of my men as much as $20 and $25 a day during a strike, but that is hardly compensation enough to make a man risk his life several times a day. It is a spirit of adventure rather than anything else that actuates them, and it is quite remarkable how far a man will travel in this country to get into a fight or to a place where there is some excitement going on. I never have any difficulty to keep my men together as long as there is excitement, but the moment things begin to calm down and the situation becomes commonplace I find it harder hard task."

Among "Farley's Own" there are men who once upon a time were fanatics in upholding union principles and fighting for them to the extent of physical violence and damage to property in times of trouble. Then when, as often has been the case, they found themselves sold out by their leaders and left high and dry after a strike was over, they enlisted with the Farley cohorts, and the boss has always found these men among the most efficient on his staff. There are some college men, two physicians, several ex-football players, and one former circus performer in the Farley crowd.

They rejoice to have stood shoulder to shoulder in meeting dangers as great as those of the battlefield, and in talking about it. Whenever these men hear the strike signal ring, they hurry in to report to Farley and then start for the scene of trouble on the first train as gladly as though they were going to a veterans' reunion. In one single day while the elevated troubles lasted Farley got not fewer than eighty-one telegrams, representing some 600 men who had worked under him before.

Farley had his first taste of strike breaking during the trolley strike in Brooklyn in 1895. Since then Farley has been in every big street-railway strike in the country. In the last two years he has figured in twenty-nine strikes, and at one time a year ago had 4,400 men on his payroll.

"The principal thing in breaking a strike is to get the cars running," said Farley, "and to keep them running. The trouble in most strikes has been that the men engaged to take the strikers' places quit as soon as things begin to grow hot. This encourages violence. If you can get men who know how to handle cars and who can be depended upon to stay at work no matter what comes along, you have the strike won."

But Farley, according to his friends, has averted as many strikes as he has broken.

"I am not an enemy of labor unions," said Farley yesterday. "I have made up my mind never to go into a strike where labor, no matter of what grade, is paid less than $2 or $2.25 a day. Public opinion would not tolerate such a strike. Most of the strikes in which I have figured have been brought about by union domination or crookedness or on questions of discipline, where, for instance, a drunken union man is discharged, and that is used as an excuse for his fellows to strike."

Between his strike-breaking expeditions Farley lives quietly on his farm in the Adirondacks. He started without 5 cents to his name ten years ago. By this time he has contrived to get together a comfortable competency. His hobby is trotting horses. He has a string of fourteen of them on his farm.

Daniel Wetherbee is something of a poet. He is also a chauffeur. Crossing the Brooklyn Bridge in the gray dawn of yesterday, manipulating a forty-four horse power automobile, he could not suppress the poetry. Without turning his head, he addressed the seven merrymakers with whom he had been jaunting through Coney Island.

"Great!" said Daniel with enthusiasm. "See that river spangled as far as the eye can reach with the lights that keep vigil o'er the city still asleep."

No answer.

No reply.

"Holy Coney Island!" ejaculated Daniel Wetherbee. "Where—where—wh-where's the bunch?"

There was only one soul in the big automobile which, when it nosed in at the Brooklyn end of the bridge, had contained seven other persons—five guests and two hosts. The one left was the chauffeur.

Two of the passengers—the hosts—had hired the auto from Wetherbee's employer, James D. Dorsey, who keeps an automobile stable in West Fiftieth Street, on the previous night. One of the hosts had represented himself as "B. Davis, famous Western jockey." The two wanted the biggest automobile—cost no object. They picked up five guests, and all seven had had a glorious time at Coney Island. Daniel sadly reported the facts to his employer. Apparently, he said, they had jumped from the bridge while he was poetizing. He had collected no money for it all either.

Yesterday afternoon, however, he encountered two men, who, he says, were the "hosts," at Thirty-eighth Street and Broadway. On Wetherbee's complaint the two men, who said they were Harry Bard and Walter Watson, (who Wetherbee says is "B. Davis,") were arrested.

POOR BRADY LOST HIS TEETH.

When Henry, the bridge cleaner, met Barney, the sweeper, yesterday, Barney told him that Brady, the cop, had lost his teeth on the outing of the bridge policemen at Canarsie on Friday of last week.

"Last week I finded three pair of teeth on der bridge," said Henry. "Mebbe Prady vill buy one; vhat?"

"No," said Barney, "Brady's a man who wouldn't use other people's teeth to bite his way through the boordin' house. So as he hasn't bought a new set, the boordin' mistress has him beaten be a week's boord, as he can't ate. Listen, and I'll read a poem I writ about it:

The coppers on th' Brooklyn Bridge an outing had last week;
Among thim was Tim Brady, who, since Friday, cannot speak.
They entered Brady in a match to swim Jamaica Bay
Whin the swimmin' match had started up below Canarsie shore
Then there followed great excitement, and it looked like Murphy's wreath,
For suddenly poor Brady stopped and gasped: "I've lost me teeth!"
A dozen men wid boats and hooks who'd heard Tim Brady scream,
Jumped helter-skelter from the pier and started up the stream;
They rowed and rowed like coppers row who never rowed before,
Then up spoke Roundsman Farrell shouting orders to the men
To row across to Rockaway and then row back again.
McNally, he's a roundsman, too, he yelled to Roundsman Tighe:
"If Murphy don't save Brady's teeth poor Brady's gerl'll die!"
Forninst an island far away—they call it Ruffle Bar—
A fish rose from the wather wid a head as black as tar;
Its swordfish tail was full of teeth, the sort that Brady lost,
The kind that niver ache or pain, I don't know what they cost;
But Gude and Terry Curley were the first to spy the tail,
They shouted that Tim Brady's teeth was swallowed by a whale.
So Brady started swimmin' back to climb upon the dock,
His mouth was opened widely for his jawbones wouldn't lock;
He called for pen and paper and he then wrote out a yarn,
Beginning it, "Me teeth were false," and ending it, "They're gone."
He told a doleful story, in advance he paid his board,
And said to git his teeth back sure he'd give a large reward.
Then up jumped Michael Roderick and sprang into the sea,
Diving down to bottom where McGinty takes his tea.
But he came back widout the teeth and ended up the search,
And when the bell for dinner rang they left Tim in the lurch.
So now poor Timmy Brady's friends has offered a reward

"Dot's fine," said Henry, when Barney had finished. "But if I lost my teeth I vouldn't buy none; I'd vait until I got my second teeth again."

"Then ye'd have to wait till ye got yer second childhood," remarked Barney, and Henry replied:

"I ain't got my first yet."

OVERDO IT WITH McADOO.

Lax Discipline Story Upsets Visit to the Brooklyn Police.

The somnolent atmosphere that is peculiar to Linoleumville and to Brooklyn Police Headquarters was suddenly disturbed in the latter place by the frantic ring of a telephone bell. A moment later somnolence gave place to panic when the news was whispered through the building that Commissioner McAdoo was coming. A Manhattan policeman had tipped off the raid.

Immediately every man in every branch of the Brooklyn Headquarters awoke. The leaves of the rubber plants were cleansed of Summer's dust and carefully watered. Detectives pulled out old documents and ran up and down the stairs and from room to room waving papers.

It was into this beehive of activity that Commissioner McAdoo burst on his surprise visit. His face expressed satisfaction with the industry and energy of Brooklyn officials. The Commissioner smiled upon all and everything, and Brooklyn Headquarters felt pleased—so pleased with itself that one of the Sergeants undertook to tell a good joke on one of the other Sergeants.

This particular Sergeant lived in East New York and chewed a special brand of tobacco, which was procurable only in the vicinity of "the loop." He had left home that morning without a single "quid" in his vest pocket; had tried a sample of Fulton Street chew and had gone back to East New York in disgust to get a chew of his own brand.

Commissioner McAdoo was all smiles at the beginning of the story, but as it progressed his smiles became sickly, and presently his face took on the shade of the sea with a squall on the horizon. The laugh of the other officials at the end of the story had no exclamation mark to it, for the air had suddenly grown oppressive.

For the rest of his visit the Commissioner was unusually preoccupied and appeared to pay little attention to the remarkable energy of the detectives who tore through the building waving documents that looked like real business. The Commissioner had a look at one, and after noting that the date on it was 1897, he got into his automobile with a real hurricane depicted on his countenance.

Back in the building sat the Sergeant who had told the "chew" story, his head buried in his arms in an agony of remorse.

"Everything was going fine," concluded Brooklyn Headquarters after a lengthy harangue, "when you come in and spoil everything with a lax discipline yarn. You should have told him a story about a chug chariot or a pet rubber plant. That always goes with McAdoo."

MGR. GIBBONS'S ANSWER IN WAGGAMAN MUDDLE

INSTITUTION NOT PREFERRED

Property Turned Over Belonged to It in Equity—New Suits Further Complicate the Situation.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 10.—The answer of the Catholic University in the bankruptcy proceedings against Thomas E. Waggaman was filed to-day. It was sworn to by Cardinal Gibbons. The answer denies that the transfer of Woodley Park to the university was intended to prefer the university over other creditors and asks that the petition in bankruptcy be dismissed.

The answer then enters on a carefully prepared history of the trust imposed in Waggaman and his method of investing the funds of the institution. The sum of $876,-168.96 of university funds was deposited with Mr. Waggaman, who was its Treasurer, for investment. The interest was promptly paid. In the latter part of 1903 Mr. Waggaman was called on to deliver the securities to the university, and in May, 1904, a special committee representing the university called on Mr. Waggaman for the purpose of having him give additional security for the funds intrusted to him.

Mr. Waggaman stated to the committee that the securities were ample, and in answer to Michael Jenkins of Baltimore, a member of the special committee, he said that his financial condition was excellent and his assets would overbalance all his liabilities by $1,000,000.

When asked as to the use made of the money received from the university, Mr. Waggaman answered that nearly all had been used in acquiring and developing suburban property and in recent improvement on Woodley Park. Charles J. Bonaparte, a member of the committee, then suggested that the title to property made more valuable by the use of the university's money should be vested, as a matter of good conscience and equity, in the university, or in some one who would hold the title for its benefit, as the university, in his opinion, was already the equitable owner.

To this Mr. Waggaman objected on the ground that a conveyance or large trust, as would be necessary in this case, would have a tendency to embarrass financially any business man in Washington, and he asked time to consider.

Mr. Waggaman finally agreed to give the trust, on condition that it be not recorded until ninety days after July 13, 1904, claiming that within that period he would be able to pay off a large part, if not all, of his debts to the university. It was agreed that the trust should be recorded prior to the expiration of the ninety days if by suits or otherwise Mr. Waggaman's financial condition should be impaired.

The university received the trust as an additional security for its debt without any notice, anticipation, or knowledge of Mr. Waggaman's financial embarrassment or of impending insolvency or bankruptcy proceedings to be brought against him, with the positive assurance his estate was worth $1,000,000 over his liabilities.

As no act of bankruptcy other than this conveyance is alleged by the petitioning banks, the answer declares, the bankruptcy proceedings should be dismissed.

Soon after the filing of the university's answer the Columbia National Bank filed a petition for the appointment of receiver in the third case.

The case is now so seriously complicated that tenants who pay rent to Waggaman are refusing to make payments, and the business of his office, one of the largest in Washington, is paralyzed. Attorneys who are in the case predict Waggaman will be obliged to file a voluntary petition in bankruptcy.

ARTHUR BYRON'S NEW ROLE.

Charles Frohman has engaged Arthur Byron as leading man for Maude Adams. He will make his first appearance in "The Little Minister," in Miss Adams's special tour of the South, which will begin Oct. 13.

Mr. Byron has been in "Jack's Little Surprise" for the last few weeks. This play left the Princess Theatre last night. Though he made a personal success in it, the play itself did not take. For two or three seasons Mr. Byron was leading man for Mary Mannering. For a brief spell—a very brief one—he tried his fortunes as a star in Clyde Fitch's play "Major André." This drama's short run at the Savoy Theatre last season is a sad bit of stage history now. As suddenly as he had become a star the popular actor left the Milky Way and became a leading man again. Since then his name has not appeared in electric lights on Broadway.

SCHOOL BOARD APPEALS TO BUILDING TRADES

Asks Employers and Unions to Make Exceptions.

CITES DELAY ON CONTRACTS

Only 16,200 New Sittings Out of 92,985 Engaged Will Be Ready for Opening To-morrow.

Richard H. Adams, Chairman of the Committee on Buildings of the Board of Education, has sent to President Charles L. Edditz of the Employers' Association and President William R. Nason of the Building Trades Alliance a letter, in which he states that out of a total of 92,985 new sittings contracted for in all boroughs but 16,200 will be ready to-morrow. The Board expects, Mr. Adams states, that 24,975 additional sittings will be ready by Feb. 1, some 50 per cent. of which are on contracts that have already expired, and estimates that in all probability 100,000 children will be in part-time classes when school begins.

On the basis of these facts, he makes the following appeal:

"We take the liberty of making an urgent appeal to you to make an exception in the case of public school buildings and allow work to proceed on them. The percentage of contracts of this nature, as compared to the whole amount, both public and private in the whole city, is so small that we do not see how it can effect the principal that either you or the labor organizations are striving for. We ask you to make this exception in the name of the thousands of children of our city who must otherwise get imperfect training, or, in some instances, find great difficulty in getting into the schools at all.

"There is no department of the city that reaches so many homes, and certainly no one that so much benefits both the employer and the employe, and on that account we are addressing on somewhat similar letter to the labor organizations, asking them to see if they cannot confer with you and unite on some basis that will permit work to continue on contracts for school buildings."

When a copy of Mr. Adams's letter was read to leading members of the Employers' Association yesterday afternoon the following general statement was made:

"We do not see why such an appeal is necessary, as far as we are concerned. The Employers' Association has always notified its contractors to raise the lock-out on any schools where they had contracts, in case of emergency, and have put their men to work. No school work is held up through the trouble between the association and the unions. Sometimes when the lock-out has been suspended on schools and the men put to work, the walking delegates have come around and ordered the men on strike. In such cases all we could do was to put new men on.

"We do not think it good policy, on the eve of a settlement, for the School Board to send out such an appeal. Its tendency just now would be to retard rather than hasten a settlement."

President Nason of the Building Trades Alliance was not at the alliance headquarters yesterday. John Crowe, walking delegate of the Plasterers' Union, said when told of the letter:

"In all probability Mr. Nason will submit the letter to the board for action on Monday. We all realize the importance of completing the schools and if the employers meet us half way we are always ready to do what we can."

CHASING SCHOOL JANITORS.

Occupation of District Boards Just Now —Even Death Not Reported.

In order that the schools may be in readiness for the half million of pupils to-morrow, the members of the various District School Boards have been out in force for the past few days rounding up janitors, 600 of whom are employed by the Department of Education. This is a departure and has been made necessary by the system now in vogue for keeping track of the school tenders.

During the last week it has been demonstrated that a janitor can be dead for a month without news of his dying reaching headquarters. Janitor Frank White of Public School No. 36, Brooklyn, was the janitor who illustrated the point. He died on Aug. 16. No word was sent to the Building Department of the Board of Education, and the first intimation that Supervisor Devoe received that there was anything amiss was when his mail brought him a number of applications for the place.

"When I receive applications for a man's job," he explained yesterday, "I usually begin to think that it is about time to hunt up the man and what's the matter with him. I don't blame a man for not dropping in here and reporting his death. I do blame his family for not notifying me. Almost invariably they let the matter go until after the next succeeding pay day. I have determined to revive a by-law of the Board of Education which once provided that janitors shall report here every month and register. During the Winter, Principals inform us quickly enough when anything happens to their janitors, but in the Summer I have no way of keeping track of my men."

GOT COFFIN HE DIDN'T NEED.

Indian Chief Blew Himself to Bits with Gunpowder.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 10.—An Indian chief at Bella Bella sent an order to a local firm a short time ago for a coffin. From another firm he ordered a keg of gunpowder. The keg of powder was taken into the chief's house and carefully placed under his bed.

Last night the inhabitants of the village were startled by a terrific explosion and found the chief's house had been blown into atoms. Small fragments of the body of the unfortunate chief were found in the débris. It is thought to have been a case of deliberate suicide.

SAYS EDHELM WASN'T SUICIDE.

Father-in-Law Hires Counsel, Will Spare No Expense to Prove It.

Special to The New York Times.

LARCHMONT, N. Y., Sept. 10.—John R. Hall, the father-in-law of Erik Lars Didrik Edhelm, who was killed by a New Haven Railroad train on Thursday evening at the Larchmont Station, announced to-day that he would spare no expense to prove that his son-in-law did not commit suicide.

Mr. Hall retained ex-Judge John J. Crennan of New Rochelle to look after the interests of the family. Coroner Wiesendanger was to have held the inquest this morning, but it was postponed until Monday at Judge Crennan's request. A half dozen yachtsmen were present from Larchmont to swear that Mr. Edhelm had been suffering from heart failure, and had complained of an attack only a few hours before he went down to the railroad station. The engineer and fireman of the train told the Coroner that they were of the opinion that Mr. Edhelm could have saved himself had he desired to do so. Edhelm had an accident policy for $10,000. The funeral was held this afternoon.

Valuable Rings Lost at Savoy Hotel.

It became known yesterday that Mrs. Anna Schwab, wife of Leo Schwab, importer, of 74 East Ninety-first Street, while in the Hotel Savoy on Friday, lost two valuable rings. She left them on the edge of a table where she had been sitting, and when she discovered her loss, about an hour later, they had been picked by some one. Mrs. Schwab advertised her loss yesterday and offered a liberal reward. One of the rings was a three-karat diamond engagement ring and the other a cluster ring. They are valued at $1,500.

POLICE CLOSE THEATRE.

Captain Thinks Marionette Playhouse Didn't Observe Fire Laws.

The Cherry Street Theatre, at 94 Cherry Street, opened for the season last night, but before the performance had gone far the place was ordered closed by Capt. Hodgins of the Oak Street Police Station. The little theatre, which seats about 500, is patronized exclusively by Italians; the entertainment invariably consists of marionette performances.

The theatre had a regular license, but the Captain thought that all the requirements of the Fire Department had not been complied with and ordered the performance stopped and the place closed until the necessary alterations had been made. The place was well filled, but the management promptly refunded the money which had been paid at the door, and the audience passed out without any trouble.

WATER DISPUTE UP AGAIN.

New Move to Review Assessments on Croton Property.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Sept. 10.—Ten writs of certiorari were filed to-day in the Westchester County Clerk's office, signed by Justice D. Cady Herrick, in Brooklyn, against the Assessors of ten towns in Westchester and Putnam Counties.

The writs were procured by the City of New York to review the assessment upon the city property in the Croton water shed. The counties have assessed against the city in the sum of $4,900,000. Corporation Counsel Delany excepts to an assessment of $3,700,000 on the superstructures on the city's property.

The proceedings have been brought to protect the city's assessment this year pending the decision of the higher courts on the appeal upon the writs of certiorari obtained in June, which were dismissed.

LAUNCHING OF NEW BATTLESHIP CONNECTICUT WILL MARK NEW ERA IN AMERICAN NAVAL CONSTRUCTION

The Fourth of Her Name to Fly the Stars and Stripes, She Is Declared by Foreign Expert to be the Superior of Any Vessel Afloat or in Construction—A Race for Completion.

Third Connecticut, 1861.

W. J. Baxter, U. S. N.

THE Connecticut, one of five sister ships, the greatest vessels in size and fighting strength ever constructed for the United States Navy, will be named amid impressive ceremonies at the New York Navy Yard on the 29th of this month. The time for the initial plunge of this, the second armored vessel to be built in the waters of New York City, will be 11 o'clock, on the stroke of which hour, if the plans do not miscarry, Miss Alice Welles, a granddaughter of Gideon Welles of Connecticut, Lincoln's Secretary of the Navy, will break across the ship's red painted bow the traditional bottle of champagne. Miss Welles is a daughter of Edgar T. Welles of 247 Fifth Avenue, Vice President of the Wabash Railroad.

The launching of the Connecticut is of special interest owing to the fact that the time necessary to construct her will form a basis of comparison with the time taken to build the Louisiana, a sister ship, launched a month ago at Newport News, and it can be said with reasonable certainty that should the Naval Constructors who are pushing the work on the great vessel named after the Nutmeg State succeed in overcoming the month's handicap the Louisiana builders now enjoy, and the Connecticut be the first of the two to go into commission, many more vessels of great size and powerful fighting qualities will be built in the yards of the United States Navy.

The new Connecticut is the fourth war vessel of that name to fly the American flag.

A Provision Ship.

During the civil war a steamer bearing this name, armed and fitted for active warfare if necessary, was employed throughout that struggle to carry fresh provisions to distant points on the blockade. This was a mission of peculiar necessity, for it was at a time when the modern methods of preserving meat and provisions were almost unknown. Our warships, stationed at various points of the blockade, extending some 3,000 miles on the enemy's coast, were unable to obtain fresh provisions through the ordinary channels, and were supplied by the steamers Rhode Island and Connecticut, which all through the war ran back and forth from Northern ports to the blockading stations, (even as far as Galveston, Texas,) bringing fresh supplies besides the mails, and taking back prisoners and the sick and wounded. It was a service of great importance to the cause.

But, besides this, they were sometimes called upon to take part in the sterner work of war, such as chasing blockade runners or Confederate cruisers, or engaging in bombardments. The memory of other warships in that great struggle may fade and pass away, but never those of the plucky provision and mail ships Rhode Island and Connecticut, which always brought good cheer and welcome news to the weary blockaders.

Sloop of War.

In our naval war against France, 1798-1801, one of our most active sloops-of-war was the Connecticut, a war craft built expressly to repress French encroachments on our commerce. The Parley Vous in those days had an unpleasant habit of picking up any little thing in the line of a Yankee ship he happened to meet on the high seas and, taking her to a French port, appropriating her and all contained therein for the benefit of his own exchequer. After some forty to sixty of our merchant ships had been seized in this gentle manner, Uncle Sam got mad, built a fleet of some twenty-five warships, and gave the Frenchman a lesson he never forgot. The Connecticut was one of these new warships, and for more than two years she cruised in the West Indies and greatly aided in protecting American commerce. On the cessation of hostilities she was sold, with most of the ships in the new navy, and became a commonplace merchant ship.

Eluding the British.

But even before this there was a Connecticut in the United States Navy which took part in the first fleet action in which our Nation was engaged. She was a small vessel on Lake Champlain, and formed part of the squadron under the command of Gen. Arnold, which had a three days' fight with the English fleet of twenty-five vessels under the command of Capt. Pringle of the Royal Navy, the American squadron numbering only fifteen craft. The battle began near Plattsburg early in the morning, Oct. 11, 1776, and by dark it was a drawn fight. Finding that he was contending against hopeless odds, Arnold, under cover of night, stole through the British fleet and made his way down the lake. The British did not discover the flight until daylight Oct. 12, and spent the rest of that day in chasing the Americans. It was not until noon of the 13th that they again came within gunshot, and then began another battle, in which the remaining American ships were destroyed or scattered. Although the Americans were finally defeated in this action, they inflicted such heavy losses on the enemy and had so retarded their progress that the English were obliged to give up their attempted invasion of New York from the Canada line.

Such having been the highly creditable records of preceding Connecticuts in the United States Navy, the true-blue salt can look forward with no fear of ill-luck to service in that mighty battleship Connecticut, soon to be launched from the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

The Present Connecticut.

The present Connecticut is one of two first-class battleships authorized by Congress and approved July 1, 1902, the act providing that one of the vessels should be built at a Government yard, to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and the other to be constructed by one of the leading private yards. The Secretary of the Navy named the New York Navy Yard as the place where the Connecticut should be built, and the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company of Newport News, Va., won the contract for building the Louisiana. The limit of cost in the case of each vessel, exclusive of armor, was $4,212,000. The Newport News made a bid of $3,990,000 for the Louisiana, agreeing to deliver the vessel complete and ready for service in the line of the navy by the 15th of March, 1906.

From the first announcement of the places of construction the rivalry between the Government constructors and the Newport News yard has been of the keenest. It was realized by both sides that the winner of the competition as to which could do the work quickest and most thoroughly, would, to a great extent, determine the future procedure of the Navy Department at Washington. As the contest stands today the private yard is a little over four weeks in advance of the Government, but this is easily explained, and there are officers of the navy who are a unit in saying that the men in charge of the Connecticut at New York will yet overhaul the Virginians, and that the Louisiana will be the second, and not the first of the sister ships, to go into commission.

In order to explain the advantage the Newport News Yard enjoys it is only necessary to say that when the New York Navy Yard was designated as the place of construction for the Connecticut that yard was totally unprepared for the job. However, no time was lost and steps were immediately taken to prepare the yard for the work in hand. The only vessel of any size ever built in the New York Yard prior to the laying down of the Connecticut was the ill-fated armored cruiser Maine, of 6,682 tons, which was constructed on the old granite slip, from which many of the famous old wooden vessels of the navy of years ago were launched. The size and capacity of this slip was totally inadequate for the building of a vessel of the Connecticut's dimensions, and the result was that a new ship had to be built and a contract for an electric cantilever crane let. All this required time, and when at last the preliminary work was done and the laying of the keel of the new fighter begun the Louisiana was already a month on her way to completion. Once the work began, however, there was no delay, and Naval Constructor W. J. Baxter, who is the Chief Constructor in charge of the work, has bent every energy to overtake the Louisiana people, but so far without success, although he has succeeded in holding his own and prevented the contractors in Hampton Roads from increasing the lead they so early obtained and have since so tenaciously held.

Making Progress.

On March 10 of last year the keel of the battleship was laid. Four months and two weeks later the stem was erected, and eight months later the first armor was placed on board. Two months ago the first boiler was installed, and a little over a week ago the first section of one of the two great conning towers was placed in position. Now only the work preliminary to the launching remains. The great ship as she now lies on the ways, with her bright red painted hull and the great openings in her sides, from which the guns of her mighty broadside battery will protrude, does not give a very clear idea of the appearance she will make when, painted white and with her guns as shiny as the American jackie can make them, she shall for the first time pass under the Brooklyn Bridge on her way to sea.

Despite the rush with which her construction has been conducted, it is not expected that the ship will be ready for commission before the date stipulated, in March, 1906. This delay can be accounted for by the fact that after her construction was well under way the Navy Department decided in favor of the installation of submerged torpedo tubes.

The rate of speed maintained in the building of this vessel and the Louisiana has never been equaled for warships in America except by ships begun since their starting, a fact that is construed in naval circles to mean that the construction of these two great vessels is the beginning of a new era in American naval construction.

The three sisters of the Connecticut, other than the Louisiana, are the Kansas, Minnesota, and Vermont. She compares favorably with the largest and latest designed vessels of foreign navies, and in a recent tabular comparison, made by a foreign expert, she was declared to be the superior of any vessel either afloat or in process of construction in American or foreign yards. Her principal dimensions are length 450 feet, breadth 76.10 feet, mean draft 24.5 feet, and displacement 16,000 tons. Her speed will be about 18 knots and her engines will be of 16,500 horse power, while her coal capacity is estimated at about 2,200 tons.

The fighting strength of this splendid vessel is best told by an enumeration of her powerful guns. These will consist of four 12 and eight 8-inch guns in turrets, twelve 7-inch, twenty 3-inch rapid firers, twelve 3-pounders, eight 1-pounders, two 3-inch field guns, eight machine guns, and four submerged torpedo tubes. Her armor will be twelve inches thick at the top and nine inches at the bottom, while her complement of officers and men will total 1,181, of whom 420 will be officers.

The arrangements for the launching are now about complete. Directly behind the bow will be a stand for the accommodation of about 100 guests, included in this number being the Secretary of the Navy, the higher officers in the line, other Cabinet officials, and the constructors who have charge of the building of the vessel. On a little stand just beyond this will be Miss Welles and one friend, while near her will be another stand on which the newspaper men will be accommodated. Of course the whole yard will be profusely decorated, while in the matter of music it can be safely said that never before in the history of a similar event will so many excellent brass bands participate. There will be the band from the flagship Kearsarge of the North Atlantic Squadron, the one from the Alabama, the Illinois, the Kentucky, the Iowa, the Missouri, the Maine, another from the navy yard, and also the splendid musical organization from the receiving ship Hancock.

The other guests, who will be numbered in the thousands, will be provided for in various places where a good view of the imposing ceremony can be obtained. Admission to the yard will be by invitation only, and already Admiral Rodgers, the commandant of the yard, announces that the committee in charge of that part of the arrangements is deluged with requests for the cards that will entitle them to see this, the latest and most powerful of all American battleships, take her initial plunge into the water.

SHERMAN SQUARE SUBWAY ENTRANCE

An "Architectural Freak" That Has Spoiled a View and Aroused the Ire of Residents in one of the City's Finest Neighborhoods.

Instead of erecting several little iron and glass kiosks to cover separate entrances to the Rapid Transit Subway at Seventy-second Street, Broadway, and Amsterdam Avenue, the tunnel builders have thrown together at the intersection of these thoroughfares a barnlike structure that will serve as a shelter for the entrances and exits to both up town and down town tracks in the largest express station of the upper west side.

Ornamenting the centre of beautiful Sherman Square with such an architectural freak has not brought down the blessings of the neighborhood upon the Rapid Transit Commission, the engineers, the designers, and the contractors. Everybody who lives or does business anywhere near this fine residential section has been complaining. Strangers from other vicinities have been wondering how the city came to allow one of its best squares to be punctured by a creation which, in the words of a prominent member of the near-by Colonial Club, "looks like a mud fence."

The station structure is about the color of mud from a distance. A close view shows that the chief material used in its construction has been a brown-hued brick, around which there are trimmings of grayish stone. The slanting roof, which is almost as conspicuous as the walls, is made of reddish-brown tin. There are doorways in the front and rear walls which, as the accompanying picture shows, are topped by what might be termed ornamental curves by any one with too little taste to appreciate the hideousness of the deformity as a whole.

The house—if there be any excuse for calling it a house—stands just south of the Seventy-second Street crossing in the angle made by Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue, Amsterdam Avenue, and Forty-second Street Lines almost touch the mud-colored walls on their way up and down town.

While the property owners and residents are "kicking," the tunnel engineers give "convenience" as the reason for the attraction. This, it is pointed out, is the first express station on an up-town section of the subway. Into it and from it will pour thousands of people living in the many enormous apartment houses of the neighborhood. The platforms are built to accommodate as great crowds as will assemble anywhere on the line, and these throngs can be handled better, it is argued, through the mud-tinted shelter than through separate stairways surmounted by kiosks such as are seen elsewhere.

A foreigner, who was being taken to the Colonial Club a few days ago by a member, at its related, stopped still at the sight of the obstruction, carefully fixed his monocle, and remarked:

"Public comfort station, I presume?"

"No, subway station," was the wrathful reply, and the story circulated among the club members, enraging them more than ever.

The club suffers more than any other buildings for the architectural triumph cuts off the view of broad Seventy-second Street from the windows on the ground floor. Although square and squatty and of hardly greater dimensions than a chicken coop, the station appears as a huge mud wall in the eyes of those who like to sit in the windows and watch the procession of fine turnouts.

"You can't look in any direction without getting at least a sidewise glimpse of the thing," said one. "There is no redeeming feature about its appearance. It would have been impossible to build anything less beautiful."

F. M. Rogers, manager of the Regent Hotel and soon to control also the remodeled Sherman Square Hotel, said:

"It certainly isn't an ornament, but I can't say it has been a detriment to us, as it is a block away."

Mr. Rogers's places are further south on the square.

"It ruins the looks of what was the finest residential square in town," said the manager of the Nevads, "but it's too late to howl now. Everybody agrees that it was a shame to put such a thing here."

Several men who acquiesced in this view did not wish to be quoted, saying they could gain nothing by getting into a controversy over what couldn't be helped. One member of the Colonial Club, after setting forth the objections of the other members, said that he had become reconciled in view of certain advantages.

"We may find that the thing looks better after it is entirely finished," he said, "and when the débris attendant upon its building has been removed. Inside, I learn, it is to be a comfortable place for waiting. On a rainy day we who live in neighboring apartment houses can rush to this ample shelter, forget its exterior appearance, and enjoy a fairly comfortable wait for the next train. The seats in the rooms up stairs will be a trifle better than standing on the platform below."

He said he had been cheered by these thoughts after finding that the beautiful building was there to stay.

The residents have made no formal complaints to the city authorities, so far as any one in the neighborhood could say yesterday.

BIG NEW CRUISER LAUNCHED.

The Milwaukee Floated and Named at San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 10.—The new cruiser Milwaukee was launched to-day from the ways of the Union Iron Works in this city. Miss Lillian Jeffrey of California gave the signal to release the massive steel hull from its berth on the stocks. The naming ceremony was performed by Miss Janet Mitchell of Milwaukee.

The Milwaukee is a protected cruiser. Her length is 424 feet; extreme breadth, 66 feet; mean draught, 22 feet 6 inches; displacement, 9,700 tons. She is designed to maintain a maximum sea speed of 22 knots, with 21,000 indicated horse power. She will carry fourteen 6-inch and eighteen 3-inch rapid fire guns; twelve 3-pounders, semi-automatic guns; four 1-pounder automatics; eight 1-pounder rapid fire guns; four 4-inch field pieces and ten 3-calibre machine guns, eight of which will be automatic. She will carry forty officers and 631 men.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Synthetic Floral Oils Admitted Free—Other Decisions.

In a decision written by General Appraiser Lunt, the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday ten protests by Fritzsche Brothers and two by Ungerer & Co., against the classification of artificial oil of cassia, oil of rose, and oil of jasmin, as chemical compounds at 25 per cent. They were admitted free as essential oils.

Protests overruled yesterday were by S. Guggenheimer & Co., B. Ullmann & Co., the Stohizenberg Company, and Hensel, Brueckman & Lorbacher, New York; the J. B. Thomas Company, Bangor, Me.; G. C. Grisdale, Niagara Falls; Otis, McAllister & Co., San Francisco, and Marshall Field & Co., Gage Brothers & Co., and the Devoe & Reynolds Company, Chicago. Protests sustained were by Luyties Brothers and David Spero, New York, and the Audebert Wall Paper Company, and A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, and protests partially sustained were by R. F. Downing & Co., New York, and G. W. Sheldon & Co., Chicago.

IMPORTERS START WAR ON DOMESTIC POTTERS

Borgfeldt & Co. to Fight Decision of Appraisers.

CHARGE UNFAIR TREATMENT

Counsel Demands an Opportunity to See Evidence on Which Advance of Invoice Values Was Made.

A bitter fight between the domestic potters and the importers of the cheaper grades of chinaware was begun yesterday, when W. Wickham Smith, counsel for George Borgfeldt & Co., wrote a letter to Secretary of the Treasury Shaw, protesting against alleged star chamber methods on the part of the Board of United States General Appraisers.

Up till about a year ago the domestic potters controlled the market on the cheaper grade of cups and saucers. About that time Borgfeldt & Co. began to import large quantities from the Maestricht district of Holland. The goods were more sightly than the product of the domestic factories and a little cheaper. They quickly captured the market, and the domestic men, becoming alarmed, complained to the customs authorities.

As a result Appraiser Whitehead advanced the invoice values on Borgfeldt & Co.'s goods 10 per cent. Borgfeldt & Co. appealed and the case was assigned to Gen. T. S. Sharretts of the Board of United States General Appraisers. In the meantime an investigation had been made abroad by special Treasury agents, and on their testimony and that furnished by Borgfeldt & Co., Gen. Sharretts sustained the invoice values.

The domestic manufacturers protested against the decision and Secretary Shaw directed Collector Stranahan to appeal from Gen. Sharrett's decision to a board of three General Appraisers. Last week they sustained Appraiser Whitehead's advance of 10 per cent. on more than 100 invoices and their decision is final as far as these invoices go. This entails many thousands of dollars in penalties, as under the law an importer whose invoice values are advanced is subject to a penalty of 1 per cent. for each 1 per cent. of advance.

Mr. Smith, in discussing his letter to Secretary Shaw, said:

"We have not given up this fight, and if the domestic manufacturers think that the prices of Borgfeldt's goods will be advanced and that they will be able to sell more goods as a result of this decision they are mistaken. We demand to see the evidence that induced the board to advance our invoice values."

SARATOGA'S NEW CASINO.

Surveys Completed and Subscriptions Amounting to $160,000 Received.

Considerable progress has been made with the scheme for building a new casino at Saratoga, to be ready for the Summer racing season next year. Surveyors have already made a careful map of the proposed site in Congress Park, and it is said that preliminary sketches will soon be prepared by Architects McKim, Mead & White.

The subscriptions to the enterprise so far have amounted to $160,000. Among the prominent men interested are Clarence H. Mackay, August Belmont, Harry Payne Whitney, James R. Keene, John W. Gates, and William S. Fanshawe.

COTTON MARKET DULL.

Trend Still Downward—Traders Are Watching Liverpool.

The cotton market was stagnant yesterday. The tendency was downward, even though sentiment was mixed as to what course prices would take next week. Further declines are looked for by the leading bears, and the bulls have not much argument to oppose at this moment. Liverpool is being watched, because it is possible that strength may develop there in the September option because one of the ships which was expected to deliver 28,000 bales there in time for the September settlement may be delayed so as to make the cotton unavailable. This might cause a squeeze in that market. Crop reports from Texas still have boll weevils as their main terror. The outlook for the general crop, however, continues good.

BIG TRUST COMPANY IS CHARGED WITH FRAUD

SAYS PROSPECTUS WAS FALSE

Baltimore Trust and Guaranty Company and a Number of Prominent Banking Houses Involved in Action.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 10.—The Baltimore Trust and Guaranty Company and some of the prominent banking houses of this city are charged with fraud in an action begun yesterday in the City Court of Baltimore by Virginia Inloes, who complains of having been led into making an investment in securities of the Nashville Railway by a prospectus sent out by the trust company which she says contained misrepresentations regarding the value of the property.

The Nashville Railway was a consolidation of the street railway lines of Nashville and of the Cumberland Electric Light and Power Company. The plaintiff claims a syndicate was formed to effect the consolidation and incidentally to secure big profits to the members of the syndicate. The trust company, Hambleton & Co., a well-known Stock Exchange House; C. H. McGhee, and N. Baxter, Jr., are alleged to have been members of the syndicate. The sum paid for the properties is said to have been $1,783,937, and the capital of the consolidated concern was fixed at $13,000,000, of which $6,500,000 was in bonds.

After reserving $2,549,000 of the bonds to retire underlying liens and $1,651,000 more for purposes which are said to have been misstated, the defendants are alleged to have retained the remaining $2,300,000 of bonds and the $6,500,000 of stock as their profit. In offering these securities to the public the trust company is charged with having misrepresented the condition of the property, to have suppressed the fact that the franchises of some of the roads were about to expire, and that there was litigation then being carried on in the courts attacking the validity of the franchises.

The complainant also alleges that the true purpose for which over $1,000,000 of the bonds were reserved was to make repairs which were much needed, while the purpose for which they were said to have been reserved was for extensions and new lines only. Other misrepresentations are also charged.

The statement is made that by suppressing many of the essential facts and making misrepresentations recklessly and fraudulently the trust company succeeded in unloading almost the entire issue of bonds on the "confiding investing public of Baltimore," and that when the facts about the litigation regarding the value of the franchises became known the value of the bonds was ruined.

The plaintiff also charges that the prospectus misrepresented the size of the population and business of the City of Nashville, which were stated to be far beyond what they really are, and that the bonds were called first consolidated mortgage bonds, although there were nine other bond issues ahead of them.

SHOOTING IN BURGLAR HUNT.

Roundsman Kelleher of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station was eating his supper at about 11:30 o'clock last night at his home on the third floor of 626 Columbus Avenue, when Mrs. Alexander Patterson, who lives across the hall from him, ran in and said that some men were trying to break into Mrs. Joseph Campbell's apartment on the third floor.

Kelleher grabbed his revolver and started down the stairs. Three men ran down toward the street. Kelleher called to them to halt, and when they did not do so he fired two shots at them.

The men continued down stairs and on reaching the street turned and fired at Kelleher through the open door. Nothing daunted, Kelleher ran into the street, still firing his revolver, and the men ran down Columbus Avenue to Ninetieth Street, out Ninetieth Street to Amsterdam Avenue, and thence to Eighty-ninth Street, where there is a vacant lot.

A crowd of people attracted by the shots and seeing the fleeing men pursued by the policeman, joined in the chase. The men continued to shoot at Kelleher while running and he returned the fire, fully a dozen shots being exchanged, but as far as known no one was hurt.

The men ran into the vacant lot, and though it was quickly surrounded, they managed to get away.

In their haste to leave the house the thieves left a jimmy on the floor. There were also marks on the door showing that they had been trying to force the door of Mrs. Campbell's apartment.

CHASE THIEF TEN BLOCKS.

Policeman Makes Capture After Hundreds Join in Pursuit.

After a chase of about ten blocks, Jeremiah Dever of 452 West Fifty-second Street was locked up in the West Forty-seventh Street Station last night on a charge of grand larceny. He was arrested on the complaint of Isaac Meyer, a collector of 470 First Avenue.

Meyer was standing on the corner of Fifty-second Street and Tenth Avenue last night counting the money which he had collected. Dever, who was passing, saw the money, grabbed a ten-dollar bill, and started on a run up the avenue. Meyer shouted that he had been robbed, and hundreds of persons started in pursuit. Policeman Gardiner joined in and caught the man after a chase of ten blocks.

Henriques, Adrian Iselin, C. Oliver Iselin, Jr., Col. E. M. Knox, Count De Langier Villars, the Earl of Litchfield, the Countess of Litchfield, Louis Stern, Miss Emma R. Stern, James Stillman, and H. McK. Twombly.

HORSEWHIPPED ON STREET.

Jealousy Leads Newark Man to Attack Former Boarder.

What the police say was the climax of a domestic row resulted in the horsewhipping of one man last evening and the arrest of both the victim and the alleged assailant. Up to several months ago the police say, John Arlough of 422 East Seventy-sixth Street lived at the home of John Feiger at Newark, N. J. Feiger, it is said, was jealous of his wife and put Barlough out.

The two men met yesterday afternoon late in front of the Yorkville Police Court, and Barlough alleges that Feiger lashed him with a rawhide whip. His face was marked as though by a whip. In the patrol wagon on the way to the station house the men tried to fight again.

ONE-ARMED BEGGAR FIGHTS.

Detectives Morton and Bilafer of the West Thirtieth Street Station had a hot fight at Thirty-second Street and Seventh Avenue at about 12:30 o'clock this morning with a one-armed beggar, who also carried a crutch though he was not lame.

The policemen were disguised as longshoremen. They saw the man chasing people around the street with his crutch. As they came up they asked the man what was the matter, and he replied:

"I am hungry; I have no money, nothing to eat, and no place to go. I want some money, and I want it quick. Give it to me or I will break your neck."

Morton told the man he was a detective. The man drew a revolver from his pocket and put it under the officer's nose. Before the beggar had a chance to shoot, however, Billafer knocked him down and the two policemen quickly overpowered and took the revolver away from him, and, after some difficulty, got him to the Tenderloin Station House.

He said that he was George O'Connor and that he had no home.

SKYSCRAPER'S TOP AGLOW.

Ruddy Illumination Made, However, by Workmen on Roof.

Persons crossing City Hall at 1 o'clock this morning were attracted by a bright, ruddy glare coming from the roof of the great skyscraper at 290 Broadway, at the northeast corner of Broadway and Reade Street, together with a large column of what might have been either smoke or steam, from its appearance. The fire did not vary greatly.

No one could be seen on the ground floor of the building, which is occupied by the Grand Trunk Railway, Dun's Mercantile Agency, and many other firms and individuals. Many gazed at the curious spectacle, and one telephoned to Police Headquarters. A policeman was sent there, and roused the janitor only to learn that the fire was being used in some repair work on the roof.

TROLLEYS KILL VETERAN.

Civil War Survivor Crushed Between Cars in East New York.

In the Liberty Avenue Police Station in East New York lies the body of an old man, apparently a civil war veteran, who was killed last night shortly before midnight, between two trolley cars in Jamaica Avenue, near Dresden Street.

The motorman of one car, which was bound for the Broadway Ferry, says he saw the man running toward the track, signaling to one or the other of the cars to stop, and that he reached the eastbound track just as the other car came along. When the cars had passed he was lying between the tracks.

Both were crowded with homeward bound pleasure seekers, and ther was great excitement. Several women tore strips from their clothing and helped to bandage his many wounds.

BIG GOLD STRIKE IN MEXICO.

One Prospector Took Out $17,000 from Placer Claim in Five Days.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Sept. 10.—A placer gold field of great richness has been discovered in the Guaynopa Canyon near Casas Grandes, Mexico, according to the statement contained in a letter received to-day from Samuel Lembert, formerly of this place, who has arrived at the scene of the excitement.

He says that nearly one thousand prospectors, many of whom are Americans, have already arrived at the Canyon, and staked out claims. One Mormon prospector from Casas Grandes, named Moore, took out $17,000 worth of gold from his prospect claim in less than five days, Mr. Lembert says.

Newark Police Seek Son of Fire Chief Kiersted.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 10.—George H. Kiersted, son of Chief Robert Kiersted of the Fire Department here, is wanted by the police on a charge of forgery. Kiersted is alleged to have negotiated a worthless check for $1,000 with the National Newark Banking Company.

The check purported to be drawn by the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company of New York, by which concern he had been employed up to July 27, the day on which the check was cashed. Kiersted is thirty-four years old and married. It is said that he has left the city

WOMEN PLAY GOOD CRICKET.

New Jersey Team Defeats Prospect Park—Other Club Matches.

One of the largest crowds that has witnessed a cricket match here this season saw the full two innings match played yesterday at Prospect Park between the Prospect Park Ladies' Cricket Club and the Union County Ladies' Cricket Club of Elizabeth. The New Jersey girls did by far the better work, both in the field and at the bat, and they won rather easily by 53 runs. A feature was the play of Miss Frances Goddard. In Brooklyn's first innings she obtained five wickets for 14 runs, and in the second four for 8, while her two attempts at the bat yielded a total of 33 runs. The Misses Julia and Dibbon Goddard also played well for the winners, with scores of 13 and 22, respectively. For Prospect Park Miss Edith William scored 14 out of a total of 20, and Miss Belva Tattersall took in all eleven wickets for 38 runs, and Miss Ruby Huskinson obtained in the Union County's second innings four for 2.

The West Indian Cricket Club had as opponents yesterday at Prospect Park for their New York Cricket Association championship match a short-handed team of only seven men from Newark. Not one man of either team obtained double figures. The totals were: West Indians, 50; Newark, 15. After scoring 83 the Union County team had 6 Manhattan wickets down for 26, and considered the game as good as won, when A. C. Herbert and E. J. Atwood by determined play saw their side eventually victorious by a margin of 5 runs, with 3 wickets to spare. The totals were: Union County, 83; Manhattan 88 for 7 wickets.

A surprise was in store for the Paterson Association team at William's Bridge, where Columbia Oval won by 16 runs. The totals were: Columbia Oval Team B, 54; Paterson Team B, 38. Brooklyn Team B encountered a team of the Thistles at Prospect Park, where the former won by 36 runs. The totals were: Brooklyn Team B, 117; Thistles, 81.

Good scoring by both teams prevented a result being reached in the game between Kings County and Bermuda, which was played at Prospect Park. W. H. Williams hit vigorously for 34, not out, for Kings County, while C. B. Worme, C. T. Toddings, J. B. Mahon, and H. Smart all reached double figures.

Princeton is the latest candidate for cricket honors. The team played its first game yesterday at Elizabeth, where, although defeat was sustained, promise of better things was shown. The opposing team was the Union County juniors, who won by 54 runs. The totals were: Union County juniors, 78; Princeton, 24.

CONFERENCE PROPOSED ON UNIVERSAL ALPHABET

Boston University Urges Plan to Simplify Pronunciation.

LEARNED PUBLIC IS INVITED

Suggestions Will Be Passed On, and a Circular Sets Forth Points to be Covered.

BOSTON, Sept. 10.—Boston University has issued a circular inviting opinions on a proposal to hold an international conference for the purpose of adopting a "universal alphabet" by which to indicate the pronunciation of words in the leading European languages.

As a preliminary measure, it is desired to obtain the opinion of the learned public upon the advisability and practicability of the proposed conference. For this purpose the present circular has been sent to the members of the American Philological Association, who are to meet in St. Louis about the middle of September. At that time the chief philologists of the world will be assembled and the subject will be considered.

1. Is it possible to devise a universal alphabet to be used as a key to pronunciation in all dictionaries of the leading languages?
2. If so, is it desirable that such a key be adopted by the dictionaries?
3. Is it possible to give to this key such form as to render it most convenient also for ordinary writing and printing, thus establishing a universally recognized phonetic spelling, which any reader may readily copy?
4. If so, is it desirable that such form be given to this key?
5. Would a universal key alphabet be an aid to learning the pronunciation of foreign languages?
6. If so, would that fact contribute to render this key alphabet (and therefore the phonetic spelling) more familiar to a large portion of the educated public?
7. The universal alphabet having once been adopted as a key to pronunciation in all dictionaries, is it probable that it will also be adopted for that purpose in all language manuals, primers and readers?
8. If it be true that by means of a phonetic spelling children learn to read and write in a few weeks and master even the traditional spelling more readily than by the present method, would it be advisable to teach them the phonetic spelling first?
9. If by this means the rising generation becomes familiar with the phonetic spelling, will it be necessary or desirable that the traditional spelling be retained?
10. Do you think that an agreement on a universal alphabet can be reached satisfactorily by correspondence alone, or is it desirable that an alphabet, intended to be used by all nations for ages to come, be given at the outset the full benefit of oral discussion by the foremost authorities, in the presence of expert type designers to give their opinion on the form of the letters as required for writing and printing, and able to draw them in proper form for the inspection of the delegates?

A second circular will be sent to all university professors as soon as the Faculties reassemble.

NEGRO GANG CAPTURED

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 10.—Southern Railway detectives have captured a band of twelve negroes calling themselves "Rough Riders," in Sussex County.

The band is accused of robbing and burning the railway station at that place, and it is asserted was planning to rob and burn Bert & Chapel's general store.

Springfield Wins Four Games in a Day.

Four games of baseball, two in the morning and two in the afternoon, were played by the Springfield and Meriden teams of the Connecticut League yesterday, and Springfield won them all. The first game in the morning occupied but fifty-seven minutes and the second game one hour and four minutes. Besides the rarity of playing four games in one day, the contest which was played in fifty-seven minutes was one of the shortest on record.

Manager O'Neil was so enthused over his team's success that he has challenged the New Haven and Bridgeport nines for a post-season series, best three games in five, for $500 a side.

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

Wiltse and Taylor Win for New York Against Philadelphia.

As usual the Philadelphia team proved a difficult proposition for McGraw's men in a double-header at the Polo Grounds yesterday, and although the local team was successful in both by one run the decision was not reached until the last man was retired. Wiltse and Sutthoff were the opposing pitchers in the first game, and the secret of Wiltse's success was the fact that he was finely supported, a three-base hit by Bresnahan in the last inning, which sent in two runs, winning the game. For six innings the New Yorks were in the lead, the score at that time being three to one. The visitors scored the first run of the game in the fourth inning. McGee reached first base on a nice hit past second base, and he was advanced a base by Lush's out to McGann. Titus batted to centre field, and although Bresnahan made an excellent throw to the plate to catch McGee; the runner scored handily. In the fifth inning Dahlen's hard line hit to Donahue was too much for the latter to handle promptly, and by a wild throw to first Dahlen made an extra base. A wild pitch sent him to third, and on Gilbert's hit to Hulswitt, who threw to Dooin, Dahlen tallied. Two more runs were scored in the sixth on Bresnahan's double, Browne's out, Mertes's single, and Dahlen's three-bagger to left field.

The Philadelphias tied the score in the seventh on Titus's single and Hulswitt's tremendous hit through the right field ropes for a home run. In the eighth they took the lead on a base on balls, Gleason's single, a double steal, and Lush's hit to left field. In the ninth, after Dunn's fly had been caught by Gleason, Gilbert was sent to first on called balls, and Gleason's fumble gave Warner a base. Donlin, who batted for Wiltse, forced Warner out at second, and then Bresnahan won the game by a three-bagger to left field. Wiltse was pleased with the result that he shook Bresnahan's hand warmly for keeping his pitching record clean. It was Wiltse's eleventh straight victory.

The second game was not nearly so well played in the field, Hulswitt and Gilbert being the principal offenders. The New Yorks outbatted the visitors, but the latter managed to keep close to the local team until the finish. A combination of errors and safe hits gave each team two runs in the first inning, and the New Yorks made two more in the fourth and fifth. Hulswitt scored a run in the fourth on a hard hit to Dahlen, the latter's bad throw, and Donohue's single. When the score was six to three in favor of the New Yorks in the ninth inning the Quakers scored two runs on singles by Titus and Hulswitt, Dunn's error, and Donohue's out. The scores:

BOSTON AND BROOKLYN EVEN.

BOSTON, Sept. 10.—Boston and Brooklyn broke even here to-day, Boston taking the first game, 6 to 5, and Brooklyn the second, 6 to 2. Both games were loosely played and the wildness of Fisher made the victory easy for Brooklyn in the second game. Boston's finish in the first game was the feature of the afternoon. In the first game Cannell sprained his ankle. The second game was called at the end of the fifth inning by agreement. The scores:

ST. LOUIS, 10; CINCINNATI, 6.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 10.—Poor support rather than the large number of base hits secured was responsible for Harper's defeat at the hands of the St. Louis team to-day. Taylor was hit hard at intervals, but managed to pull himself together at the finish, holding the locals when they looked most dangerous. Attendance, 3,210. Score:

PITTSBURG WON TWO GAMES.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 10. — Pittsburg captured both games with comparative ease. Robertaille had Chicago at his mercy in the first game, and himself batted in the winning run. The second game was called at the end of the seventh inning to let the players catch a train. At no time did the visitors have a chance to win. There were few brilliant plays in either game. AMERICAN LEAGUE.

New Yorks Lose Game to Old Pitcher, but Win from Wolfe.

Taking the season's record of the Washington team into consideration and its previous meetings with the Greater New Yorks, the latter having won twelve games and lost two, the 6,530 "rooters" at American League Park yesterday were justified in their belief that Griffith's men would win both games of the double-header yesterday. Like the other teams of the rear guard of the League when visiting this city, however, the Washingtons showed surprising strength, and the local team was kept on the defensive in both contests. Two of the pitchers exchanged for Orth—Hughes and Wolfe—were used by the visitors, while Garvin, late of the Brooklyn team, made his début with the local team. Hughes was anxious to win against his old comrades, and he was successful; but only after ten innings had been played and through a surprising error by Keeler, a dropped fly ball directly in his hands. Both pitchers were batted hard, but Garvin appeared to be the steadier at critical moments. With the game almost won, however, after having struck out two men in the ninth inning, Hughes hit safely to left field, bringing in the run that tied the score. Then Orth succeeded him, and the failure of Keeler to hold Stahl's fly, aided by singles of Hulsman and Cassidy, gave the visitors one run and the loss of the game for New York by a score of 3 to 5. Keeler and Conroy each made three hits for the local team, and Hulsman made the same number for the visitors. Cassidy and Elberfeld played rather phenomenal ball at short field, each making stops that ordinarily would have counted for safe hits.

Orth and Wolfe were opposed to each other in the second game, and base hits were frequent. A peculiar feature about the contest was that Dougherty, Keeler, and Anderson scored in turn hits between them and Dougherty and Keeler made all the runs. Cassidy and Elberfeld again played brilliantly. The scores:

DETROIT WON AND LOST.

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 10.—For the third consecutive day Detroit and St. Louis broke even in a double-header, Detroit winning the first and losing the second, and the odd feature today was that both were shutouts. Killian was invincible in the opener, and won his own game with a three-bagger. However, his support was great, and two double plays killed what chances St. Louis had.

In the second game Detroit could do nothing with Pelty, and, while Kitson pitched great ball, an error by Robinson made St. Louis' lone tally possible. Wallace, O'Leary, and Lowe did the star fielding, while McIntyre's batting in the first game was exceptional. Attendance, 3,000. Score:

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 10.—In the finest game seen on the local grounds this season the home team in thirteen innings defeated Boston by the score of 1 to 0. Plank won his own game. Murphy in the last inning singled, Monte Cross sacrificed, and Powers was retired at first. Plank hit a fast one over first base to the right-field fence, Murphy scoring from second. TWO GAMES FOR CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Sept. 10.—Cleveland won two games from Chicago this afternoon. In the first Bernhard was hit hard in the fifth, and seventh innings, and Chicago secured what looked like a winning lead. Cleveland, however, batted out a victory in the ninth on two doubles and two singles, Bernhard driving in the winning run.

In the second game Cleveland hit Smith for three singles, two doubles, and a triple, scoring five runs and practically winning the game. Moore was wild and gave way to

STALWART WAS VICTOR FOR $25,000 STAKES

E. R. Thomas's Colt Took the Annual Champion in Gallant Style.

TRADITION'S GREAT EASTERN

Fleet Filly, with Top Weight, Easily Won from a Good Field at Sheepshead Bay Closing.

It was a freak of fortune illustrative of the "glorious uncertainty" of the turf that at Sheepshead Bay yesterday permitted the cast-off from the Whitney Stable, Stalwart, with the extreme penalty of the race's conditions, to win the $25,000 Annual Champion Stakes, while the Whitney establishment, racing now in the name and colors of Herman B. Duryea, had not even a representative in the contest.

The race was the fourth of the last day's racing for the year at Sheepshead Bay, and divided the interest of a huge half holiday crowd with the old and famous Great Eastern Handicap for two-year-olds. From first to last in the betting on the Annual Champion, Broomstick, with an advantage in the weights of eight pounds over Stalwart, was the favorite, the Ben Brush colt carrying 107 pounds to 115 on Stalwart, while the older horses each had up 127, and started as the outsiders. The start was made directly in front of the judges' stand, the race requiring two circuits of the mile and a furlong track. To a perfectly even break Broomstick led off, with Africander second and Stalwart last, and from the first jump the Ben Brush colt, holder of the world's mile and a quarter record, was fighting to go on, and close on the rail went out in a fast pace, while Burns, who rode him, seemed taken unawares, and even as the horses left the starting post was reaching down and grabbing for a wrap in his efforts to restrain his mount. Stalwart moved into second place as the horses went around the first turn, and with the other two lapped several lengths away. Stalwart raced on behind Broomstick, contented to permit the Ben Brush horse to set the pace. From four to six lengths in front, Broomstick went on, and after completing one circuit of the track turned into the backstretch for the second time with his ears pricked and his mouth open still fighting against Burns's hold on him. Going through the back stretch Redfern on Stalwart made his move to close on the pacemaker and before the far turn was reached was compelled to sit down and ride as Broomstick still was flying along in front, the others seeming hopelessly out of it at this stage of the race.

On the far turn, with Stalwart creeping up, Broomstick began to tire a bit, and Stalwart went to him in the run around the big bend to the head of the stretch. Just after two miles had been done Stalwart took the lead, and though still hard ridden drew slightly away in front. Then Burns called on Broomstick for a last effort, and in spite of his task as pacemaker and Burns's injudicious riding, the stanch colt came again, and closing on Stalwart at the last furlong pole forced Stalwart to his best efforts again. At the same moment Major Daingerfield, which had been last into the stretch, settled down to running, and, closing with a whirlwind rush, went on after the three-year-olds. In the last furlong Broomstick, having expended his last strength, was stopping, but Major Daingerfield closing resolutely and swiftly appeared as a new contender, and Redfern rode out Stalwart, which won by four lengths, while Major Daingerfield in the last jumps snatched the $2,500 second money from Broomstick. The time of the race was 3:54 3-5, or a second behind the record for the race, the fractional time being quarter, 0:25 2-5; half mile, 0:51; three-quarters, 1:17 1-5; mile, 1:43 3-5; mile and a quarter, 2:09 2-5; mile and a half, 2:35 3-5; mile and three-quarters, 3:01, and two miles, 3:27 2-5.

The winner of the race, by Meddler-Melba, is the colt that was sold at the late W. C. Whitney's weeding-out sale at Morris Park last Fall, and bought by E. R. Thomas for $12,000, Mr. Thomas then retaining him, though Mr. Whitney, having found that Stalwart was engaged in the sale through an error, tried to buy him back at an advanced price.

For the Great Eastern Handicap, six furlongs down the Futurity course, four of the sixteen horses sent out as starters were scratched, but three added starters made up a field of fifteen runners, with the Flatbush Stakes winner, Tradition, as the top weight with 128 pounds. The impost was the highest ever carried by a filly for the stakes, and was equal to 131 pounds for a colt, but nevertheless Tradition was favorite at every stage of the betting, and started at about 11 to 10, with the Hurricana filly Burnt Hills, weighted at 113 pounds, the next best backed, at 13 to 5. By a concession of the H. B. Duryea stable, Jockey Hildebrand rode Burnt Hills, while Shaw had the mount on the Duryea entry, Sandria, and Lyne was up on Tradition. Whatever there was of doubt as to the quality of Tradition, the race set it at rest, for it would be hard to imagine a horse winning with greater ease than she won or from a more unfavorable place in the early running. Tradition's place was third from the rail at the post, with Jack Lory next to her on the inside and Merry Lark on the rail.

When the barrier rose, Burnt Hills, on the extreme outside, was first away, with Jack Lory second, the field at once closing in around Tradition, and enveloping her in the crowd, while Jack Lory dropped back, and Sandria went on after Burnt Hills. At the end of the first furlong Sandria had the lead, with Burnt Hills second, while Tradition was behind a solid line of horses, galloping in the middle of the crowd and waiting for a chance to get through. To the bend at the head of the quarter stretch the positions were about the same, but as the slight turn was made the field spread in open order, and the chance came for Tradition to make her run. She went on with a splendid flash of speed, though Lyne had to hustle her to the effort, and, as the horses straightened out for the run home, she was in the first flight with clear sailing. Sandria led still and was first into the last furlong, but there Lyne let down the dauntless Tradition, and she went to the front and drew clear of her opponents in half a dozen strides, and from that point had the race so securely won that Lyne eased her up, and, with her field staggering behind her, won, pulling up and with the utmost ease, by six lengths, while Sandria just lasted long enough to beat Burnt Hills a head for the place. ON THE TENNIS COURTS.

F. G. Anderson Wins Challenge Cup at Nyack—Scores of Other Matches.

In straight sets, Frederick G. Anderson, the ex-Canadian champion, now of the Kings County Tennis Club, won the challenge cup yesterday in the tennis singles of the Nyack Country Club at Nyack-on-Hudson. He defeated his clubmate, Henry Mollenhauer by the score of 7—5, 6—3, 6—4. There was a pleasing variation of racquet work throughout the match, and while it was not played at top speed, the placing and passing of the two competitors were of the highest order, Mollenhauer was cleanly defeated on his attempts to work up to the net, for on his starting to run in Anderson shot the ball straight past him as he was on the move, and caught him off his guard times without number. So far as Anderson was concerned it was the same old passing attack from his side of the net, the game he plays so perfectly, and despite the splendid efforts of Mollenhauer to offset these tactics he was unable to do more than make an uphill fight, losing ground all the way to the end.

Mrs. L. S. Coe of the Englewood Field Club distinguished herself in the semi-finals of the women's singles by defeating Mrs. William, née Miss Helen Helwig, the ex-national champion.

Mrs. Pouch was successful in taking the opening set of this contest after the game had touched at deuce by a brilliant rally, in which her long driving shots were remarkable, and the set was hers at 7—5. Mrs. Coe was the steadier player in the remaining sets, which she took at 6—1, 6—3. Something of a surprise was also created in the semi-final round of the mixed doubles, in which Miss Kate Atkins and her partner, Hugh Tallant, the former Harvard expert, were defeated by an easy score by Miss Hamilton and Harry Torrence, Jr., of the Englewood Field Club, the score being 6—3, 6—1. As several of the events remain to be finished the tournament will be continued this week. The summary:

Challenge Cup Round.—Frederick G. Anderson, holder, defeated Henry Mollenhauer, challenger, 7—5, 6—3, 6—4.

Semi-final Round.—Mrs. L. S. Coe and H. D. Betts defeated Miss Ethel White and L. Perry, 6—3, 6—3; Miss Hamilton and Harry Torrence, Jr., defeated Miss Kate Atkins and Hugh Tallant, 6—3, 6—1.

W. D. Walker and O. A. Sargent were the winners, respectively, in Classes A and B of the Crescent Athletic Club's handicap tennis singles on the courts at Bay Ridge. In the final of Class A the victory went to Walker, (plus half 30,) on his defeat of the old club champion, Nathaniel S. Schroeder, (owe 15.) This victory was gained in three sets to love at the score of 6—4, 6—3, 7—5. The summary of the finals:

Class A, Handicap Singles.—Semi-Final Round—W. D. Walker (plus half 30) defeated H. M. Notman, (plus half 30,) 6—3, 3—6, 6—4; Nathaniel S. Schroeder (owe 15) defeated A. Player (scratch) by default.

Final Round—W. D. Walker (plus half 30) defeated Nathaniel S. Schroeder, (owe 15,) 6—4, 6—5, 7—5.

Class B, Handicap Singles.—Semi-final Round—O. A. Sargent (plus 15) defeated A. C. Vandevers, (plus 15,) 6—3, 6—4; J. S. Lodewijk, (owe half 30) defeated E. C. Lunt, (plus 15,) 6—2, 13—11.

Final Round—O. A. Sargent, (plus 15,) defeated J. S. Lodewick, (plus 15,) 8—6, 6—2, 6—1.

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

J. A. Drake has become dissatisfied with the horses making up his present stable, and as he has lost heavily in backing them of late, has decided to reduce his establishment by getting rid of the older animals. The date of his sale has not been decided on, but it is likely that when it is held all his horses except Ort Wells will be offered.

Lochinvar, bay colt, by Knight of the Thistle-Diana, by Mr. Pickwick, was added to the sale in the Fasig-Tipton paddock yesterday, and was sold to dissolve a partnership. Charles Read Smith bought the colt for $3,900.

The champion race horse of a year ago, J. B. Haggin's Waterboy, having failed to come up to the expectations of his owner and trainer this year, has been shipped to Kentucky, and now is at Mr. Haggin's Elmendorf Stud Farm, where he will go into service in the stud next Spring.

FAST AUTOS TO RACE FOR VANDERBILT CUP

Germany, France, Italy, and America Represented.

THREE-HUNDRED-MILECONTEST

Event Will Be Held Over Long Island Course on Oct. 8—List of the Entries.

With the closing of the entries last week at the Automobile Club of America for the Vanderbilt cup road race on Oct. 8, all indications point to a splendid test of automobile speed and ability. The race will be run over a thirty-mile course on Long Island, extending through Queens, Mineola, Westbury, Jericho, Central Park, and Hempstead. The course will be traveled ten times, making a total distance of three hundred miles.

The entries will bring out some of the best and fastest automobiles extant. Several will be seen for the first time in this race, and the American manufacturers have attested to their interest in the race by building two or three new machines purposely for the contest.

In all there are twenty entries, the United States being represented by seven cars, France by six, Germany by five, and Italy by two. One of the new American machines is the seventy-five horse power Smith & Mabley simplex, which was practically finished last week for Frank Croker. It is said that Mr. Croker will drive the machine himself.

Two other new cars of American manufacture will be the white steam cars lately finished in Cleveland. Webb Jay will drive one and Rollin T. White the other. Two sixty horse power racing Pope-Toledo cars have also been entered, one to be driven by A. C. Webb and the other probably by H. Lyttle. Charles Schmidt will appear in his famous Packard Gray Wolf, a thirty horse power vehicles that has attained considerable fame as a racing machine. The seventh American car is a Royal Tourist, entered by C. A. Duerr, and will be driven by Joseph Tracy.

The foreign cars are a splendid lot, all being high-powered machines. Great interest centres in the two Italian Fiat cars, because they have just arrived here and are owned, respectively, by Alfred G. Vanderbilt and William Wallace. Each is of ninety horse power. Mr. Vanderbilt's car will be driven by his chauffeur, Paul Sartori, who drove the Vanderbilt German machine to victory in several races at the late Newport meet. Mr. Wallace, however, will pilot his own car over the course.

The trophy offered by W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., for this annual road race is a magnificent cup. It is stipulated that the first two races must be held in this country, but after next year's contest the race may be held abroad, at the option of the holder of the cup. The American Automobile Association has charge of the racing conditions in this country, while the Automobile Club of France is the foreign representative. The distance must be between 250 and 300 miles, and not more than ten cars can enter from each country. The primary object in offering the cup was to stimulate the American manufacture of high-powered cars of reliability and speed, and the entries from this country indicate a genuine disposition to take advantage of this opportunity.

VANDERBILT AUTOMOBILE CUP.

CAPE MAY CUP RACE.

Vergemere, Atlantic, and Endymion Start in Light Wind.

Three schooner yachts started yesterday afternoon on the 220-mile ocean race for the Cape May Cup. They were the Vergemere, Vice Commodore A. C. Bostwick of the Larchmont Yacht Club; Atlantic, Wilson Marshall, Larchmont and New York Clubs, and the Endymion, Commodore George Lauder, Jr., of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club. The Corona, Arthur F. Luke, was entered, but she did not start, Mr. Luke's plans having been upset at the last moment by sickness in his family.

The Vergemere, which led at the start, barely saved her time, and both the others were handicapped, the Endymion very badly. The flagship Delaware, with the Regatta Committee, S. Nicholson Kane, George A. Carmack, and W. Butler Duncan, Jr., on board, anchored north of Buoy 5, off the point of Sandy Hook about 12:30 P. M. The wind was light, about south-southeast, and the tide was running strong ebb. The three yachts were further out to sea, the Endymion more than a mile away. The only other vessel about except fishing smacks was the tug Eugene F. Moran, chartered by the New York Yacht Club for the use of members and in charge of F. M. Hoyt.

According to the printed instructions the preparatory signal was to be given at 1 o'clock, the starting signal ten minutes later, and the handicapping signal ten minutes later than the starting signal. As a matter of fact the preparatory signal was given at 12:55, the starting signal at 1:13:30, and the handicapping signal at 1:21:50; thus there were eighteen minutes thirty seconds between the first two signals, and only eight minutes twenty seconds between the last two. However, the official time of the start was 1:15 and of the handicap 1:25. The yachts had hard work bucking the strong ebb tide. The Vergemere barely escaped the handicap. Her official time was 1:25. The actual time of the Atlantic was 1:21:30, and of the Endymion 1:51:10; the former was therefore handicapped 6 minutes 30 seconds and the latter 26 minutes.

The Vergemere threw away her advantage over the Atlantic by making a bad tack. She crossed on the port tack, and soon after went to starboard, apparently under the erroneous impression that there was not water enough for her to clear the Hook on the port tack. She stood northward until the Atlantic, which held the port tack, had passed her and secured a lead of nearly a mile. The Endymion also gained on her considerably. The yachts carried at the start gaff topsails, working maintopmast staysails, and reaching jib topsails. The Endymion later set a balloon jibtopsail, but the wind was too far forward of the beam to make it draw well.

The Moran followed the yachts to the southward of the Scotland Lightship, and left them with a parting salute. The wind was still light. The Atlantic then had a lead of about a mile on the Vergemere, and the Endymion was about three-quarters of a mile astern of the latter.

Whitney and Sanford Horses Sold.

A large crowd of horsemen attended the sale of yearling thoroughbred horses from the La Belle Stud, of the late William C. Whitney and the Hurricana Stud of Stephen and John Sanford, held in the Fasig-Tipton Company's paddock, at Sheepshead Bay, yesterday. As both the Whitney estate, through Herman B. Duryea, lessee of the Whitney horses, and the Sanfords, racing in the name of John Sanford, will continue on the turf, horsemen seemed to assume that the horses offered were the weeds of the two establishments and the bidding was slow, none of the Sanford yearlings bringing as much as $1,000. The best sales of the Whitney lot were as follows:

B. f. by Hamburg-Tara Blackburn, by Luke Blackburn; Goughacres Stable	1,100
B. c. by Lavino-Sister Mary, by Woodlands; S. S. Brown	1,000

NEW WORLD'S RECORD BY JOHN FLANAGAN

AT PELHAM BAY PARK GAMES

John Flanagan of the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association, the world's champion weight thrower, gave a remarkable demonstration of his ability to break records almost at will at the athletic games held in connection with the formal opening of the Pelham Bay Park Athletic Field yesterday afternoon, when he made a new world's record for throwing the fifty-six-pound weight, of 38 feet 7⅜ inches. This increases by almost two feet the previous record of 36 feet 9½ inches, which was made by Flanagan at Celtic Park in October, 1901. Flanagan also won the hammer throw from scratch with 167 feet 6¾ inches, about five feet less than his world's record.

John J. Daly, the Irish champion runner, started from the ten-yard mark in the mile run, but could not hold the pace and finished a poor fourth. George Bonhag of the Greater New York Irish Athletic Association, who had fifteen yards, was the winner, with Walter S. Nobis of the Mohawk Athletic Club, a long marker at 100 yards, a close second. Harvey Cohn of the Greater New York Club, the scratch man, was third.

A mile handicap relay race was won by the Greater New York Irish Athletic Club, with the Franklin Athletic Club second, the West Side Branch Young Men's Christian Association third, and the New York Athletic Club fourth. The New Yorks, however, promptly entered a protest against the winners upon the ground that Lawson Robertson, who had run for the Greater New York team, had not been entered for the event. This being the case, Referee Sullivan disqualified the winners and moved up the other teams each one place.

A half-mile relay race for schoolboys attracted much interest, and was won by the team of Public School No. 45 of Brooklyn, composed of Edward Van Beuren, Clarence Taylor, Sigour Paulson, and Oscar Middleton, who raced like veterans and defeated the team of Public School No. 19 of Manhattan in an easy finish. Public School No. 30 of Manhattan was third. Several of the schoolboy events were omitted for lack of starters, as was also a four-mile relay race for clubs. Summary:

MAY BUILD MANHATTAN PARK TO RIVAL CONEY'S

Syndicate Negotiating for Last of Dyckman Estate.

AFTER PLOT OF 26 ACRES

Ready to Spend $4,000,000 in New Amusement Enterprise, It Is Said, If Plans Go Through.

The establishment at the northerly end of Manhattan Island of a great amusement park, which will equal if not eclipse all similar Coney Island enterprises, is said to be the purpose of a syndicate which has practically closed negotiations for a tract of twenty-six acres, belonging to the Dyckman estate and lying between Broadway, Two Hundred and Eighteenth Street, and the Ship Canal.

Nothing could be learned yesterday as to the make-up of the purchasing syndicate aside from the fact that it has abundant financial backing and will be able to carry out its undertaking, which it is said will involve a total investment of about $4,000,000.

The property possesses many features which will make it readily adaptable for amusement park purposes. It has 2,300 feet of water front, partly on the Ship Canal and party on the shore of Spuyten Duyvil Creek. The land rises gradually from Broadway to a height of nearly 100 feet above tidewater and then slopes away gently toward the creek on the west. The tract is also practically free from the danger of being cut up by street opening, since it is so situated that streets through it will never be needed unless the owners themselves should want them. In accessibility the site will have all the advantages to be derived from the Subway, the Metropolitan surface lines, and the New York Central Railroad on the opposite side of the Ship Canal. It is believed that the New York Central and the Subway will eventually establish a union station at the northerly end of the Broadway bridge over the Ship Canal.

The property which has changed hands is the largest parcel of real estate under single ownership on Manhattan Island, and was the last of the Dyckman properties remaining in the hands of the family that gave its name to all of the territory from Fort George up to Spuyten Duyvil. These properties were accumulated by Michael and Jacobus Dyckman in the early part of the last century and were inherited by Isaac Dyckman, who at the time of his death in 1868 was, so far as the area of his holdings was concerned, the largest property owner on Manhattan Island. Four successive auction offerings, between 1868 and 1871, resulted in the sale of several thousand lots.

Isaac Dyckman's heir was a nephew, his sister's son, who bore the name of Smith, but who, as a condition of his inheritance, assumed the name of Isaac M. Dyckman. Further sales of the property were made from time to time, until at Isaac M. Dyckman's death about six years ago the large parcel along the Ship Canal was all that remained.

AMERICAN JEWISH YEAR BOOK.

The American Jewish Year Book for the Hebrew year 5665 has been issued by the Jewish Publication Society of America, and was circulated yesterday on the first day of the Jewish year. This issue of the book, which is the sixth, is edited by Cyrus Adler, Librarian of the Smithsonian Institution, and Henrietta Szold.

The book is evidently compiled by master hands and contains a great mass of important information to Jews. One of the features is a biographical directory of Hebrews prominent in the professions and in various walks of public life. The editors state in the preface to the book that this was no easy task, the data being gathered from catalogues, membership lists, of societies, reference books, &c.

Another important feature is the compilation made from the "Foreign Relations" documents on the passport question mooted between Russia and this country. It is known that this country has been active in the matter, but few Jews are aware, say the editors, that negotiations have been carried on between Russia and our Department of State. This has now broadened into a National issue, to the solution of which both of the large political parties are pledged.

Another important feature in the book is the list of 100 accessible books in English on Jewish subjects, which will prove very useful to those who are interested in Jewish education.

"FIRST AID" RULES SAVE HIM.

Policemen Find Gas Fitter Overcome in an Excavation.

Education in first aid to the injured enabled Bicycle Policemen James Donohue and Thomas Kerrigan of the West Forty-seventh Street Station to save the life of William Callahan, forty-five years old, of 1,466 Second Avenue, yesterday. They noticed an odor of gas coming from an excavation in front of 449 West Forty-seventh Street and peering into the hole saw Callahan, who is a pipe fitter for the Consolidated Gas Company, sitting motionless at the bottom, his head bowed upon his breast.

Donohue leaped down and passed the man up to Kerrigan. They laid him flat on the street, to all appearances dead, and applied artificial respiration until an ambulance from Roosevelt Hospital arrived half an hour later. Callahan was finally resuscitated and the ambulance surgeon told him he owed his life to the policemen.

FIREMAN'S FLAT RANSACKED.

Louis C. Bayer, a fireman connected with Hook and Ladder No. 14, on East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, has reported to the police that on Wednesday last, some time between 8 in the morning and 8 in the evening, burglars entered his flat at 540 Bergen Avenue and stripped it of everything that could be carried away. Even the pictures were taken from the walls, and before the thieves left they enjoyed a lunch at his expense, rifling a well-stocked larder of the best it afforded.

Bayer believes that the thieves expected to be surprised, for a Japanese sword which was on the wall was found by him unsheathed on the dining room table.

SHIP'S ENGINEER CUTS THROAT.

Despondent Because He Couldn't Return to His Family.

John Williamson, engineer on the freight steamship Dongola, lying at the foot of Tenth Street, Long Island City, attempted suicide yesterday by cutting his throat with a razor while on board ship. The doctors at St. John's Hospital say he has a chance of recovery.

The Dongola left Barry, Wales, three weeks ago for New York, with a cargo of oil. Williamson shipped with the understanding that the vessel was to return to Wales after unloading at New York. He has a wife and child in Glasgow from whom he didn't want to be separated any great length of time. He learned a few days ago that the ship was to sail from here for Hongkong on Thursday next and since then, his shipmates say, he had been despondent.

OLD WATER BOARD OUT.

The judgment of ouster of the New Jersey Court of Appeals against the Republican Street and Water Board of Jersey City was filed at 11:30 A. M. yesterday in the office of Secretary of State S. D. Dickinson, at Trenton. Former Corporation Attorney John Wesl Queen, County Counsel John J. Mulvaney, and Lawyer John A. Dennin went from Jersey City to Trenton to see that the judgment was promptly filed.

Col. Robert G. Smith, the President of the Democratic Board, is with his regiment, the Fourth, at Manassas. The other Democratic Commissioners, Anthony Hauck, James S. Nolan, John Sullivan, and Ferdinand Heintze conferred at once with Democratic Leader Robert Davis, and concluded not to wait until Monday before taking possession of the Street and Water Department.

It is expected that the Board will begin immediately dismissing the 200 or more Republican subordinates in the department. Charles K. Hart may succeed George T. Bouton as clerk of the Board, at a salary of $3,500. Mr. Bouton has served for many years and is a Democrat, but displeased the Democratic leaders by holding office under the Republicans.

The Democrats have named delegates to a city convention, at which the Street and Water Board candidates will be nominated. The Republicans, having faith that their appointed board would be upheld by the Court of Appeals, made no nominations. Corporation Counsel George L. Record, in behalf of the Republicans yesterday, made a demand on City Clerk Michael J. O'Donnell's office for permission to amend the Republican nominating petitions, now on file, so as to provide that the delegates to the County Convention may serve at a city convention for the nomination of Street and Water Commissioners. If Clerk O'Donnell refuses the request, Record will ask Supreme Court Justice Dixon to instruct O'Donnell to change his mind.

NEW OVERLAND WIRELESS FEAT

All records in overland wireless messages were broken yesterday when the De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company communicated from Chicago with the St. Louis Exposition, a distance of over 300 miles. Heretofore the overland record has been 107 miles. However, the De Forest Company sent war messages for The London Times-NEW YORK TIMES from Chemulpho to Wei-hai-Wei, China, over a dozen islands, the distance between the two points being 275 miles.

The new Chicago station just opened between that city and St. Louis marks the inauguration of a big land service by the De Forest Company. Already the company has stations in Cleveland and Buffalo, and at Port Huron, Mich. These, with two others to be built, will form relays for a line between New York and St. Louis, which will be in operation in about six months, according to the company.

Speaking of the record-breaking performance in Chicago yesterday, a representative of the company in this city said the majority of scientists have been doubtful about the possibility of sending messages overland, when the current that transmits them has to pass through many obstacles. The station in Chicago, he said, was situated on the north side, with the result that the messages for St. Louis had to pass through every skyscraper, every power house, and every elevated structure in the heart of the city. However, there was not a hitch.

The station in New York City, at 42 Broadway, is now practically ready for the contemplated New York-St. Louis service. Eventually, it was said, the company would be able to receive messages for San Francisco and the other ports on the Pacific. This date, it was added, was not very far distant.

TEACHES PRACTICAL CHARITY.

New York School of Philanthropy Offers Social Service Courses.

The New York School of Philanthropy, which opens again in the United Charities Building, 105 East Twenty-second Street, on Oct. 4, will include among the list of lecturers for this season some of the best-known philanthropists in the State and city. The speakers will present themes vital and interesting to persons in benevolent work and to the public at large.

The School of Philanthropy is looked upon as doing in the line of practical charity very much the same kind of work as is done in medical clinics for the benefit of students and general practitioners. It is conducted in the belief that as the possibilities of social service develop, the demand for trained workers increases, particularly in a city like New York, where the opportunity for doing good is combined with that for studying social conditions.

There will be seven main courses of lectures, with from six to eight series in each course. Each series will consist of from two to twenty lectures, and there will also be a number of extra addresses. In the programme for the coming term there are included lectures on Italian characteristics by Gino C. Speranza, lectures on the Jewish immigrant by Dr. David Blaustein, and several on the negro, North and South, by Carl Kelsey of the University of Pennsylvania. The course on constructive social work is particularly complete, with a series of municipal reform activities by Lawrence Veiller, on welfare work by Miss Gertrude Beeks, on settlements by Graham Taylor of the Chicago commission, and on the Board of Health by Dr. H. M. Biggs. The sessions will be held from 9 to 1 o'clock daily.

STOLEN PUP KNEW WAY HOME.

Held Thief for Police, but Refused to Let Them Escort Him.

Thomas P. Wilson of First Avenue and First Street, College Point, L. I., has a bullpup that not only knows how to take care of itself, but also knows the way home from a distance. Yesterday a man reached over Wilson's fence and slipped his fingers beneath the heavy collar around the dog's neck while he was asleep. Gathering the dog up in his arms, the man fled for a trolley car.

Wilson telephoned the Flushing police about the theft, and two detectives were sent to meet the car. They arrived at Lawrence Street and Broadway just as the car stopped to let off a man with a bull terrier. The dog wriggled free and held the man by the leg until the officers could take him into custody. Then the dog eluded the attempt of the detectives to capture him and struck out for home. Wilson again telephoned to the police not to bother, as the dog had returned. Wilson refused to make a complaint, and the man with the sore shin was allowed to go.

McCOMB'S DAUGHTERS OBJECT.

Mrs. Herzog and Mrs. Garth Complain of Executors' Accounting.

WHITE PLAINS, Sept. 10.—The contest over the estate of J. J. McComb came up again to-day in the Surrogate's Court, when objections were filed by Lillie M. Garth and Fannie McComb Herzog, daughters of Mr. McComb, to the accounting of the executors of the estate. Mrs. Herzog successfully contested that provision of the will which cut her off with $15,000 a year.

Mrs. Herzog and her sister allege that no proper vouchers have been filed by the executors for the payment of moneys by them; that no statement has been made of large holdings of real estate upon which the executors had credited themselves with large disbursements; that the executors had not set aside a sum to produce an income of $12,000 for the widow, and that after her death no distribution was made of the principal sum. The complainants also object to items amounting to $604,000 which, it is alleged, do not constitute part of the estate, and to large legal and medical fees said to have been paid out by the executors. The case will come up on Oct. 10.

UNIONS FAST TIRING OF BUILDING TRADE WAR

Many Carpenters Signing Arbitration Agreement as Individuals.

MARBLE WORKERS' DEMAND

Want Stone Cutters to End Their Strike—Tile Layers May Settle To-morrow.

It was expected at the Building Trades Club yesterday that a week would see the trouble in the building trades ended through the capitulation of the unions. A large number of carpenters signed the arbitration agreement individually at the rooms of the club, and a number of master carpenters will have their contracts fully manned to-morrow.

The marble workers, who are anxious to return to work and are negotiating for a settlement, are expected to do missionary work among the other trades involved in the trouble. Lewis J. Harding, Chairman of the Press Committee of the Building Trades Employers' Association, said yesterday that the marble industry had sent an ultimatum to the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Union, the cause of the strike on the Trinity Building, which started the troubles originally. The ultimatum was to the effect that unless the Journeymen Stone Cutters' Union settled with the employers by Tuesday, or, failing in that, refrained from going on a general strike, the marble workers would go on strike on Wednesday.

Mr. Harding was asked if this ultimatum did not savor of war as much as of peace. He replied:

"I am pretty well assured that the marble workers will not strike or have to carry out the ultimatum. The stone cutters, I believe, will make a settlement. I have reason to believe also that the tile layers will seek a settlement to-morrow. There are indications that they want to settle.

Other employers who were seen said that their locked-out employes were tired of being out and anxious to find an excuse for a settlement. In the larger trades, with the exception of the plumbers and electrical workers, the employers will give the trades a day or two to come back, even after they have started to form new unions.

WOMAN SLEUTH GOT MAN.

Alleged Thief Knocked Her Down, but Was Arrested.

Miss Laura Cantwell, a small and slender detective employed in a Broadway department store, arrested a man on Broadway near Thirty-fourth Street yesterday afternoon after, as she says, he had knocked her down. Miss Cantwell says that she saw the man take some manicure instruments from a counter and that she followed him until he left the store. She then touched him on the arm and asked him to return with her to the office.

His reply was to knock her down with a heavy blow in the face, she says, and dash up Broadway. A young man who had witnessed the affair then grappled with the man and he was held by Miss Cantwell until another detective arrived. The prisoner was then taken to the Tenderloin Police Station. There he said he was William Bartlett.

BROOK CLUB GROWS IN FAVOR.

Not Only an All Night, but Day Club as Well, Members Say.

The Brook, the new club at 6 East Thirty-fifth Street, with its continuous-service plan, is proving immensely popular. Among the latest acceptances to membership are Col. William Jay, John G. Hecksher, Charles M. Oelrichs, Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., Philip M. Lydig, and Elisha Dyer, Jr. The officers are: Center Hitchcock, President; Oliver H. P. Belmont, Vice President; Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler, Secretary, and Thomas B. Clarke, Treasurer. Oliver H. P. Belmont is Chairman of the Executive Committee, with Frederick Gebhard and Edward H. Bulkeley as assistants. On the Board of Governors besides those named are Horace Walcott Robbins, R. Livingston Beeckman, Franklin Bartlett, Edward A. Crowninshield, Charles T. Barney, Stanford White, Robert P. Perkins, De Courcy Forbes, George Blair Painter, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and J. Borden Harriman.

The idea of continuous service is founded on Tennyson's brook, "going on forever," and one of the features is that a member may bring in a guest at any time, the only condition being that the guest shall leave with or before the member. A Governor may extend the privilege a month longer. The Brook is not alone an all-night or a supper club; it has just as large a gathering in the afternoons as at night. The upper stories are arranged for bedrooms, and there is a long table in the dining room, which is another homelike feature, at which twenty-four men may sit. There is also a café in an arbored lattice room, where Robert Reid's large picture of the Brook is the chief decoration.

Hannah Elias Files Her Answer.

The answer of Hannah Elias to John R. Platt's suit was filed yesterday. The negress admits she received large sums from the aged Mr. Platt, but denies that she obtained $685,385 by threatening him. She admits obtaining a divorce from her husband, but denies that she paid $6,000 to him at the time, as alleged in the complaint. The answer was sworn to before a notary at Long Branch, where she has been spending the Summer.

OUTSIDE SALES WARNING UP.

May Be a Hit at the Stock Exchange's "Up-Town Crowd."

The official bulletin issued by the Stock Exchange yesterday contained a notice that by order of the Committee of Arrangements special attention was called to a resolution adopted in 1886 which declared that "any member who shall directly himself, or indirectly through another, buy, sell, trade, deal, and execute any order or make any bargain in any securities dealt in on this Exchange, at or in any public place in the City of New York other than this Exchange, shall be considered as committing a breach of faith with his fellow members and guilty of an act detrimental to the interest and welfare of this Exchange."

No explanation of this notice was obtainable at the Stock Exchange yesterday. The old resolution was passed to do away with the "night" stock exchange which was held in an up-town hotel during a busy financial period. It is possible that the Committee of Arrangements have found that the rules are being violated at the nightly meetings which are now being held at a well-known hotel by the so-called "up-town crowd."

"SIGGY" AND "LOTTA."

Sigmund Gerothwohl, an insurance broker, was arrested yesterday on an order issued by Supreme Court Justice Blanchard in an action for $25,000, brought against Gerothwohl by Frederick Hans Rohter, who alleges that the broker alienated the affections of Mrs. Rohter.

The Rohters were married in 1888. In 1902, Rohter says, he went to Europe. When he returned to his home at 148 East Sixtieth Street, he asserts, Mrs. Rohter admitted having transferred her affections, and advised her husband to get quarters elsewhere. Then, he says, he obtained possession of several letters signed "Siggy," and addressed to his wife in such ways as "My Only Beloved Lotta" and "My Dear, Good, Fat Lotta." These letters expressed the hope that the two would soon be married.

THIEVES OUT AT RELIEF TIME.

Robbed Fourth Avenue Stores While Police Were Changing.

There were four attempts at burglary along Fourth Avenue shortly after midnight yesterday while the police of the two stations which cover the avenue, the West Thirtieth and the East Thirty-fifth Street, were changing posts.

None of the burglaries was attended with much success, but it is considered remarkable that in this neighborhood at such an hour the gang succeeded in gaining entrance without attracting the attention of the police. The burglars entered stores along the avenue at 441, 448, 446, and 442, but got nothing of value.

MARRIAGE CALLS TEACHERS.

Ten Young School Ma'ams Resign in Jersey City at Once.

Superintendent of Schools Snyder of Jersey City, who, in his last two annual reports, bewailed the lack of teachers, has just had another reduction of his force. It is a rule of the board not to employ married women in the classrooms, and ten young school ma'ams who had reasons to take offense at this edict handed in their resignations Friday night.

Some of them had been married during the vacation season, and would have resigned sooner if they had not already been paid up to the close of the season. The board allows the teachers at the close of the schools for the Summer to draw their salaries for July and August in advance. The prospective Summer brides were very secretive about their wedding arrangements when they applied for the advance payments. One of the ten is said to have been married when she drew her advance money.

Those of the ten who have not already married are to wed so soon that they did not think it worth while to begin work with the reopening of the school year.

FINANCIAL AND REAL ESTATE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1904.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

The characteristic of last week's business in the stock market was the manner in which it withstood the test of realizing sales. Any market rises when there is no pressure to sell and there is even slight volume of buying. But when shares are sold by several thousands in single lots, and by successive thousands with only concessions of eighths, and with renewal of the rise upon cessation of selling, it is impossible to consider it a distributive market. It is only the smaller operators who are parting with their stocks. The larger interests, who bought earlier and have larger profits, still have their eyes on the future, and think the outlook good enough to take a risk upon crop accidents. That danger is not blinked. There is no office boy who does not know how serious it is, and is not nervous about it. The Government's report yesterday was almost good enough. A promise at this late date of 540,000,000 bushels of wheat and 2,500,000,000 of corn is ample. Nevertheless, if there should be damage to corn on the scale of 1901, it would stampede even the veterans who steadied the list through the wheat scare, and who will be very sure before they surrender to the bulletinists. A break following information publicly available will not be so serious as a slipping off of prices a little before the information leaks out. For it is a peculiarity of crop information that it is seldom published before the market is prepared for it. Organizations of thousands of correspondents are not maintained at large expense for purposes of benevolence or the health of the proprietor. When he parts with his information it is because his game is made. If his news is good he is ready to supply those who buy upon it, and if it is bad he is prepared to buy whatever is sold upon it. The lamb crop is as regular as any which falls before the reaper, or the simple game would cease to work. Meanwhile the old hands content themselves with sure things. For example, the cotton market is going through its usual ups and downs, and yet only one thing is as sure as any speculative thing can be—that whatever the range of prices, and whatever the nature of the crops, the pressure of new supplies always carries down options at this season.

Ordinarily that rule would be good enough to sell the market upon; but this is a year in which everything has gone by contraries. In the cotton market options sold down long and steadily with progress of proof that the Government's estimate of a short yield—which had been rejected by all the knowing ones—was correct. It was reaction from an overbought condition, of course. In the stock market contrariness has been shown by reaction upward from an oversold and sold out condition. The news has averaged discouraging, rather than stimulating, and it is a Presidential year, which fact alone calls for depression. Yet there has been trading rivaling markets set aflame by booming news, which is not always or necessarily false news. There is no doubt about this year's disturbing news; the singular fact is that in proportion as it has been true and important the market has failed to respond to it. When St. Paul was at 137 wheat was 91. St. Paul is now near 160, and wheat is 20 points higher also, for good and sufficient reason. The smaller the market and the hotter the price cutting in the iron trade the stronger Steel has been. Reading touched its highest in the week just ended when this year's output of anthracite was announced as four and a quarter million tons smaller than last year. The soft coalers acted with the same erratic cheerfulness. It is useless to multiply instances. Everybody who has watched the market at all knows that this year's market is the best example of the maxim that early and correct information is worse than useless. It is positively dangerous. It was Mark Twain who remarked how seriously knowledge of the facts hampered a literary artist. In a similar way knowledge of the facts warps the judgment of a financial operator. For example, any one in Wall Street who had known that the Steel Trust would be fighting as it is for its reduced share of business at cut rates would almost certainly have attached more importance to that fact affecting intrinsic values than to that other mere piece of market information that the wise ones were to a man short of the preferred at about the price for which they had bought the common. Naturally the mere market situation has controlled the intrinsic considerations, whose effect is nevertheless certain to be felt, but at another time.

In this cheerful, booming, topsy-turvy condition of things, which makes it as mad to fight the rise on poor news as it would have been to buy the list last year on good news, (which was never lacking although obscured at times by individual misfortunes,) there are two opinions about conditions, although there is only one movement in prices. Said one disgruntled bear last week when asked for his opinion about a situation in which he has been wrong for months, after having been right for a year: "It reminds me of a friend of mine who saw a bunch of trees out of a Pullman window and made up his mind to start a furniture factory. He bought the trees all right, after which he learned that they were planted for purposes of irrigation by the Government and were watched by United States cavalry, so that they were not available for lumber. My friend thereupon decided to sell his timber tract as town lots. They would not sell at $100, so he concluded they were too cheap, and marked them up to $1,000. They did not sell any better, but he was able to borrow $500 on them, and the banks broke. My friend came out all right." It is a caricature, of course, but there is a resemblance in the portrait. Where would the list be selling if the banks were not pursuing borrowers to make them pay the cost of bought deposits, and if the deterioration in intrinsic conditions were controlling, rather than hopes of the future? And how many are seriously considering buying stocks which they condemned but a few weeks ago solely because their price was too cheap? There is a certain second preferred stock which was a fine talking target for the bears. They would say "Four per cent. guaranteed and selling below 50. Why don't you buy it? It's because the price tells you the dividend will be passed." The stock is now selling at 60, and it seems more attractive than at 40 odd, yet all that has happened in the interval is successive reports of decreasing earnings.

The other side was very well presented by one of those shrewd, cool, far-seeing houses which began buying almost a year ago, and which has had difficulty to keep its stock in trade replenished in recent months. Being asked to expound a situation where usual signs fail and the rules of Alice in Wonderland obtain, he said: "My judgment of this market is based on such facts as these. We run an advertisement in your paper, and a few days ago we had a letter from a total stranger saying he had seen it, and asking us to forward our list. We do so often, and often hear no more. But in a few days this stranger from an inland city came back with a second letter reading: 'Dear Sirs—Inclosed please find my check for $64,000 in payment for 2,000 shares of ——. Please buy at the market, have it transferred to my name, and hold for my remittance to adjust the account.' That is no singular occurrence. In another case we were asked to take a bond issue of a Mexican railway, and declined, not judging the bonds attractive. But we took an option on the lot, and within three weeks every bond was sold. These are some of the experiences which make us think this is an investors' market, and not an operators' market, nor a bankers' market, nor an artificial market, nor any of the other hard names they call it. The market suits us, and we are letting our customers buy selected things even at the rise."

It may be so. One of the saddest recollections of the talent is the way in which the ignorant hoi polloi mobbed Wall Street after McKinley's election and made big money on the rise which "conservative" critics constantly fought as excessive. The event justified the warning, but, sad to relate, the ignorant hoi polloi sold out betimes, and the famous rich men's panic followed the discovery that the indigestibles were undistributables. They have been lugged long and painfully, and the table is still set for the innocents, who once more are feeling hungry. Again the stage is set for another act in the comedy of "Cupidity Versus Experience," and possibly once more the outsiders and the tenderfeet, rushing in where the wily ones fear to tread, will get all the best of it.

Could anything be more alluring to the inexperienced or less intelligible to anybody than such a scheme as was announced at the week end? A company which reports itself in a highly prosperous condition reorganizes itself for no other reason than that underwriters were unable to distribute their load. By way of "simplifying" matters a hundred million of Treasury assets is wiped out. Could conservatism go further? And is it not pure captiousness to suggest that as the hundred millions written off cost nothing except the price of paper and ink the increased security of the scheme is only apparent to those who have better information than that possessed by the generality? The earnings reported figure out 25 per cent. upon the lowest class of the new securities. Par is cheap even for an industrial whose earnings are stable at that rate, and the bonds ahead of such stock should be almost gilt-edged. A possible criticism would be that one year's earnings are scant basis for cautious investors to act upon, and that a certification of accounts by accredited auditors and appraisers would be reassuring. And something more explicit might have been said about the outstanding notes which a reputable house advertises as an obligation prior to the indigestible 4 per cents retired by the new deal. But this is by the way, and without prejudice to a scheme which speaks for itself, and which is cited only as the verdict of experienced diagnosticians that the time is ripe for fresh appeals to the public's purse. Ordinarily such flotations are made when it is a good time to sell stocks. Better hopes for the market's future must be based upon the opinions of judges in another class to the effect that stocks are rising because conditions are improving. It is impossible not to admire the intelligence which long ago foresaw the intrinsic conditions now near, and the nerve and resources which have brought the market thus far on its way. If those who have fostered the improvement had been in the same class with those who made earlier and abortive attempts at the same thing they would have sold out quietly while talking for the rise. They have held their stocks—the market proves it—and they will be, because they must be, the mainstay of the market if trials lie before it.

THE UPWARD TENDENCY

Explained by Increasing Stability of Business.

The Industrial Position Secure—British Railways and Our Own—Hopeful Views Justified.

That ours is a "bull" country few thinking people have denied. The admission is general that the country is young and not densely populated or fully developed. Increasing population and wealth irresistibly force the tide of values higher with every boom. Every epoch of advancement in our history has scored up commercial records never before attained. The argument that is always uppermost concerns not the final outcome, but the temporary fluctuation of business. And since the financial revival of recent weeks has awakened hopes that we have made another turn toward the better side of things, it is instructive to note some points wherein reactions of to-day differ from setbacks of the past. For history is making every day and precedent has only a limited application.

We no longer witness or look for the severe fluctuations in railroad progress that ten and twenty years ago were common. In a measure the industrial combinations of the past five years have assumed the uncertain position formerly held by the transportation industry, and the latter has attained a more solid and secure standing. And yet, overcapitalized as they are, and subject to competition and to corrupt management, our industrials are in many ways more firmly intrenched than were our railroads in 1884. In the first place, the railroads were then building new lines into untried territory and were overcapitalizing an undeveloped and uncertain business. But our industrials are not experimenting in new fields. Old and tried companies have simply combined for mutual good. The craze for combination begot injudicious organizations, but the whole movement should not be judged by a few vicious examples. During two years of the most acute and sudden setback the majority of the new trusts have maintained themselves in good preparation for the next activity, for the industrials have been unoppressed by the weight of fixed charges which brought down the railroads in previous years.

It is but fair, however, to allow that the newer the industry the wider the fluctuation in its affairs. Inversely, stability and long existence are fellows. Hence the growing conviction that our railroad stocks are all progressing toward an investment basis. Some surprise was expressed that, during 1903, with its stagnant steel business and its general commercial depression, railroad gross earnings kept constantly advancing. The fact is that the tide of railroad earnings is continually being swelled by the ever-increasing density of our country's settlement. This factor is so strong an influence that it offsets the effect of commercial depression, and earnings actually increase, although at a reduced rate, while trade slackens.

There are some strongly suggestive hints to one who is interested in our railroad progress, in the results attained upon English railroads. There gross earnings always increase. Here good judges have said that we may hereafter expect the same result. Since 1870 there have been but three years when English railroads have shown reduced earnings. One was in 1879, when the decline measured about 2 per cent.; in 1885 there was a loss of 1¼ per cent., and in 1893, the year of the great coal strike for a minimum wage, a loss of 1¾ per cent. In the very active years of 1898, 1899, and 1901 English railroad earnings advanced very rapidly, but they kept on advancing right through the depression of 1901 and of 1903. The first six months of 1904 showed a small gain—just under 1 per cent. Traffic is pretty well developed in England and tends to fluctuate, but narrowly, so vast is the unchanging total of necessary local business. There is so much similarity in the tendency of railroad affairs here and abroad that we may be said to be approaching an equally stable condition.

It is interesting to note, however, that the net earnings of British roads have shown the same decreasing tendency that they have here, but that the high level of expenses which caused decreasing net is now giving way to an economical standard. The first six months of 1904 showed an increase in gross upon nineteen British railroads of £398,000, and in net of £157,000. But in the period between 1899 and 1901 net earnings declined from £13,329,000 to £10,162,000, and the average dividend rate from 5.65 per cent. to 4.28 per cent., while gross earnings were meantime advancing from £101,687,000 to £105,500,000. And at present gross is running at the rate per year of £110,300,000, with net only £12,136,000, and dividends at the rate of 4.72 per cent.

The altered conditions of recent years have demanded huge rebuilding outlays in England as well as here, in order that, ultimately, economy of operation may result. The goal is now being approached in both countries. Capital outlays, which were, upon the nineteen British roads referred to, as high as £9,637,000 in six months in 1900, and which ranged at a high level until 1903, have been but £5,370,000 during the past six months. The London Statist, in summing up the situation, says: "Now that the railway companies have begun to make real economies, we do not doubt that their efforts to reduce both their revenue and capital outlays will be of great benefit to themselves and to the community. Economy in revenue expenditures and of capital will mean in a relatively short time increasing profits and dividends."

Such a summary of the British situation has even stronger application to our own railroad position. The premises upon which the conclusion is based are the same in either case. The confidence of our investing public and the rise in security values while times still are depressed are founded upon a conviction that the same favorable conclusion is not long to be postponed in this country. However much they may overdo it at times, the speculative and the investing public are imbued with confidence, viewing reactions and slumps as but temporary accompaniments of progress. Rightly or wrongly, that part of the community which registers its opinions in Wall Street, is now busily discounting what it conceives to be a resumption of "the upward tendency."

English Insolvency.

An interesting feature of the annual report on bankruptcy is that though the total number of insolvencies in 1903 was somewhat larger than in 1902, there has again been a decrease in the number of receiving orders in which the unsecured liabilities were £20,000 and upward, viz., from 30 with liabilities of £1,552,400 to 28 with liabilities of £1,367,300.—The London Telegraph.

Told 'Round the Ticker.

HENRY CLEWS from time to time posts on the bulletin board of his office typewritten remarks embodying his views on current topics, which are generally enlargements of the talks he gives at various times during the day to his customers and which are known as "Clews's Sunday School talks." The other day this sentence appeared in a eulogy on one of the Presidential candidates: "When times are bad it causes distress in millions of homes, which is hell on earth to them." Since then his office has been trying to figure out just how many millions of homes there can be when there are only 80,000,000 people in the country.

EZRA LINCOLN, senior partner of Lincoln, Caswell & Co., sailed for home from Liverpool Friday. He has been in England and Scotland for the past six weeks, combining business and pleasure.

JAMES STILLMAN, President of the National City Bank, is one of the last of the big financiers to return to the Street. Mr. Stillman arrived yesterday on the Celtic and he will be just in time to prepare his address to the American Bankers' Association on Wednesday.

GEORGE F. BAKER, President of the First National Bank, is expected home this week, and Clement A. Griscom took vessel for this country yesterday.

H. H. ROGERS of the Standard Oil Company, who has been abroad since July 27, sailed yesterday for home, as he will be called upon to testify very soon in the suit against the Bay State Gas Company in Boston. With his return the Street will once more have its full complement of leaders.

FREDERICK O. BEACH, who has been a special partner in the firm of R. H. Thomas & Co., has severed his connection with that firm and has been admitted as a special partner to the firm of Taylor & Robinson. The other members of R. H. Thomas & Co. will continue the partnership.

E. TOWNSEND IRWIN, it was announced yesterday, has been admitted to the firm of Shearson, Hammill & Co.

H. TOWNSEND DAVIS is up for membership in the Stock Exchange, having bought the seat of Edwin Corning. His sponsors are John P. Grier and W. H. Van Antwerp. The seat of Warren B. Smith, deceased, has been transferred to Alfred Flegenheimer.

WILLIAM BUSTON, the English cotton expert, was badly fooled by a cotton planter on the occasion of his last visit to this country, according to a story told on the Cotton Exchange. He had tied white ribbons to certain bolls on the plantation in order to see what changes they would undergo in two weeks. During his absence the planter removed the ribbons and tied them to worm-eaten bolls, so that when Buston returned he could hardly believe his eyes, for the cotton seemed to have deteriorated terribly. When the planter explained the matter Buston is said to have been unable to see the joke.

"BILLY" OLIVER, one of the biggest members of the Stock Exchange, visited the curb yesterday to do some trading, and the curb brokers thought it a good joke to initiate him. They tried to steal his fine scarf pin, but "Billy" was "next" for he had too much experience from his connection with the initiation exercises on the Stock Exchange to fall an easy prey. When he went away the brokers declared that he had made a hole in the curb, a statement which will be appreciated by those who are familiar with his size and his cleverness as a trader.

W. K. MATHEWS, Vice President of the White Knob Copper Company, who was taken very seriously ill with typhoid fever several weeks ago while on his way West to visit the properties of the company, and who, since then has been confined to the hospital in Duluth, is now on the road to recovery, but it not to return to his office for some time.

WILLIAM G. TITUS, one of the best-known and most successful specialists in bank and trust company stocks on the Street, is at present away on a short vacation. Unless there is a material increase in activity among his specialties, Mr. Titus will remain until about the end of the month.

A. P. HEINZE, and JOHN McGUINISS of the Montana Ore Purchasing Company went to Butte, Mont., a few days ago, and will probably remain West looking after the affairs of the company until the beginning of November.

CORN SCARES IN SEPTEMBER.

Have Occurred Regularly in Recent Years Without Doing Much Harm.

Early last week the stock market wavered a little under the fear of coming reports about damage to the corn crop. It was known that the crop experts were going through the corn region, and as the tip had been spread quite broadly that corn was a purchase it was expected that their reports would indicate a smaller crop. The scare did not, however, materialize, and in the meantime the market took on strength, and it was doubted if damage reports would receive much credence.

Injury to the corn crop some time in September has been a feature of the speculative markets for the last few years, but in looking over the records of earlier years nothing is found to indicate that much attention was paid to damage reports in that month. Formerly scares were more frequent during the first part of the Summer. Whether this was due to the weather, the last few Summers having been very cold, with early frosts, or whether it was due to other causes, it is vain to discuss. It is more important to point out that frost scares in September have not generally been followed by real damage. There was a frost scare in 1902 which sent cash corn in that month up to 71. Nevertheless the crop for that year exceeded 2,500,000,000 bushels. Again, in 1903, there was much anxiety about the corn crop, and frosts were actually reported about the middle of the month. It turned out, however, that only a limited area had been affected, and the recurrence of warm weather later made the crop safe and the final figures showed a harvest exceeding 2,200,000,000 bushels.

These figures would seem to indicate that crop-damage reports at this time are likely to mislead if taken too seriously.

THE COAL TRADE OUTLOOK

Feeling and Prospects Leave Little to be Desired.

Some Quietness in Present Trade Affords Time and Opportunity for Recuperation and Future Activity.

While there has been dullness in the coal trade for a few weeks past, the returns of output do not show any great reduction from former years, even taking the last great year's tonnage into consideration. All the indications that are now discernible are for better things along the line of tonnage and price, for both hard and soft coal. In fact, one may fairly say that there is an improving tone to trade; the time is now at hand, or approaching, when coal is wanted for actual household use, and this induces a change in opinion of trade conditions, as against anything which has been heard during the past few weeks. It is evident enough that coal will be wanted in the usual large quantity during the next six months, and there is no doubt that those consumers who wish to gain peace and comfort will put it away as early as possible. The carrying companies are not now much better prepared for handling traffic than they were a year ago, and there are other articles of merchandise besides coal. It is evident, from the reports which come to hand, that the move toward better things is gradually increasing in volume, and one must remember that the course of events in this country is seldom backward. The tonnage of coal of all kinds last year was a large one, and of great value in every way, but with more settled conditions and lower values prevailing there is not so much reason for complaint of the situation as a whole as some imagine. The fuel industry has been long misunderstood, but the gain along the line of its importance to the country is appreciable. Railroad companies find in it a large share of their prosperity, and this will grow as time goes along, while the markets are steadied by the fact that larger and more intelligent interests are now in control, (or are becoming the controllers,) and the public is being served at figures which are not in any degree exorbitant. In no other country can the manufacturer secure a supply of fuel at so little cost, and the best domestic fuel of the world is had at figures far below what inferior grades are sold at elsewhere. We have heard a great deal this Summer about soft coal being "in the dumps," and, looked at in an abstract way, the pronouncement is true. There has been more bituminous fuel mined and shipped to the various markets the past few months than could be sold at a fair profit. And, what is perfectly natural under such circumstances, competitive prices have been forced gradually down, while thousands of buyers have either held off beyond their usual time for contracting, or else have taken advantage of the situation to get their supplies at bargain rates. While the trade at large has been going through this experience, various members of it, the more fortunately situated ones, perhaps, have adopted the eminently wise method of giving themselves and their operations the rest that had deserved after several years of strenuous, upbuilding business. There could have been no better way than this to help restore normal conditions of trade. Nor was there anything unusual or particularly risky about it; things had simply been going on too fast for so long a time that a slackening up seemed to many fraught with a danger not wholly there. Comparisons of business done in 1904 were more apt to be made with expectations based on an increase over 1902 and 1903 than with the figures of, say, 1898 or 1900.

Take five years as a unit in the production of coal, instead of one year, and the advance of each period over that of its immediate predecessor and all that have gone before is marked. The invariable tendency is to go ahead, even if some one year is not up to expectations. This is particularly the case with the quantity of coal mined, and when it comes to price, both hard and soft coal are sold at better average prices now than five years ago. It is very much better to speak of good things than of poor things, although we know that the latter exist. The general average, which determines the worth and tendency of all things, is favorable, and progress is the mark of the trade throughout. To-day the production of hard coal is beyond the figures which experts of only ten years ago said would be possible with all the anthracite mines working every day in the year, and the statistics of bituminous are likewise beyond the reasonable expectations of even five years ago. Considering these things, the present situation is not so bad.

The labor situation in the coal districts is as good as one could look for; the vast area of production that is covered in the Inter-State agreement is at work in good shape, and the output is up to normal. There are a few outlying places where the agreements have to be renewed, and in these there is the disposition on the part of labor not to take a reduction, but ultimately this will come, for the changed conditions from the boom period of eighteen months ago do not warrant a continuance of prices paid under that condition of affairs. In the meantime, any idleness that occurs inures to the good of the producers.

The coke trade is picking up in orderly fashion as the uplift in the demand for iron and steel products grows, and this is growing in a way that is quite satisfactory to those engaged in the trade. Some may think that the growth is slow, but, to those experienced in the management of manufacturing properties, about the most undesirable thing that could happen would be a sudden spurt that would inflate demand and create a condition that would be followed, basing the judgment on past experience, by a reduction that would do infinite harm and create distrust and delay next year. All the producers of iron and steel products are preparing for an active year in 1905, 1906, and 1907. Plants are better and more economically equipped, transportation facilities are improved, and in many ways the situation is favorable for the transaction of a larger volume of business with less friction and delay in meeting the demands of consumers. To a large extent this is also true of the coal-producing companies; there has been a general overhauling of methods, a general systematization of management, the elimination of excrescences, the concentration of authority, and the weeding out of inexperienced men who were installed three years ago largely because, and only because, they had a "pull." Things with the greater corporations are getting down to solid business methods and sound business system, errors of judgment have been detected and recognized, and corrective treatment applied. The report of operation and output of the Connellsville region, the largest coke-producing district, shows a total of 21,157 ovens, of which 13,685 were active and 9,472 idle. This week the Frick Company will blow in several hundred ovens, among them some plants that have been idle for a month or two.

WANTED—AN EXPLANATION.

Relations Between Transit Development Co. and B. R. T. Need Clearing Up.

In the application of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company to the New York Stock Exchange for the listing of $5,000,000 additional first refunding bonds, which application was granted last week, appears a somewhat remarkable revelation. It is stated there that part of the mortgage was used for the purpose of acquiring $5,210,810 certificates of indebtedness of the Transit Development Company. This is one of the subsidiary companies of the system, and its business consists in buying equipment and supplies for the parent concern. Just why a subsidiary company should be necessary to act as purchasing agent does not appear, but it does appear that the entire capital stock of the company consists of only 250 shares. The value of the shares is placed slightly above par. It also appears that the certificates of indebtedness of the company were acquired at about par, and it would therefore further appear that the Transit Development Company must be an exceedingly prosperous concern. Else how could it secure a credit of over $5,000,000 with a capital of only $25,000?

How the thing is done is something of a mystery. Suppose the transit company buys $80,000 worth of cars and issues $100,000 in certificates of indebtedness to pay for them. Some one has to take up the certificates, for the car companies will not. The question arises at what price the certificates are discounted. When they have been discounted are they sold back to the parent company at a profit, bonds being taken therefor at another discount? It is conceivable that this procedure would put a profit into somebody's pockets which would exceed any possible return by the antiquated way of paying dividends, for by the latter method the public would get a share of the profits. Can it be that the Transit Development Company is the ladle with which the cream is skimmed off the milk?

COTTON DOINGS ABROAD.

English Spinners Denounce Speculation but Buy Spot Cotton.

With the cotton market in this country in a condition of temporary paralysis due largely to the uncertainty regarding the actual state of the new crop it may be of interest to record the latest developments abroad in the fight by the manufacturers against what they are pleased to call "gamblers in the raw material." British and other spinners have recently been holding meetings again in their endeavors to prevent a continued cotton corner. The speeches were especially bitter against the "arrogant boast of the Yankees that they would sweep European cotton fabrics from the markets." It was decided to shut down Saturdays and Mondays and to buy as little cotton during September as possible. The latter proposition is capable of stretching and does not seem to be followed very strictly, for almost every bale of cotton that is coming to market is being exported to England, and if American spinners do not take care they may again have to lay in their supplies at higher prices, just as they did last year.

Besides it is also apparent that all the gamblers in raw cotton are not confined to the United States. Many of the Lancashire mills that use only the finer Egyptian staple are complaining that the price of that cotton is being held at a high level by manipulation. Egyptian cotton is finer even than Sea Island cotton, and is essential to a large part of the cotton industry in Lancashire. The fibre grown in the land of the pyramids at this time was introduced there by the French about 100 years ago. The first crop yielded only 10,000 pounds, but the cultivation increased rapidly until the production now amounts to 850,000,000 pounds a year, and acording to the experts the limit is not yet.

WORLD'S MERCHANT MARINE.

Recent statistics published in France estimate the total tonnage of the world's merchant marine at 33,643,000 tons, and the number of vessels at 24,533, of which 12,671 are steamships with 27,184,000 tons, and 12,182 are sailing ships with 6,459,000 tons. This gives an average of about 1,540 tons for steamers and 538 tons for sailing vessels.

Although the construction of large ships has greatly developed during late years, the greater part of the world's goods is still carried by vessels of average tonnage. The number of ships of over 10,000 tons is only eighty-nine. Of vessels over 5,000 tons, the following table gives the number and the flag floated:

VESSELS OF OVER 5,000 TONS.

The tonnage of the principal countries is as follows: England, 16,006,374; America, 3,671,956; Germany, 3,283,247; Norway, 1,653,740; France, 1,622,016; Italy, 1,180,335; Russia, 809,648; Spain, 714,447; Japan, 726,818; Sweden, 721,116; Netherlands, 658,845; Denmark, 581,247; Austria-Hungary, 578,697; Greece, 378,199; Belgium, 167,047; Brazil, 155,086; Turkey, 154,404; Chile, 103,758; Portugal, 101,404; Argentina, 95,780.—United States Consul Haynes, Rouen, France.

MERCANTILE MARINE.

J. Bruce Ismay's arrival in this country, which is expected this month, is likely to be marked by some radical changes in methods of operating the company of which he is President, especially in the schedule of sailings from the ports in this country. At present there is a hard and fast schedule, strictly adhered to, and this without consideration as to whether business justifies the sailings or not. Naturally, as far as the passenger service is concerned, the present method is the most desirable for passengers, but when the heavy expense entailed by each passage to and from Europe is considered, it is to be hoped, on behalf of the company, that some satisfactory schedule, which will be in accordance both with business requirements and with due consideration to the convenience of passenger traffic, will be evolved, with stimulating effect upon the revenue of the combine.

If the present rate war continues and extends any further the companies concerned in the struggle will be obliged to depend entirely upon profits from freight, as it is now possible to travel first-class for the same sum that it formerly cost to cross second class. At first it was thought that the rate-cutting would be confined to the steerage, but considering the lengths to which it has now been carried it is impossible to foretell results, except that the weaker companies will go to the wall.

The rate-cutting now in progress has brought to light even more forcibly than heretofore the inadequate immigration laws now in existence, as vast numbers of undesirable immigrants have been coming to this country. This state of affairs will likely result in more stringent laws being passed to prevent just this immigration largely fostered by rate-cutting.

BIG BANKERS' CONVENTION

The Thirtieth Annual Meet of the American Association.

TO DISCUSS IMPORTANT TOPICS

Several Thousand Delegates Expected to Attend—Sessions Will Last Four Days.

The convention of the American Bankers' Association, which will be held in this city during the coming week, will be one of the most interesting in the history of the association. The latter will on this occasion celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of its first convention, and will look back over a long period of successful activity in the development of the country at large through its banks. In that time the growth of banking in the United States has been extraordinary, and can only be measured in billions of dollars. But while many problems have been solved, there still remain perplexing and conflicting ideas to be unified, and many new puzzles constantly arise, the solution of which can be discussed with profit by the bankers assembled in convention.

Among the reports which should prove particularly interesting are those of the Committee on Currency Legislation and on Uniform Laws, while an address by A. B. Hepburn, President of the Chase National Bank, on the money situation should prove to be particularly illuminating in view of the great attention which this subject has held in the minds of the financial and commercial public. W. C. Robinson, President of the National Bank of Winfield, Kan., will deliver an address on the Western banker. That individual has become a factor of greater importance with every year of prosperity that the West has enjoyed. On his views as represented in the aggregate of reports which in the shape of letters maintain a constant flow to this centre of the country's finances depends the attitude of those considered leaders in finance. E. H. Harriman stated the other day that the stability of this country depended absolutely on the bankers in the country districts. He explained that the conservative attitude of those men which had succeeded the tendency of former years toward what was known as wild-cat banking, would make impossible the recurrence of such widespread conditions of panic and disaster as used to shake the business and manufacturing interests in decades gone by. The Western banker has now become, not only a barometer for the correct judging of the country's prosperity, but he has become a factor of the greatest importance in the financing of even more than local enterprises.

The worrisome question regarding the relations between banks and trust companies will be discussed by Eugene E. Prussing of Chicago, but on this point the trust companies will have something to say also at the convention of the trust companies' section of the association.

Ellis H. Roberts, Treasurer of the United States, will speak on the strength and weakness of American finance. This should be a prolific topic, especially if Mr. Roberts should include a discussion of the strength and weakness of the administration of United States finances, than which there can certainly be none more American. A few good and feasible suggestions for improvements along this line would be welcomed everywhere.

The convention will begin on Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, when it will be called to order in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria. Mayor McClellan will welcome the delegates on behalf of the city and James Stillman, as President of the Clearing House, will make an address on behalf of the New York City bankers. To show that ability in the banking line is independent, but not forgetful of religious feeling, each day the convention will be opened by prayer by some well-known divine. Bishop Potter will preside on Wednesday; Father Lavelle, Vicar General of St. Patrick's Cathedral, will officiate on Thursday, and the Rev. J. M. Farrar of the First Reformed Church of Brooklyn will speak on Friday.

Acting in accordance with the old rhyme about all work and no play making Jack a dull boy, the local committee has arranged for entertainments to brighten the evenings for the visitors. Trips to Luna Park, theatrical performances and a reception on Wednesday evening to the delegates and their ladies will be the features of that part of the programme. On Thursday evening the delegates will be taken to the New Amsterdam Theatre, where the entire house has been reserved for them. The show is "The Rogers Brothers in Paris," and it is light enough not to disturb the continuity of thought of anyone. Between the acts souvenirs and refreshments will be served to the ladies.

The trust company section, which will hold its convention on Tuesday, has a programme of its own. George W. Young, President of the United States Mortgage and Trust Company, will deliver the address of welcome. The most important address will be on the subject of cash reserves, and will be delivered by Edward T. Perine, General Manager of the Audit Company of New York. There will be a number of other topics of less general interest discussed by the convention at large. The committee representing the New York City Trust companies, independently of the Bankers' Association, has arranged a luncheon, which will be served to the members of the Trust Company section at 1:30 P. M. on Tuesday. The committee is composed of Clark Williams, L. L. Gillespie, A. K. Wood, J. F. Thompson, A. V. Heeley and P. S. Babcock.

It is expected that several thousand delegates will take part in the proceedings. The Illinois delegation will arrive on Monday, while the Kansas bankers will get in on Tuesday, both over the Albany Day Line. Many of the delegates will be entertained at the private home of their New York friends, but the others will fill the hotels to overflowing. In the financial district it is intended to welcome the delegates with a liberal display of flags. Everything has been done by the committee on arrangements to make the convention a memorable one.

The National Bank of North America has issued an illustrated pamphlet entitled "Canyons About Wall Street," which is intended to serve as a souvenir of the coming convention of the American Bankers' Association. The views shown are reproductions of photographs and they represent the financial district from all points of view.

No Pumice Stone Trust.

It was announced in the drug trade last week that the last attempt to form a combination to control the output of pumice stone in the Lipari Islands, from which the greater part of the world's supply comes, has failed. The attempt was abandoned, it is said, because of the jealousies among the competing companies.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong; Call Money Nominal, 1 Per Cent.

A Big and Booming Half Holiday Market—A Poor Bank Statement Has No Effect.

No Saturday this year has witnessed a market like yesterday's, which displayed all the characteristics of the earlier portion of the week. The volume of business would have been ample for most of the full days of this year, and was at the rate of a million shares. The regular piece of intelligence giving food for sober thought was supplied by the bank statement. And as matter of course nearly every stock rose. Among the few exceptions worth noting were Reading, Metropolitan Securities, and Union Pacific. Steel romped past 66, and the subsidiary iron companies enjoyed larger advances, which extended to railway supply companies. Consolidated Gas rose 4 points, and St. Paul was as strong as though there were no nervousness over the crop situation or the Government account of it which was not known during business. The produce markets were soft and the cotton market easy. The market closed at the top, under strong momentum, with nothing except the off chance of crop damage over Sunday to prevent accumulation of buying orders following leisurely consideration of the week's booming business. Sales made under such considerations almost never show a loss. Then is the ideal time for realizing profits. Blue Mondays are traditionally the time to get bargains, and booming Mondays the time to sell, if such is the operator's judgment.

In any case the market cannot run at its present rate much longer, for the banks cannot supply the resources both to move the crops and finance million-share days. Within a fortnight the surplus has fallen nearly twenty millions, or more than half its present total. Within the same time the bank loans have increased $30,000,000. The situation remains exceptionally strong, but the rate of deterioration is exceptionally rapid. It if not the demands of trade which are using up the surplus, although happily clearings are larger. Neither is it characteristically a crop-moving demand for currency as yet, although there is every indication that in time that demand will be unprecedented. It is a demand by pools and syndicates, and a too ready extension of accommodation by bankers eager to put to use deposits for which they have paid more than the going rate for money. Deposits thus secured are not owned here, and they are withdrawn without any consideration for local conditions. An early frost is not more withering upon the corn crop than is the crop-moving demand upon the most promising condition of the surplus and money market. The closing months of the year are traditionally more cheerful for bankers than for borrowers or operators upon borrowed funds. This year may prove an exception, but it is proceeding in the regular manner, which is that the United States alone of civilized nations moves its crops by contraction of credits. And the opposition allows the Administration to take credit for its record of financial legislation.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Conditions on the Stock Exchange Show a Tendency to Improve—Japanese Securities Fall and Russians Rise—Depression in the Mining Department.

LONDON, Sept. 10.—Conditions on the Stock Exchange showed a tendency to improvement this week, but it can hardly be said that any actual improvement took place or that any can be expected until the nervousness concerning the monetary situation is allayed. Plenty of money is to be had, but people are not ready to believe that the ease will be permanent.

In other words, confidence is lacking, and the public are keeping away from the Stock Exchange, leaving the trading mostly to the professionals.

A distinctly firmer tone characterized the market, though it did not lead to an increase in the volume of business. British and Indian Government stocks moved up a little, and about all other gilt-edged stocks displayed great firmness.

In the foreign department an interesting development was the setback in Japanese bonds, due to disappointment over the failure of the Mikado's troops to surround Gen. Kuropatkin and crush him. The same reason that caused the fall in Japanese securities affected Russians favorably, all Russian stocks gaining fractionally. The scrip of the Cuban loan moved up a point and a half.

Home rails were stronger at the close of the week than last Saturday, but the upward movement was generally fractional. The improvement was due to slightly better traffic returns.

American rails were the strongest stocks in the market, London reflecting New York's conditions. The quotations to-day make a handsome showing for these stocks, but the figures representing the advances over last week are not based on large dealings, but to a great extent are merely a sort of professional appraisement of the market values of the securities in question.

The feeling in the mining department was an exception to the general tone of the market. Not only was there a notable lack of business, but in addition there was depression and discouragement.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Sept. 10.—Money was superabundant in the market to-day and discounts were easy, influenced by a further shipment of gold from India. It is estimated that about $11,250,000 is now on the way to London from various quarters.

On the Stock Exchange the movements were irregular, and trading was rather dull on the approach of the settlement minimizing operations. Consols were quiet. Home rails were weakened by the proposed issue of $5,000,000 4 per cent. North British convertible preference stock. Americans were firm on New York support. The local operations were unimportant. Coalers were most in request. United States Steel was the feature. Trading closed quiet.

Japanese were slightly steadier. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 89⅝. Louisiana were firm.

Closing prices: Consols, for money, 88 7-16; consols, for the account, 88 9-16; Anaconda, 4⅜; Atchison, 84⅝; Atchison preferred, 101½; Baltimore and Ohio, 91⅝; Canadian Pacific, 152⅝; Chesapeake & Ohio, 43⅞; Chicago Great Western, 17⅛; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 162; De Beers, 18⅜; Denver and Rio Grande, 27⅝; Denver and Rio Grande preferred, 82; Erie, 32; Erie first preferred, 69⅛; Erie second preferred, 48; Illinois Central, 142½; Louisville and Nashville, 126; Missouri, Kansas and Texas, 24; New York Central, 128; Norfolk and Western, 70⅛; Norfolk and Western preferred, 92; Ontario and Western, 34¼; Pennsylvania, 65¾; Rand Mines, 10⅛; Reading, 35⅝; Reading first preferred, 83⅜; Reading second preferred, 39⅛; Southern Railway, 32⅜; Southern Railway preferred, 98⅛; Southern Pacific, 59⅜; Union Pacific, 102⅞; Union Pacific preferred, 96; United States Steel, 15⅛; United States Steel preferred, 66⅝; Wabash, 22⅛; Wabash preferred, 42¼; Spanish 4s, 87¾.

Gold premiums were quoted as follows: Madrid, 37.70; Lisbon, 19.50.

In Continental Circles.

PARIS, Sept. 10.—Prices on the Bourse to-day were firm, the war calm favorably influencing Internationals. Russian imperial fours were quoted at 93.15 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 508. The private rate of discount was 1¼ per cent. Three per cent. rentes, 98f 92½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 23c for checks.

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—On the Boerse to-day Russians were higher. Americans were firm. Exchange on London 20 marks 43 pfennigs for checks. The rate of discount for short bills, 2 per cent., and for three months bills, 2⅞ per cent.

to make progress at a noted New England academy entered the Groff School recently with several having had similar experiences at other large schools. They were all put into Yale and other large colleges the following September without a condition, one year ahead of their former classmates, and their present standing at college is very high. IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Sales of a block front on upper Lenox Avenue and an apartment hotel on West Forty-seventh Street—two classes of properties concerning which recent comment has not all been of the most enthusiastic sort—were the most satisfactory items in last week's reports. Almost 50 per cent. of trading, however, is still confined to the Bronx, where buying by small investors and by builders is leading to business of remarkable volume. The comparatively large number of Bronx building loans now being recorded is further evidence of the amount of new construction about to be undertaken in the northerly borough.

The market for apartment hotels at private sale has not been brisk. Indeed, for the last few months structures of this type have gained no small degree of rather unfavorable notice through their appearance in foreclosure lists and through bankruptcy petitions on the part of some of their proprietors. In contrast with all this, the sale to an investor of one of the newest of these buildings at 157 and 159 West Forty-seventh Street was decidedly refreshing. The troubles which have beset the apartment hotel in many instances, according to those who have gone into such enterprises most extensively, have been of two kinds. The first has been that all of these structures, for which a central location is a prime requisite, have been built upon very high-priced land, necessitating the payment of a high rental on the part of subsequent proprietor or lessee. The mistake in this particular has been, not so much that the rental has been beyond the possible earning capacity of the property under favorable conditions as that it has been more than its probable earning capacity for the first year or two of its existence, with the result that the proprietor, operating upon limited capital, found himself, almost at the start, so handicapped as to afford little prospect of success. It is believed that apartment hotel owners have profited by their experiences in this direction and will see fit to lease new buildings, at a graduated rental, which, although not producing quite so attractive a "paper" proposition for the first two or three years, will go far toward insuring ultimately successful investments.

The other difficulty in the path of the small apartment hotel, and one which has been very generally recognized for some time, is in connection with its restaurant. Here the proprietor had the choice of trying to run a first-class dining room, without a sufficient amount of patronage to support it, or furnishing an inferior service—the latter alternative probably causing the desertion of some tenants and gaining the hearty ill-will of the remaining ones. The solution of the problem is apparent in the small apartment hotels of most recent construction, which, like the one just sold on Forty-seventh Street, are nearly all of the bachelor variety, with a grill room in which breakfasts and suppers may be served without the expense and waste incidental to operating a full-fledged restaurant. It is with these readjustments of minor features that the apartment hotel is passing through the trying-out period essential, doubtless, to all new types of improvement. It seems to be the verdict that in spite of some of its earlier misfortunes it has come to stay, and it is certainly significant that among the pioneers in this field of construction are still to be found its stanchest supporters.

Although the volume of business reported during the last week was about on a par with that of the preceding one, brokers report a larger amount of inquiry, and it is likely that the homecoming of many prominent operators within the next two or three weeks will prepare the way for some negotiations of real importance. The minor dealings of speculators who have not invaded the Bronx are still confined largely to the territory north of One Hundredth Street and east of Second Avenue. The successful selling of new apartment houses between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, north of One Hundred and Fortieth Street, continues, based upon the fact that these structures, some of which are still in course of construction, are practically sure of full tenantry immediately upon completion. Builders who have sold out on One Hundred and Forty-second and One Hundred and Forty-third Streets are going still further north, between the same avenues, as appears from purchases last week on One Hundred and Forty-eighth and One Hundred and Fifty-third Streets.

LATEST DEALINGS BY BROKERS.

The incorporation of the Fifth Avenue and Eighteenth Street Realty Company at Albany on Friday, with Henry Corn and others as Directors, was probably responsible for the circulation of reports yesterday that Mr. Corn had bought the old Hotel De Logerot property at the southwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Eighteenth Street. Mr. Corn was out of town yesterday and no confirmation or denial of the reports could be had from other sources.

Church Will Build Six-Story Flat.

The building will be 37½ feet front and 93 feet deep, and will have accommodations for twenty-four families. The cost is estimated at $35,000 by Anthony F. A. Schmitt, the architect for the church corporation, of which Franz Thomas Frank is President.

L. Lipkin has sold for Catherine Campell to Victor Spirlet the dwelling 1,079 Clinton Avenue, near One Hundred and Seventy-seventh Street.

To Build on Bronx Corners.

Jacob Kronenberger has sold for Henry Benjamin to Martha Graham, for improvement with a six-story apartment house, the northeast corner of Union Avenue and Home Street, a plot 61 by 100; also, for Martha Graham to Henry Benjamin, the two-story dwelling 2,277 Southern Boulevard; also, for James P. Barry to the Wahlige & Sousin Company the southeast corner of Clinton Avenue and One Hundred and Seventieth Street, a plot 107 by 121, upon which the buyers will erect three five-story flats.

The United Owners' Realty Company has leased the three-story dwelling 131 West Forty-eighth Street for a term of years at $1,500 a year.

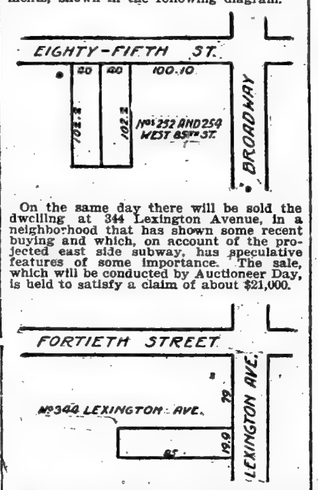
Flatbush Property Changes Hands.

H. L. Moxley & Co. report sale of the Sulivan homestead on Lincoln Road, Flatbush, a dwelling on plot 100 by 200.

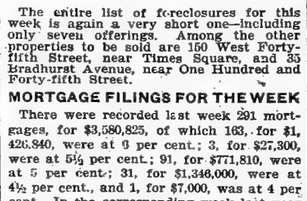
THE AUCTION ROOM.

To this week will attach the distinction of having the first voluntary offerings of the Fall season in the salesroom. Present conditions, however, point to a small volume of this class of business during the remaining months of the year—through the scarcity of offerings rather than owing to any lack of buyers. The private sales branch of the market for all properties of low, and even moderate, value is in too healthy a condition to give any special attraction to the uncertainties of auction selling, and real estate generally is so well rented that there is a much smaller supply than usual of those unproductive properties which frequently are dumped into the auction market as a last resort on the part of dissatisfied owners.

One of this week's voluntary sales will be that of the four-story brownstone dwelling 961 Madison Avenue, between Seventy-fifth and Seventy-sixth Streets, on lot 20.4 by 105. The offering will take place at Bryan L. Kennelly's stand on Wednesday, when the same auctioneer will also put up the property known as the Clinton apartments, shown in the following diagram.



On the same day there will be sold the dwelling at 344 Lexington Avenue, in a neighborhood that has shown some recent buying and which, on account of the projected east side subway, has speculative features of some importance. The sale, which will be conducted by Auctioneer Day, is held to satisfy a claim of about $21,000.



The entire list of foreclosures for this week is again a very short one—including only seven offerings. Among the other properties to be sold are 150 West Forty-fifth Street, near Times Square, and 35 Bradhurst Avenue, near One Hundred and Forty-fifth Street.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR THE WEEK

There were recorded last week 291 mortgages, for $3,580,825, of which 163, for $1,426,840, were at 6 per cent.; 3, for $27,300, were at 5½ per cent.; 91, for $771,810, were at 5 per cent.; 31, for $1,346,000, were at 4½ per cent., and 1, for $7,000, was at 4 per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 147 mortgages, for $1,998,889, of which 47, for $869,575, were at 5 per cent.; 70, for $515,480, were at more, and 30, for $613,834, were at less.

MADISON AVENUE'S AREA OF ADVANCING VALUES

Prices Just North of Forty-Second Street Rivaling Those on Fifth Avenue—Conditions Which Give This Property Its Strength—Large Plots Ready for Improvement.

In point of its rapidly advancing values, Madison Avenue, immediately north of Forty-second Street, has attracted scarcely less attention than the neighboring blocks on Fifth Avenue. When the southeast corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-third Street, a four-story building on lot 25 by 100, was sold several months ago it was reported that the price was $300,000—a figure which was received with some expressions of doubt, not only because it was far above any other Madison Avenue consideration for a single lot, but also because it had not at that time been exceeded even on Fifth Avenue itself, north of Forty-second Street.

Special circumstances, however, in the deal for the Madison Avenue corner had much to do with the fixing of so high a price. The buyers own other property just to the east on Forty-third Street, and they are doubtless satisfied that sooner or later their holdings will be needed to establish a single ownership for the entire block. Reports that the New York Central Railroad intends to acquire this block and utilize it in connection with the vacant block from Forty-third to Forty-fourth Street, as part of its terminal site, have been repeatedly denied, but even though nothing is done in that direction there is additional possibility that Joseph Milbank, after the new terminal has been completed, or perhaps before, will seek to get the rest of the property in the block of which he already owns the greater part.

Mr. Milbank's plot, formerly the site of Holy Trinity Church, was bought by him in 1896 for what now appears to be the ridiculously low figure of $750,000. The plot contains nearly nine lots, any three of which, if offered at auction to-morrow, would probably bring more than was paid for all of them eight years ago. The Forty-third Street corner, which is said to have sold for $300,000, was transferred in 1872 for $65,000.

Reasons for this great enhancement of Madison Avenue values, near Forty-second Street, are not far to seek. Within a short block of Fifth Avenue's hotel and club district in one direction, and in the other only a stone's throw from a great railroad terminal, besides being in close touch with all of the city's transportation systems, the future of the neighborhood for hotel and business purposes is assured for all time.

It is this certainty that has led to the lively speculation of the last three or four years, not only on Madison Avenue itself, but also in the street blocks between Madison and Fifth Avenues. Several large plots now covered by rows of old dwellings have been accumulated under single ownerships, and, while no improvements have yet been planned, it is thought likely there will be numbers of new projects announced within this territory next year, if by that time the building industry is on a more satisfactory basis and the New York Central has made some detailed and final statement as to the exact scope of its terminal plans.

On the north side of Forty-third Street, Henry Phipps and William S. Hawk have bought up a frontage of over 150 feet, paying all the way from $60,000 each, for some of the houses purchased in 1901, to $75,000 each for some more recently acquired. The old dwelling at the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-third Street, owned and occupied by the New York Exchange for Women's Work, was bought by that organization two years ago for $150,000.

Thomas B. Hidden's holdings at the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Forty-fourth Street make up one of the largest plots in the hands of one owner anywhere in this neighborhood. The six parcels, 21 to 31 East Forty-fourth Street, including the Madison Avenue corner, he bought in June, 1902, from Charles C. Marshall, who had acquired them at various times during the previous year. Mr. Marshall paid about $330,000 for the properties and resold them to Mr. Hidden for a stated consideration of $204,000 over a mortgage of $216,000—a total of $420,000. Mr. Hidden also bought at the same time 14 and 16 and 20 and 22 East Forty-fifth Street, together with 350 Madison Avenue. He also controls under a long lease 348 Madison Avenue.

A block further north, at Forty-fifth Street, a very similar operation was carried through within the last four years, George W. Stetson getting together a plot 100 by 100.5 and reselling it several months ago to Henry Phipps. For the immediate corner, 20 by 100, Mr. Stetson paid $100,000, and for the inside parcels from $40,000 to $50,000 each. The price in the resale of the entire property was not made public, the transfer showing a nominal consideration over mortgages for $268,500.

The future of the old Knickerbocker Athletic Club house, at the southeast corner of Forty-fifth Street, is apparently as indeterminate as it has been ever since that organization disbanded. What with foreclosure sales and the financial troubles of J. Herbert Ballantine, who was heavily interested in the project, this property has been transferred five or six times within the last two years without effecting any great change in ownership. Adrian Iselin for a time held a $400,000 first mortgage on the parcel, and the Helvetia Realty ompany, the Directors of which are members of the Iselin family, is now the owner of record.

The number of cremations at Fresh Pond last year was about 750, as against 80 in 1886, the first year of the crematory's organization.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

DAVID SALVIN.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against David Salvin, who keeps a hotel and restaurant known as the Attic Hotel, at 154 and 156 West Thirty-fifth Street, by the following creditors: William Nelson, $2,743; Michael Isenberg, $2[illegible] and M. Groh's Sons, $36. It was alleged that he is insolvent, has admitted his inability to pay his debts, and made payments of $2,000 to creditors to prefer them. Judge Holt of the United States District Court appointed James F. McNamee receiver of the assets on the application of Wentworth, Lowenstein & Stern, attorneys for petitioning creditors, who assert that the liabilities are $22,000, of which $16,000 are secured by chattel mortgages, and nominal assets probably $15,000, principally in the furnishings of the hotel, which are covered by mortgages for $10,000. He assumed obligations of $10,000 of a former proprietor, has paid off a part of them, but can't pay the balance, which are maturing. Mr. Salvin bought the place in January last, the rent of which is said to be $8,000 a year.

LOUIS LEMLE.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Louis Lemle, butcher, of 453 West Fifty-third Street, by Joseph Stern & Sons, creditors for $346. It was alleged that he is insolvent and has transferred money and property to various creditors to prefer them. Judge Holt of the United States District Court appointed Joseph Stern receiver of the assets. It was stated that a week ago he gave a check for $349 to the petitioners, but it was returned dishonored; that they have been informed that he has sold his shop to a butcher, who has paid $100 and was to pay the balance, $240, on Sept. 12, and that he had said he was going to Europe. He has been in business since January, 1897.

MORRIS PIZZUTIELLO.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Gino Speranza receiver in bankruptcy for the assets of Morris Pizzutiello, builder, of 83 East One Hundred and Seventy-first Street, fixing the bond at $2,000. It was stated that he owes over $10,000, and the only available asset is a piece of property on Forty-seventh Street, near Tenth Avenue, mortgaged for $10,000, in which the equity is estimated at $4,000, and is rented for $360 per year. He has received large sums of money, but disposed of them to the exclusion of his creditors, who number twenty-five or thirty.

MAURICE J. KARP.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Elly Sternberg trustee in bankruptcy for the assets of Maurice J. Karp, dealer in linoleum and carpets at 195 Madison Street, fixing the bond at $500.

EX-CONGRESSMAN LAFE PENCE tells a story of an old lady who always knew everything before anybody else. One day her niece saw her passing the house and ran out to meet her.

"Do come in, Aunty," she begged, "and help us. We are making charades."

"Certainly I will," answered the old lady. "I knew you were making them, because I smelt them as I came along."

ONE of the jokes that ex-Senator Davis enjoys telling is about a little girl named Almon, who had been put to bed alone. Presently she appeared in her nightgown at the head of the stairs, saying plaintively:

"I'm lonesome."

Her mother gave her a favorite rubber doll named Happy to take to bed with her, but this did not seem to please her, and in a few minutes she again appeared with the same complaint. This time her mother reminded her that God was with her, and sent her back to bed with a reproof. Soon she was heard weeping bitterly, and when her mother went to her, little Almon summed up her sense of misery by exclaiming:

"I don't want Happy, and I don't want God; I want somebody with a skin face."

A COUPLE of lawyers were discussing with Senator Pat McCarren the number of leaders who were coming under the Parker and Davis banner.

"It's great, Pat, isn't it?" said one, "and think of the friends each man brings with him!"

"Great, indeed!" returned the committeeman. "It makes me think of a German I knew who married five times. Each wife had an income and a houseful of furniture. At middle age his marital additions made him a prosperous furniture dealer and good citizen."

A STORY is told of H. H. Rogers, the Standard Oil man, which is worth repeating.

A young man in this city who had the same name and initials as Mr. Rogers frequently received through the mail letters which were intended for the Standard Oil man. One day he received a bill for a new flag furnished to Mr. Rogers's yacht, which he mailed to him with the following note:

"Dear Sir: I received the inclosed bill intended for you, as I am not fortunate enough to own a yacht. However, I will pay your bill if you will tell me the best time to buy Standard Oil."

He received the following reply:

"Dear Sir: Your note at hand. I will be glad to pay my own bill. The best time to buy Standard Oil is between 10 and 3."

OLD neighbors say Senator Fairbanks wanted to be a soldier in his youth and has always had a penchant for the strenuous life. At any rate, he never has the heart to scold juvenile friends who practice the manly art of self-defense.

While visiting the home of a Republican leader the son of the house broke into the room and displayed a pair of black eyes and some highly artistic scratches. The anxious father called the boy to him, and after introducing the Senator, inquired the reason for the facial decoration.

"It's this way, pop," said the lad: "there are only Parker and Davis boys on this block, and I expect nothing but trouble this Fall. You get results with greenbacks, but I have to civilize the Democratic Party in my district with black eyes."

THE servant problem is yet to be solved is the way Chairman Taggart looks at it.

'It was like this," said the Chairman to some friends the other day. "The old servant we had for ten years came to me last week and said she would have to leave the same day, as she was about to be married.

"What do you mean?" I asked. "You won't leave us so suddenly; ask him to wait a few days."

"Sure, Sir, I'd like to oblige you, but I don't feel well enough acquainted to ask him such a thing," was her answer.

THERE'S an old district peddler on the Esopus circuit who thinks Judge Parker is the greatest jokemaker that ever existed. John was carting his greens near the Parker estate when he saw the Judge. Compliments of the season were exchanged, and the Judge said:

"Let me see, you're getting along pretty well in years, aren't you, John?"

"Yes, your Honor. I'm over seventy."

John repeated this to the druggist in a neighboring village. That enterprising citizen sent it to a cereal food company that sold grains to the old man. They communicated with the peddler, and got a signed statement as to the story, inclosing a fat check to John for his trouble.

The old man paraded the check for several days among the villagers on his route, always exclaiming:

"Jest think of a Jedge makin' one little sentence wurth so much!"

HOW Algernon Charles Swinburne, the old bachelor, could ever have written his admirable roundels upon babyhood was for long a mystery to his friends and admirers, but now one of the poet's intimates, a married man, has come forward to draw the veil from the secret. It was with this friend that Swinburne was staying while those verses were in his mind, and many a question did he ask of the father or mother of the three little ones up in the nursery.

More than this, he wrote the first of the roundels before the visit was ended—and thereby hangs a tale. For the poet slipped into the room where the littlest member of the family was asleep, and bending over the bed whispered his newly written lines into the tiny ear. What was his joy to see a smile creep over the little face! Blissful in his sense of triumph, he began upon another stanza when the nurse entered. Instantly she, too, saw the smile, but what she said dashed the imaginings of Mr. Swinburne.

"It's the wind, bless it's little heart," was her half apologetic whisper. "Whenever they smile in their sleep, Sir, you may always know they're troubled with the wind."

It is to be noticed that none of the babyhood roundels has a word to say of a baby's dreams.

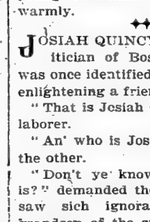
I LIKE positive men," said Senator Davis, the Democratic Vice Presidential candidate. "Boys, to reach their destination, should begin to climb while they are growing. The golden apples of success are in the hands of the climber before the other fellow has had time to find a ladder.

"Many are asking me, 'Do you expect to win?' And I never tire telling the story of that man who was burdened with a trunk and wanted to reach the station in a hurry. 'Here,' said a villager, 'is an abandoned tunnel; pass through it and you will come out opposite the station and have ample time to check your trunk.'



"The stranger peered through the tunnel, but the hole at the other end was so small that he doubted his ability to pass through it. He took a circuitous route. When he reached the station the train had gone. The time waiting for the next train was devoted to a contemplation of the tunnel's big opening, and the burden of the man's soliloquy was:

"'I would have come out all right; but the outlook was so discouraging that I wouldn't make the start.'"

C. C. SHAYNE has a neighbor near his country home who is afflicted with the commuter's chronic pain, the servant trouble.

Recently the neighbor entertained a few friends. Next morning, says Mr. Shayne, his wife found the china washed properly, but the wine glasses were untouched, filled with dregs and cigar ashes. Angry at the state of her much-cherished fragile cut-glass glasses, the mistress called her most recent domestic "treasure," a maid she had had barely twenty-four hours, for an explanation.

"Sure, mum, an' it's yerself must wash thim foine glasses. The docther says it makes me narvous to handle them, so he's forbid it!"

ON the day Judge Parker went to the fair at Ellenville Col. Thomas E. Benedict introduced a young man to him whose father the Judge had helped initiate into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows at Accord more than a score of years ago. The young man in question was the son of Christian, the miller of Napanoch.

"Judge," said Col. Benedict, "I want to introduce to you Alton Parker Christian."

"What!" ejaculated the candidate.

The ex-Public Printer for the Government knew what the Judge was about to say, and he broke in with:

"Yes, this young fellow is the son of the miller of Napanoch, whom you helped initiate into the lodge at Accord over twenty years ago. This will be his first vote, Judge, and he's going to vote for you. You remember his family is Republican, but I guess the lad's father is going to vote for you, too."

"Boy, I guess there's no one can dispute that you are the original Parker man," said the candidate, grasping young Christian's hand and shaking it warmly.

JOSIAH QUINCY, the Democratic politician of Boston, tells of how he was once identified by a laborer who was enlightening a friend.

"That is Josiah Quincy," said the first laborer.

"An' who is Josiah Quincy?" demand the other.

"Don't ye know who Josiah Quincy is?" demanded the first man. "I niver saw sich ignorance. Why, he's the grandson of the statue out there in the yard."

DR. SWALLOW, the Prohibition candidate for President, has a name which unfortunately is a double target for cheap punsters. When he married, he married a young lady by the name of Bird.

Continuing this research in ornithology, any one who passes the Swallow residence, which is no doubt called The Nest, can see on the door the Swallow coat-of-arms, a Swallow feeding another Bird.

Is it any wonder that punsters pun and Dr. Swallow wears on his face a look of pious resignation when an over-effusive friend quotes: "What's in a name?"

ANDREW CARNEGIE has a fund of stories about his canny countrymen, and he delights to tell them to a congenial company now and then. This is one he brought home with him after his last trip abroad:

"Of course we will call the hero Sandy," said Mr. Carnegie; "there couldn't be a Scotch story without a Sandy. Well, Sandy was asked by some friends to step up to the bar and have a drink. He poured out for himself a liberal dose of the national beverage, and then, placing his hands around the glass, drained it to the last drop before the others had even a chance to pour out their drinks.

"'Why, Sandy,' said the fellow who had invited him, 'you didn't need to be in such a rush. What was your hurry?'

"'Ach, mon,' said Sandy, still smacking his lips, 'I saw wan o' them things tipped o'er once.'"

ARCHBISHOP RYAN once concluded a brilliant defense of the Irish cause when a listener shouted:

"But the Irish are guilty of treason."

"Perhaps," replied the Archbishop, "but please remember that what is treason elsewhere become reason in Ireland because of the absentee."

ONE of the cleverest bits of finance I ever saw transacted," said David Warfield, "was in one of the so-called trust shops on the east side. A fair-sized schoolboy was the customer.

"'Mother wants you to give me a new shirtwaist and a pair of socks, two neckties, and a collar,' he said.

"'All right, my boy,' replied the shopkeeper. 'Here they are; $1.15 please.'

"'She says she'll give the $2 at 7 o'clock, when the old man comes home.'

"'But we want change now. Give me enough for a pound of butter at Klopsky's and a ticket to the Thalia.'

"'Ah, very well. Here's the 85 cents.'"

CAPT. A. J. C. Donellan of County Cork, Ireland, member of Parliament, and well known as the Protestant "whip" of the Irish in the House of Commons, told the United Irish League when he addressed its convention here last month that he considered an Englishman the most pig-headed of human beings. To illustrate his theory, he cited the Briton who, while selling a horse, described the animal's height as "sixteen feet."

"You don't mean feet, do you?" inquired the prospective buyer. "You mean hands."

"Did I say feet?" shouted the Englishman. "Well, if I said that, I'll stick to it."

DR. GEORGE F. SHRADY springs many jokes on his patients when he knows them well, and they sometimes retaliate. He was recently talking with a woman who claimed to be more of an invalid than her physician believed her to be.

"I believe that a change of climate might benefit you," he finally told her.

"A change of climate," she repeated. "How absurd! Why, I have lived in New York all my life."

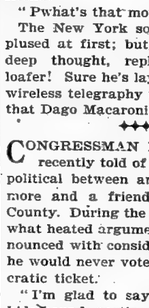
JOHN B. McDONALD, on a tour of inspection of the subway, noticed one of the Irish laborers showing a just-landed fellow-countryman the wonders of American engineering and explaining the same in a way. As Mr. McDonald approached the pair the greenhorn, pointing to where a surveyor was squinting through the usual surveying instrument at a rod held by an assistant some distance down the street, said to his friend:



"Pwhat's that mon doin'?".

The New York son of Erin was nonplused at first; but, after a moment of deep thought, replied: "Ye ignorant loafer! Sure he's layin' the wires fer the wireless telegraphy that was invinted be that Dago Macaroni."

CONGRESSMAN MUDD of Maryland recently told of a dispute on matters political between an Irishman of Baltimore and a friend from Montgomery County. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN'S list of jokes includes this one on himself:

On one occasion he was invited to Liverpool to make a speech. It was to be a great celebration. The Mayor, who was to preside at the meeting, had arranged a fine dinner for the guest of honor. A distinguished assembly surrounded the table, and at the right of the host sat Mr. Chamberlain. For a couple of hours the company chatted over their food, and finally the coffee was served. It was at this juncture that the Mayor leaned over and whispered to Mr. Chamberlain:

"Your Excellency, shall we let the crowd enjoy itself a while longer, or had we better have your speech?"

AMERICAN BUSINESS MEN TOO SLOW, SAYS SIR WILLIAM RAMSAY

Famous English Chemist Finds Our Manufacturers Are Not Alert in Taking Advantage of Scientific Discoveries—Germany in the Lead—What the Discovery of Radium May Mean—Problems for Chemists.

MANUFACTURERS and business men in America are not, in my opinion, sufficiently alert to take advantage of the recent discoveries of science," said Sir William Ramsay yesterday, after he had had an opportunity to visit some of the great chemical works in and around New York. "The majority of them do not make it a practice to read scientific journals, or to familiarize themselves with the latest trend of scientific thought. English manufacturers are far ahead of American, in this respect, and Germany shows a clean pair of heels to both.

"I was recently in a chemical factory in Germany, where the proprietor apologized for not having more than seventy chemists at work. He thought he was slow. It is the rule for German manufacturers to induce competent assistants from university laboratories to enter their works. In America and England it is not uncommon for the chemist, so called, to be refused admission to the works. He must confine himself to the laboratory. By admitting the chemists to the works German manufacturers open the only school for them to gain the requisite experience.

"In the larger establishments the young men are subdivided into three classes that do not interfere with each other. In the first class is the routine chemist—the young man who does not wish responsibility, but who is hard working and trustworthy. He finds his place as an analyst, testing raw materials and analyzing the finished product. Second, there is the young man to whom one department is intrusted, who has plenty of will and energy, and who knows how to govern men. In the third class are the men who are not afraid of responsibility, men who take the initiative in scientific research, and do things. In this class the young scientist delights in new problems, whether suggested by others or originating with himself. Young men range themselves in one or other department, where their abilities may find scope.

Value of the Plan.

"To quote a contemporaneous instance of the value of this plan the Germans have discovered a way to meet the shortage of camphor caused by the Russo-Japanese war. At an early stage of the game the chemists in their laboratories got to work and manufactured an admirable artificial camphor out of coal tar. They are selling tons upon tons of it. The substitute is not so good as real camphor, of course, but the point is that German manufacturers were quick to take advantage of an emergency. They have also discovered a process of manufacturing indigo, instead of waiting for India to grow it. The Germans are very modest. They say they desire to manufacture only one-fourth of the world's supply of indigo. From recent reports they are in a fair way of doing it. Americans and Englishmen should wake up."

It is twenty years since Sir William was last in the United States, although he has a brother in Montana who is an American citizen. Since then he has marched in the foremost rank of men engaged in scientific research. He is an acknowledged authority on radium, helium and their allied elements. He is the discoverer of argon, a hitherto unknown element of the atmosphere. Official communications to him bear the titles K. C. B., LL. D., D. Sc., Ph. D., F. R. S., and F. C. S. He is an officer of the French Legion of Honor, and a member of every scientific and philosophical society in the world worth mentioning. He is a frequent and important contributor to periodical literature, although not conspicuous in the book world.

Laboratory Monopolizes Him.

"I have no time to devote from my experiments," he said. "As Professor of Chemistry in the University College of London I am nearly always in the laboratory when I am not in bed. I have but two recreations—the bicycle and the piano. I have no time for an automobile. The distances I travel are not long enough to make it an object to own one. But I am fond of cycling. So is my wife. That is the way I have preferred to see your beautiful Central Park and the Riverside Drive—on a bicycle."

Of all the foreign scientists from Germany, Austria, England, Holland, and India who will start for the West tomorrow on a tour of exploration and investigation under the pilotage of the New York section of the Society for Chemical Industry, Sir William would probably be picked out as the most unassuming and inconspicuous man in a crowd. His apartments at the Seville Hotel, Madison Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, were besieged last week by scientists from all parts of the country and by callers of almost every race, color, and previous condition of servitude. He saw a great many of them, but none found him in the slightest hurry or uncomfortably pressed for time. He maps his appointments to the minute and sticks to the map. He bowed his last caller out of his room Thursday evening with an allowance of exactly six minutes to dress for dinner. Well within that time he joined his associates in the corridor to drive to the Waldorf. Only experienced diners-out know how to do that.

Pride in Promptness.

"I have dressed in four minutes," said Sir William, with apparently as much pride as he would have announced the discovery of a new source of supply for radium.

Sir William is a Scotchman by birth, and he looks it. He is tall and rather angular in appearance, with hair and close-cropped beard more tinged with gray than one would expect to find in a man of fifty-two years. Entitled to wear any number of medals and honorary decorations, a heavy gold watch chain is the only article he displayed in the way of jewelry. Even when delivering his address at the annual meeting in Columbia University he discarded the conventional frock coat and pearl gray trousers affected by his less distinguished companions. Sir William wore a navy blue lounge suit and a black necktie, bound in a loose knot.

Importance of Radium.

"All previous calculations of science are likely to be upset by radium," he said to a reporter for THE NEW YORK TIMES. "We may soon be compelled to revise some of the theories of physics that are now regarded as cardinal. Nobody can tell. The future, open to the diligent laboratory student, is fraught with mysteries. One thing is certain—nobody is likely to discover a mine of radium. Some statements made about the quantity of that precious substance in existence are very absurd. Dealing with the possibilities of radium is much like speculating upon the future of a babe in arms. We must watch it develop into childhood and mature growth before we can talk much about its future.

"It is a far cry at present to discuss the use of radium, or radium salts, for illuminating or heating purposes. I do not suppose there is one-tenth of an ounce of radium in the whole world. If you can imagine getting that amount of radium together it would supply more energy than 250 tons of dynamite. Few persons who talk about radium and its components realize the great scarcity of the raw material for yielding radium nor the exceedingly minute particles used in the experiments that have astounded the world. It is impossible to say where the future supply of raw material is to come from. I believe that in America carnotite looks promising as a basis for it. Cleavite, a mineral found in Norway, is also looked upon as a favorable source of supply.

Energy Without Chemical Change.

"One extraordinary quality of radium salts is that the evolution of heat and energy goes on continuously without combustion, without chemical change of any kind, and without alteration of its molecular structure. At the expiration of a month of activity the salt is quite as potent as it was in the beginning of the experiment. There is no doubt about the conversion of radium into helium. It has been done many times. In our experiments for several days a luminous gas was continuously emitted, but we could not determine the nature of it. When examined through the spectroscope it did not at first show the characteristics of helium. But later, by the application of intense heat, a gaseous product was obtained occupying about two and one-half times the space of the original emanation, and there were unmistakable signs of the spectrum of helium.

"There are various theories to account for the evolution of the heat and other strange forms of radiation from helium and its allied elements. The most satisfactory one seems to be that some of the atoms in the substances are disintegrating and thereby liberating stored energy. A few physicists assume that the energy was at one time absorbed from some external source, and is now given off again. If we judge by the rate at which gas is evolved from the salts of radium, it seems probable that any given mass of it would decay and completely disappear in from 2,000 to 2,500 years. The life of three or four other radio-active metals is very much longer. My own research, which is not yet complete, encourages me to think that the 'electronic' theory of atoms has a career of usefulness before it. Our new understanding about the atom may lead to entirely unforeseen results.

"Fruitful experiment is constantly going on around the basis of current research. Science has shown that the emanations of radium can be dealt with as a gas. In tubes, its passage may be followed by the eye in darkened rooms. There is still plenty of room for a complete revision of the original dicta concerning radium and helium. Experiments made by Prof. Soddy and myself determine by direct measurements the rate of the decay of radium as one one-thousandth of the mass per year, which gives the average life of the radium atom about 1,000 years. This rapid rate of decay renders it out of the question to assume that in the radium now existent we are dealing directly with the residue of a larger quantity reduced by decay to its present amount. So far as the commercial advantages of radium are concerned, they are only apparent, as yet, in medicine. Radium is, I believe, a sure cure for certain forms of cancer, tumor, and lupus.

America in Chemical Science.

"America has made great advances in chemical science since I was last here. Naturally I shall know more about it after our tour is completed than I do now. In the various forms of bromides and in alloys manufacturers on this side of the water have been progressing along new lines. But there is much to be done. I am strongly in favor of getting students out of the laboratory and into practical work much quicker than you do here. Our London University, recently reorganized, has set the example in this. Time spent in mere experiments may easily be too much extended. A fairly good student should have done enough work in a year, or two years at most, to place him in a position where he can help himself when he is face to face with an analysis not made before.

"It appears futile to extend the courses of study to merely technical students. The ideal plan for the education of technical chemists would be some system analogous to the apprenticeship of engineers. But in order to accomplish this the chemical manufacturer must throw open his works to the students. He must get over the fear of somebody stealing his secrets or improving on his methods. Little can be accomplished otherwise. Education should primarily consist in an effort to produce an attitude of mind rather than to instil definite knowledge. It should aim to cultivate the inventive faculty, which is most needed to-day. But inventive chemists seldom have either time or inclination for developing the commercial aspects of a discovery. It is for the manufacturer and his staff to put the discovery to practical and profitable application.

Problem of Foods.

"One of the new problems that chemical science may decide to attack is the manufacture of foods. Prof. Fischer of Berlin is now at work on an albuminal substance to resemble the white of an egg. The only way to do this, of course, is to disintegrate and then build up. There has been some hue and cry of late about the danger from phosphorus matches. A German manufacturer has followed up this line of thought and has invented a phosphorus that is not dangerous to factory operatives or anybody else, and which gives us a match we can strike without carrying the box.

"There is room for experiments in the disposal of sewage from large cities by chemical process. You are not yet confronted with this great problem in America so seriously as we are in England. We are experimenting over there with filtration processes on an advanced scale. Heretofore we have been handicapped by lack of definite laws concerning the pollution of rivers. Now the English rivers have been divided among four or five boards of managers, each with absolute authority in its own district. In the course of time some such arrangement may be advisable over here.

Danger in Illuminating Gas.

"The danger from carburetted gas, or water gas, being too freely mixed with illuminating gas for purposes of economy is another public danger in municipalities, and offers a field for scientific research. A proportion of one-third water gas to two-thirds illuminating gas is about right. If a man blew out the gas in his room, such a proportion would not be fatal under ordinary conditions. A larger proportion of water gas would be dangerous. New problems are coming up all the time to demand the application of the chemist. The main requirement is to fit men capable of doing the work to deal with them."

FREDDIE WAS SHOCKED.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD FREDDIE paid his first visit to a roof garden the other night. He applauded the musicians vigorously, and was delighted with the songs, but when a "singing sketch" came on in which the male member of the team embraced his partner, the small boy's sense of the proprieties was shocked.

"Oh, papa," he exclaimed, his shrill voice carrying all over the roof and provoking a smile from the performers themselves, "why is the man lovin' the lady when all those people can see him?"

COUNT GEZA VON MATTACHICH TELLS HOW HE LOVED AND LOST THE PRINCESS LOUISE OF SAXE-COBURG

SPIED upon by the omnipresent secret service, and virtually living the lives of fugitives are the Princess Louise of Saxe-Coburg, eldest daughter of King Leopold of Belgium, and Lieut. Count von Mattachich Keglevich, with whom she eloped in 1898 and with whom she succeeded in escaping again on Aug. 31 last from her asylum-prison at Bad Elster, in Saxony.

Overshadowing the sensation created by their elopement six years ago, and having in European Court circles an interest only second to the dispatches from the Far East is this third and successful attempt of Lieut. von Mattachich to secure the release of the Princess, whose affaire de coeur is once more attracting international attention.

Since being himself court-martialed and imprisoned because of his rôle in the royal drama, Lieut. von Mattachich has written an astonishing confession—a story embodying such amazing revelations as to cause the Austrian and Belgian authorities to attempt its suppression by fair means or foul. Despite their extraordinary vigilance and unceasing efforts to enforce a censorship a copy of the book, of which the following remarkable story is an abbreviation, has just been received in this country. As a romance of camp and Court—a revelation of an episode without a parallel in modern history—added interest is given the story by the present efforts of her liberator to have the Princess Louise declared sane and safe from further annoyance on the part of her royal father and her Hapsburg husband.

BY COUNT GEZA VON MATTACHICH.

Introduction.

Her Highness the Princess Louise of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha has been imprisoned because it so pleases her royal father and the Prince Consort, as well as his representative, Dr. Bachrach, who has managed this outrageous affair, and a few other courtly sycophants of the Coburg Guard. She has been held a prisoner in defiance of all the laws of justice, and has been wilfully charged with insanity in order to conceal the prevailing political and judicial conditions in Austria. She, as well as myself, has been the victim of a system by which the civil and military courts are dominated by a Prince—by a General—who, the German Emperor has said, is unworthy of wearing the sword of a German officer.

Who believes now that the Princess Louise is in prison because she is feeble-minded? Is the public content to listen from time to time to the declarations of a subsidized physician that the wife of his client is undoubtedly feeble-minded? Or that her alleged feeble-mindedness increases at his pleasure to insanity? Is this diagnosis to be strengthened by the public expressions of King Leopold of Belgium, this father, who has not seen his daughter since she was deprived of her freedom? Drs. Bachrach and Pierson are not the persons to state her case at the bar of public opinion. She alone should be heard in her defense, or at least men who have no object in keeping her immured while they pronounce her insane.

In stating her side of the case I am not actuated by any desire to add to the store of sensational literature. My sole object is to set a defenseless woman right before the world.

Princess Louise is said to have been disloyal to her husband, to have incurred debts—that is the sum and substance of the whole affair. Because no one is aware of her sufferings I have taken it upon myself to repeat her story as I heard it from her lips. It is my devout prayer that this story may arouse such a tempest as to shear of authority those who trample on justice, those who have so ruthlessly sacrificed the honor of a helpless woman. I have endeavored to be as impartial as possible, to restrain every feeling of anger, and my essay at authorship will surely be pardoned when my galling position is considered. My story is loyally dedicated to Her Royal Highness, the Most Serene Princess Louise von Saxe-Coburg-Gotha and Belgium.

Before describing my own entrance into the life of the Princess Louise, it is necessary to picture her position prior to May, 1898, when she told a ceremonial commission of the Austrian Court in Doebling, near Vienna, that she would never return to her husband, the Prince of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. Her Highness was at that time in her fortieth year, having been born to King Leopold and Queen Henrietta of Belgium on Feb. 18, 1838.

Born to Sorrow.

She was born to sorrow—even her girlhood being unhappy because of the constant quarrels of her parents. She always referred to Leopold not as her father, but simply as the King. For her mother she had the deepest sympathy and affection.

When the Princess was sixteen years of age she was sought in marriage by Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg, then a man of thirty, and their wedding occurred in 1875. After a brief honeymoon they took up a residence in the Coburg Palace at Budapest.

It was there that both Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria and the Crown Prince Rudolf entered into her life. Once with tears she told me how Prince Ferdinand had given her a dagger with which to remove her husband, a proposal which she scorned, as is needless to say.

Hating Prince Ferdinand, the Princess was more favorably impressed with the unfortunate Crown Prince Rudolf, who, she always regretted, was evilly influenced by Prince Philip. Her Highness has been a devoted mother to the Duchess Dora of Schleswig-Holstein, though she never cared much for Prince Leopold, her son in the Austrian cavalry, who accompanied his father to America two years ago.

It was in the Spring of 1895 that I saw the Princess for the first time on the Prater, the fashionable boulevard of Vienna. I was then a Lieutenant in the Thirteenth Regiment of Uhlans, and was on furlough in the Austrian capital. One morning in May or June, when Vienna is at its best, I was trying a new horse on the Prater, and was having considerable difficulty with the high-spirited animal. Defying my best efforts, the horse refused to be managed, and had backed up on the pavement, endangering a number of men, women, and children who were attracted to the scene.

Love at First Sight.

I was trying my best to get the horse back into the street when a carriage, containing the Princess Louise and her lady in waiting, Countess Sermage, was driven up. On glancing at the Princess and feeling her eyes resting upon me, a strange, indescribable sensation took possession of me. I momentarily forgot my horse, and came near paying for my negligence with my life, as the animal lashed out with his heels and only missed striking me by a few inches. In a fraction of a second—barely the time required for us to exchange glances—my whole being underwent a transformation, and, though I did not know who the Princess was at the time, I knew that she would henceforth mold and govern my life. Finally on conquering the horse, my soul experienced a strange exaltation when the beautiful woman smiled her approval and ordered her carriage to pass on.

As it was her custom to drive daily in the Prater and as I was absorbed in breaking my mount, it so happened that we met frequently during the next few weeks. Those glimpses of her became vital to my existence. From day to day I lived in a fever of expectation. I often waited for hours on some corner, believing, knowing, that she must soon drive past. I was seldom deceived in my conviction.

It was during the following Autumn that, for a month or so, the Princess failed to appear in public. I was in despair. I became like a famished man. Then I learned that she was ill. Had she succumbed I firmly believe that I should have died.

My first sight of her, following her illness, was at the Royal Opera one night. She and her daughter were sitting in the royal box, far back in the shadows, but our eyes met by a strange fatality, and she smiled. Regularly thereafter she attended the opera, sometimes noticing me, as it seemed, and sometimes failing to respond to my glances.

See-sawing thus between hope and despair I would some days believe that the Princess deigned to regard me as more than a stranger, and on other days I was forced to the bitter conclusion that she had not recognized nor remembered me at all.

In February, 1896, the Princess and her daughter left Vienna on a visit to the Crown Princess Stephanie, her sister, at Abbrazia. Hearing of her departure I found occasion to follow. The Crown Princess was charmingly informal in her social going and coming, and I contrived to be presented to her with the result that she invited me to an informal dance at her villa. There I was presented to the Princess Louise.

There I saw her at close quarters and conversed with her for the first time, although I had seen her every day for months. Abbrazia was my heaven. Princess Stephanie was the centre of the wit and beauty of the place, and was gracious enough to admit me into the charming circle. Soirees, card parties, dances, and small dinners were of frequent occurrence, all of which afforded me chances to meet the Princess. I learned during that time that she had noticed me at the opera and had always seen me while driving in the Prater. Nothing else was needed to fill my cup of happiness to the brim.

Having closely observed the affectionate relations between the Princess and her sister at that time, it is incomprehensible to me that the Countess Lonyay could have treated Princess Louise with such heartlessness in the days of sorrow that were so soon to follow.

Beyond their physical resemblance the sisters were as opposite as the poles of the earth—in temperament, habits of mind, and attitude toward the world and toward life. Stephanie was consumed with petty interests of etiquette and dress while in Vienna, only at Abbrazia emerging from her shell and exhibiting interest in other and more important affairs of state. She is extremely vain, while Princess Louise has to an extraordinary degree the power of self-effacement. She has often laughed indulgently over the petty miseries of Stephanie, when the latter was, for instance, in torment for fear that the Archduchess Maria Therese would have precedence over her at some Court function.

Returning to my meeting with the Princess Louise, we soon found that horses were of mutual interest to each other, the Princess being passionately fond of riding and driving, even to the exclusion of her social duties. She had a vivid remembrance of my experience in the Prater, and exhibited a lively interest in learning that the horse had become entirely docile. This mutual bond soon led to the Princess commissioning me to superintend the purchase of several animals for her own stables.

One day she asked me, after we had spent two hours cantering over the beautiful roads near Abbrazia, what was my opinion of her as a horsewoman. I candidly told her that she appeared ill at ease on horseback. It was characteristic of her not to have exhibited any pique at my candid criticism. On the contrary, she said she agreed with me, and thereupon invited me to take her equestrian education in hand.

So, upon our return to Vienna, in the delightful weeks of early Spring, nearly every morning the Princess and myself would meet at the chosen riding school, and there she gradually became mistress of the equestrian art, one of the most difficult problems for women to master.

Is it necessary for me to dignify the base calumnies that have been circulated about the Princess at that period by denial? If it were it would only be necessary to say that we only met at the riding school and had no opportunity to meet elswhere, as the Princess was always accompanied by her lady-in-waiting or some attendant.

Yet our charming intercourse was soon to come to a disastrous end as a result of the scandalous tongues that began to falsify an ideal communion. Hence it was with indignation rather than surprise that I received a courier from the Imperial Court one day some seven weeks following our return from Abbrazia. He came with a summons for me to appear before that august tribunal.

Imagine my amazement when Adjt. Gen. von Bolfrad demanded peremptorily when it would be convenient for me to leave Vienna. At the same time he delicately hinted at the reason why my absence would be acceptable to the royal family.

Mastering my emotion to some degree, I replied that I could arrange my affairs so as to quit the capital in a fortnight.

On the same afternoon the Princess Louise was summoned before, or rather obtained an audience with, the Emperor Franz Josef, and was informed that she would not be able to attend the Court functions of state during the Winter.

"Indiscretions have been committed which it is not possible to overlook," concluded the Emperor.

Princess Louise, as would any woman under the circumstances, considered the fiat an outrage, and so informed the Emperor, but he was adamant.

"I cannot be mistaken in this matter," he replied coldly. "I must repeat that indiscretions have been committed and condoned too long now for the honor of those concerned. It is common gossip that your Highness rode from Schoenbrunn to Purkersdorf in a public conveyance. It is true that you were accompanied by your daughter, and that an attendant was on the box. Nevertheless, it is also true that an officer followed you on horseback and was seen later with you."

In vain the calumniated victim protested her innocence, protesting against the slanders of the jealous and evil-minded. His Majesty arose stiffly, indicating that the interview was at an end, shook hands with the Princess, and dismissed her.

Since that day she has been a maligned and defenseless woman, her character despoiled by the ruthless assaults of enemies, and her peace of mind ruined, perhaps forever.

Fortunately she was not interdicted from leaving Vienna, which she did with her daughter a few days later. She determined to eschew Court life in future and also to procure a divorce from her husband, who had instigated the persecution. Her only companions were the Princess Dora and the Countess Fugger, her lady-in-waiting, and stanch friend in that hour of need.

Carrying out my promise I returned to my paternal home and was shortly afterward adopted by my stepfather, the Count Oscar Keglevich. Her Highness was domiciled only a short distance from my home, and we met frequently until, in order to regain her health, which had been sadly broken by her recent burdens, she proceeded to Carlsbad. I joined her there a few weeks later and we went to Nice.

While there I was waited upon by Count Wurmbrant and Baron Fejervary, who demanded satisfaction in the name of Prince Philip of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. Prince Philip was forced to issue the challenge by the Austrian Court, although he personally would have preferred to throw me into prison without further ado.

Of course I accepted his challenge, and, returning to Vienna, I met him with pistols in February, 1898, in the riding academy, where the Princess had received lessons from me in horsewomanship. After exchanging four shots without either of us being hit, we resorted to short swords and the Prince was wounded at the first sally. He could have been killed.

Fearing that she would suffer a relapse in case she was informed of the duel, I had not confided to the Princess the purpose of my mission to Vienna. But upon my return to Nice I found the Duke Guenther of Schleswig-Holstein, brother of the German Empress, with her. He informed her of the duel, but was able to assure her that it had not resulted fatally for either myself or the Prince. He also informed us that it was rumored in Vienna that she was to be committed to a sanitarium. Rather than have the Princess suffer this indignity, he promised to secure her the protection of the German Emperor, who was known to be wroth with the Prince of Coburg.

Misfortunes followed rapidly for both the Princess and myself. Her devoted daughter was torn from her as a preliminary outrage. Then she was visited by certain Viennese usurers, who held as collateral a promissory note signed by the Countess Lonyay and countersigned by the Princess Louise. The note had been made nine months previously, and, as subsequent developments proved, I was to be charged with forging the instrument. This was a prelude to the overture which was to sound our ruin.

In our extremity I suggested to the Princess the advisability of visiting England, where her wretchedness would surely gain her sympathy at the Court of the good Victoria. But, alas! Arriving in London, we learned that Queen Victoria had gone to rest.

After a few days we also returned to the Continent, but where was the Princess to go—who was to offer her a home? What else was there for me to do but to write my parents to receive her? They replied at once signifying their willingness to do so. This answers the sneering questions of her enemies as to why she took up her abode at Castle Lobor. All the while she was there she was attended by the Countess Fugger and her attendants, albeit to the horror of the Austrian Court, which brewed new scandals and resurrected the old.

Surrounded by spies, who, masquerading as sympathizers with the Princess, betrayed her to the Prince, in the following May our troubles came to a head. If there had been dark days before, they were bright as compared with those that were lowering about us.

On May 8 the Princess, the Countess Fugger, and myself were visiting a friend on the road to Agram, when we were warned by a friend that the Agram authorities were preparing to arrest me on the forgery charge. He advised me not to proceed to Agram, advice which it would have been cowardly to follow, and which was disregarded.

On the morning of May 10 my door at the hotel was suddenly broken open, and the Commander of Agram rushed into the room, yelling that I was under arrest by order of the Emperor.

Being an officer, I was not in the jurisdiction of the civil court, and I protested against the irregularity of my arrest. But it was in vain. As I was escorted from the hotel, imagine my rage upon beholding the Chief of Police and two ruffians enter the apartments of the Princess. Had I suspected the extremes to which they would go in humiliating the Princess Louise I would have defended her with my life.

As she afterward informed me, she was still in bed when the men entered and ordered her to dress herself. Astounded at their audacity, she commanded them to leave her apartments immediately, a command which was ignored. They, however, withdrew behind a screen while the Princess was assisted in dressing by the Countess Fugger. That done, she was informed by her inquisitors that the Prince of Coburg offered her the choice of returning to him at once or of being immured in an asylum. She decided in favor of the latter as the lesser of two evils, and was hurried off to Doebling.

Being pardoned, after suffering four years of horrors, I proceeded to Koswig, where, I had learned, the Princess was detained in nominal custody at the Lindenhof. Before proceeding to Dresden I only saw the Princess once, and then at a distance. She was a picture of mingled resignation and sorrow.

A Pathetic Meeting.

A few days later I returned to Koswig and secreted myself in the copse beside the road where the Princess was accustomed to drive. Presently a carriage approached and stopped. Her Highness alighted, in company with Fräulein von Gebauer, and walked slowly along the sequestered path. I could see her distinctly, and my heart beat so rapidly that I was in danger of suffocating. Finally she halted and leaned against a tree for support. I approached. Fräulein von Gebauer stopped me. She was profoundly agitated and made me promise to restrain my violent emotion in the presence of the Princess. I hurried on and found that her Highness had overheard my approach. She held out her hand to me. Her eyes were blinded with tears as she exclaimed:

"After all, there is a God."

She was the same sweet, unaffected, and amiable woman of former years, excepting that her years of suffering had tempered her beauty, leaving her lovelier than ever. We were only together five minutes when Fräulein von Gebauer, who was extremely nervous, insisted on returning to the Lindenhof. Her Highness bade me adieu and was gone.

But we shall meet again. Heaven and earth shall be moved to secure her release. Though I waited the next day and for many days afterward for her return to our trysting place, she never came. Then with the assistance of Fräulein Stoger I resolved to get a letter to the imprisoned Princess. It was a foolhardy thing to attempt, for suspicions were awakened, and both Fräulein Stoger and myself were immediately put under surveillance.

Her sorrow is hereditary. Her mother lived and died a martyr to grief. All are acquainted with the quarrel between King Leopold and the former Princess Stephanie, who strove for a period of happiness as the Countess Lonyay. Yet her humiliation was incomparable to that of her elder sister, the Princess Louise. Her grandfather is the Austrian Emperor, and her relatives are among the most powerful nobles of Europe, yet among them she has no friend.

She had never loved—never known the real meaning of friendship even, nor the boon of perfect companionship when our paths crossed.

Our acquaintance has been an idyl that has ended in tragedy, as does everything that is touched by the fatal hand of the Hapsburgs.

PRINCESS LOUISE OF SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA.

Self-Hypnosis in Story Writing

Madness Lies That Way, Thinks Morgan Robertson—One Author's Picturesque Career.

MORGAN ROBERTSON, who writes sea stories, thinks an assiduous contributor to the magazines has all he can do to keep himself measurably sane. According to Mr. Robertson the state of the story writer in the fever of invention is one of self-hypnosis, which tends to become chronic. It is good for the stories, but bad for the man. It indicates a tired brain, and therefore one of the antidotes is brain food. Mr. Robertson himself eats phosphates in vast quantities. The ordinary diet of men, he says, was designed by nature for the support of the non-intellectual animal only. It does not provide the brain worker with what he needs to keep his mental machinery bright and well oiled. This, however, incidentally.

Robertson, who was born in Oswego in 1861, was an able seaman before he was a man and first mate at the age of twenty-one. Now he camps in a little den—a sort of combined ship's cabin and studio—in West Twenty-fourth Street, with bookcases and canary birds and a typewriting machine and a 'phone and a gas stove and a refrigerator and a huge bathtub, all scientifically fitted in. Upon the walls, which are red, are pictures and illustrations from the author's stories, and all sorts of intricate nautical knots hang about, seeming to be attached to rigging, the purpose of which is not always apparent. In this place Mr. Robertson spins his sea yarns. He has a home and a wife on Washington Heights to which he retreats by way of refuge when the fever of composition cools. The other day he lay horizontally upon the couch in this den with a long cherry pipe between his teeth. A visitor entering, he rose long enough to extend the proper hospitalities, then resumed his previous attitude. He is a little, short, chubby man, very bald, and very mighty about the chest—as an A. B. should be. He was asked if he didn't happen to have some special ideas to proclaim on the endless question of the making of stories—how, when, and what to make 'em.

"Don't make 'em," he said concisely, and having paid so much tribute to the higher wisdom, proceeded:

"When I was a boy my father found me a place on a ship—to keep me from running away and finding a worse place for myself on some other ship. I served a long time before the mast, and during that service got kicked and cuffed into me such deep respect for authority that I can never meet a big brute of a second mate to this day—never meet anything that is labeled ship's officer—but I want to say to him, "Aye, Sir," and stand around for him. I got to be a mate myself, but the habit had got ground into me long before that—and it sticks. Also I was not naturally too respectful of authority either. Even now, after twenty years away from the sea, as soon as I step on a ship I feel abject. I cringe before anybody with the voice of command. I tried to show a party of friends over my first ship once. She was lying at the Atlantic docks, and we were a most elegantly arrayed party—silk hats, white ties, frock coats. I felt very jaunty till I got aboard. There was nobody on her but the ship's husband, a husky old fellow with a seaweed beard. My courage oozed out at the sight of him. I asked very meekly if we might look at the ship. He gave a sort of contemptuous assent, and I steered the others around but wasn't fit to talk to 'em and explain things, which I had rather figured on doing in some style. The ship and the ship's husband reduced me to the mental condition of a common seaman as long as I was aboard. As a matter of fact, it was several days before I got back my self-respect."

Wore Diamonds Once.

Mr. Robertson explained that he was a diamond setter in those days, and wore diamonds himself, besides other splendor of raiment.

"When I quit the sea," he said, "after years of it—a sailor learns to do a miscellaneous lot of things; they have to be aboard ship and there's nobody else to do 'em—and I used to be handy enough with a marlinspike—a phrenologist told me I had a head for mechanics. He was kind enough to say I could do anything in that line from tinkering pans to building bridges. There didn't seem to be any bridgebuilding to do—not for me—I learned the trade of watchmaker. I tramped about from one city down to another mending clocks. By degrees I rose in the profession and got to be a diamond setter as you've seen, but in the clock mending days I met queer people. I used to fraternize with organ grinders. I felt a nearer kinship to organ grinders now that I'm a story writer and no longer hobnob with such vagrants in the flesh. When I was tinkering with watches and clocks I was doing something useful. As a story writer I seem to stand level with the organ grinder. I'm no better than those old chaps—troubadours, I believe you call 'em—that used to skulk around from place to place and be thankful for a bite to eat and a sip to drink, and a seat in the corner by the fire in the houses of their betters. To be sure, we do use a typewriter instead of a harp and I doubt our singing voices are out of order—but the principle is the same." Mr. Robertson inclined his head respectfully toward the typewriting machine in the corner and refilled his pipe. Then he resumed:

"My notion of story writing is that it is a sort of self-hypnosis. You've got to get hypnotized by your idea before you can get enough above yourself to write anything at all worth printing—and there's always the danger in that sort of thing of going too far—bidding far myself before I saw where I was going and pulled up—that is, I stopped work and took brain food. I was then in fine trim, I am confident, to go stark mad. I wrote one story in that condition of precarious sahity. It was called 'Sinful Peck.' I used to walk up and down this room in a sort of ecstasy, then hammer out a sentence, then walk again furiously, till I found I was butting into the furniture at both ends, barking my shins, and yawing this way and that like a rudderless ship. I wasn't drunk, either. That went on for several days, I believe, till my wife got alarmed at my continued absence and came down to see what was up. She found me cruising about here in the aimless fashion I have described. 'Here,' says she, producing money, 'get out of this and go to the country.' I had a notion this was coming, and laid by for it accordingly.' Being in a state entirely hypnotic, I naturally did exactly what I was told. I didn't at all know why I did it or see any reason for it; my reasoning faculties were not at work. But I went, and by going no doubt saved life and reason. For I had it fixed in my head that I must finish that story, and, barring the providential interposition of the wife, was going mad in the process.

"That matter of my docility in going to the country at my wife's bidding," pursued the ex-able seaman after once more refilling his pipe, "leads to a discussion of one of the most conspicuous effects of story writing on the mind of the writer. You get to such a state—or I got to such a state—from dreaming out stories that you lose control of your mental steering gear. You reach a condition where you are a bond slave to the power of suggestion coming from outside of yourself and ready to knock under to anybody who chooses to give you orders—just as I feel like doing to any sort of ruffian in the shape of a ship's officer. For instance, my landlord and I have different theories about the rent. His idea is to have it paid on the first of the month; I say I'll pay it when I please. I have rather made a habit of paying when I please, but latterly I had paid for several successive months promptly on the first. Then it happened I let the third come around without paying. A friend of mine was staying in this place at the time. He slept here, and came and went as the notion took him. On the third in question I came in here and did not find my friend. However, I did find upon my desk a bit of paper with a message like this: 'Call up xyz Gramercy.' That is my landlord's 'phone number. I was angry. I said to myself I'd be most particularly damned if I called up anything. I threw the message haughtily upon the floor and sat down to work. I couldn't work, but I made a bluff at it all day and till late at night. Then I went to bed, but I couldn't sleep. I got up in the morning, and still couldn't work. So I called up xyz Gramercy. What I said was that I'd be around presently with the money—that is, as soon as I got some money I was expecting. Then I set to work and everything went as smoothly as you please. All suggestion. Xyz Gramercy had me by the hair. I wasn't myself—I wasn't master of my own will till I had satisfied xyz Gramercy.

Obeying Instructions.

"Again, my wife has a fine collie dog up town. It's a handsome dog, but I don't like dogs. My wife does. She has told me several times that I ought to take the dog for afternoon walks. I've said I'd walk the dog if she thought it necessary, but that I didn't enjoy it. I made it very clear that I was opposed to having her put walking the dog on the programme of my habitual relaxations. Now the other day I got a note from my wife. The note dealt with sundry domestic matters of no moment in the present discussion. But at the end she wrote: 'If you are not doing anything when you get this, come up and walk the dog.' Now I wasn't doing anything at the minute—that is, I wasn't actually pounding the typewriting machine; I was trying to think out, or, rather, dream out, a story I'd begun. I know, of course, my wife's definition of work. Under that definition I was 'not doing anything.' So I thought I must go and walk that dog. I took my hat and went—seven miles by train up to Washington Heights—just to walk that dog. I found my wife at home. She said she was joking about the dog. I came back, angry with myself and a little with her—though it wasn't her fault. The fault was in me. I simply had to obey the suggestion.

"This slavery to suggestion reached such a point that if I were walking along Broadway in all sorts of a hurry and an acquaintance spoke to me and said 'Stand by,' I'd stand by and there I'd stick till he told me to go. I couldn't get under way again myself. I was growing to be a common bore; people began to avoid me like the plague. Usually, when people do that sort of thing you put 'em down for soft fools. I am not naturally soft and I wasn't born a fool. I've been something of a man among men (in the days before I was a story writer) else I couldn't have been a first mate before I was twenty-one. So when I had lucid moments and caught myself at such tricks I knew something was wrong. I put it down to fatigued brain, atrophied will power, due to over-driving machinery I hadn't used at all before I entered my present cycle of existence. My first cycle was seafaring; in the second I was a mechanic. In neither of them did I use my brain overmuch. In this present cycle I'm using my brain after a peculiarly exhausting fashion—I'm a story writer. Already I grow tired. I do not know what the next turn of the wheel will bring. This, by the way. What I'm getting at is that the state of mind I've been illustrating is nothing more or less than the self-hypnosis that comes of story writing and the necessary preliminary process of story dreaming. For you must dream your stories, or at least I must dream mine. My idea is that of the people who try it on only some few keep themselves approximately sane; the rest end in the mad house. As to dreaming stories? My own practice is about this: Over night I think hard on a story. I go to bed full of it. In the morning I try to take as long a time as possible to wake up—to remain in a state half way between, neither truly sleeping nor really waking. In such an intermediate and indeterminate condition, what I take to be the same thing in me that the psychologists call 'subliminal consciousness' gets in touch with the matter of the story as my brain fully awake would never get in touch with it. I do not believe in haunting spirits, lingering ghosts of the dead, holding communication with the living, but I am convinced that in the particular state of mind I'm talking about I do somehow, by some sort of telepathic process, catch something from living non-present persons whose minds are busy with the same idea.

His Latest Obsession.

"For instance, my head has lately been full of submarines. I've studied submarines thoroughly in order to make stories about them, and, being of a mechanical turn and the sea still holding me pretty hard, I've got interested in submarines for themselves. So I've got obsessed with an idea to invent a periscope. That, as you know, is the tube and series of lenses which enable the commander of a submarine while the boat is under water to take a view of the encompassing seascape and discover the near presence of the enemy. The trouble with the periscope at present is that it can only look in one direction at once. It does not gather in the whole horizon into one picture. You have to revolve the machine this way and that. Now the idea which has me by the hair is that of inventing this most desirable all around periscope, and it has me gripped so strongly that I'm convinced some of those submarine inventor fellows are busy day and night with the same idea. By dint of dwelling upon submarines I have caught the obsession telepathically. I was so sure of the thing that I started a letter just now to Holland's representative to inquire if Mr. Holland wasn't inventing some such periscope.

"So when Joseph Conrad dreams about a haunted, blind devil of a sea Captain, holding madly to his job and blundering about with his ship in the Malay seas, he catches somehow across the void of space the echo of the very wracked feelings of men who are living somewhere somewhat the same horror that Conrad is dreaming. Whence it comes that as you read the yarn he writes out of the stuff he has dreamed it grips you by the vitals. In the same way Kipling dreams stories, and all the others dream stories that none of them could do wide awake. They are hypnotized by the men and women who are suffering the reality—though they may not know at all who these men and women are. So Victor Hugo got the stuff for his tales of horror, and so do all who do any creative work get their stuff or some of it. And each and every one risks losing his individuality in the process. Ordinary mechanical brain work—adding up figures or composing English—tires the brain, to be sure, but does not hypnotize it as creative work does—does not uncouple it, as it were, from your own identity."

Mr. Robertson's side remarks on ghosts seemed to put needless bounds to a theory so magnificent. His interlocutor tried to get the expounder of the theory to admit ghosts into the goodly company of his inspirations. He suggested that Mr. Maurice Hewlett lately in his "Queen's Quair" had professedly, in re-creating his character of Mary Queen of Scots, sought to soak himself in the idea of her till, in a fashion, he got into the heart of the woman and so wrote of her from the vantage ground, as it were, of her own inner consciousness. The process employed by Mr. Hewlett (and with such admitted success) seemed, though Hewlett makes no mention of dreams, to answer perfectly to that of Mr. Robertson—save in the particular that unlucky Mary Stuart has been dead these hundreds of years—and Mr. Robertson had barred ghosts. He listened to the plea.

"I don't pretend to say," he replied, "that the people are wrong who think that a thing once alive lives always—even after the change called death. I only say that my own experience of this curious subconscious, so-called telepathic source of information, or rather of feelings of which one has had no actual experience, extends only to what may well be credited to such as are our contemporaries in the flesh. As to the matter of dead and gone Mary of Scotland, there must be Marys enough—or women enough like Mary—living now. We'll suppose for the sake of argument that Mr. Hewlett caught his sense of the reality from these modern Marys and put it into the historic lady he had taken as his subject. The nature of men and women has not changed, and things as strange, as horrid, as bloody, and as passionate as any of those we read about are going on now, with variations of detail, to be sure, but variations which are not essential."

Thus Mr. Robertson held at once to his theory and to his exclusion of the lingering spirits of dead heroes and heroines from a personal part in the writing of modern stories purporting to deal with their character and fortunes. If you would personally (and telepathically) inspire your own written story you must hypnotize some author in your lifetime. H. L. BROCK.

BIRTH OF THE NAVY'S NEWEST AND BIGGEST GUN

WHEN the thirteen-inch guns of the Kearsarge and the Kentucky were relegated to the limbo of retiring calibres, it was prophesied that smaller guns would take their places in our future battleships. A magnified twelve-inch gun of superior power was quickly evolved, and the new Maine and her sister ships glory in the might of that lighter but more powerful weapon. That twelve-inch gun, some eight tons less of weight than the largest of our thirteen-inch rifles, outpointed its older rival in everything but the weight of the shot it threw, which was 250 pounds lighter. This, as was proved, was a gain, for it took less powder to propel it, and the saving thus made in the individual weight of ammunition permitted more rounds to be carried for each gun. Even with this lighter projectile, however, the twelve-inch gun was able to send its capped missile, undeformed, through no less than twenty-one inches of hard Krupp steel at a distance of 1,000 yards, while the thirteen-inch gun, firing a 1,100-pound shot, similarly capped, could vanquish only 16.7 inches of like material at the same distance.

Standing as that twelve-inch gun does without its peer among naval ordnance the world over, one might reasonably have expected a halt; but no, the desire for greater power has grown, and a still mightier weapon of the same calibre is now being fashioned at the Naval Gun Factory at Washington, D. C.

This gun is known as the "twelve-forty-five," which, in common terms, means that it is a twelve-inch rifle of forty-five calibre—that is, forty-five times as long as the diameter of its bore.

Destructive Power.

The new weapon will be quite as heavy as the largest of the 13-inch rifles, and in destructive power will be considerably superior to the 12-inch gun just described and installed upon the "Maine" class. The layman wonders, no doubt, how two guns of like calibre can differ so much in destructive might, but, briefly, with every foot added to the length of a modern gun, using suitably designed smokeless powder, it is possible to get greater and longer continued developments of propulsive gases, and, as a result, the projectile leaves the muzzle with higher velocity. The new gun will have a muzzle velocity of 3,000 foot-seconds, against the 2,800 of the older gun, and the striking power of the shot is the product of the weight of the projectile multiplied by the square of the velocity, so it is easy to appreciate what this increment of 200 feet per second means.

The first of the newest 12-inch rifles was begun but a few weeks ago at the Naval Gun Factory—the jacket being shrunk on in the presence of a distinguished gathering; and, perhaps, the public may also be interested in the fabrication of this piece of ordnance which shall speak, on the day of its trial, in terms of force yet unmatched in the annals of great guns.

The raison d'être of the "built-up" gun, for such are all the big guns in the navy, is that the piece-metal fabrication of such ordnance permits of pretty thorough inspection of every bit of the material in the structure which would not be possible were the weapon made from a solid forging, and subject to the stresses and strains incident to the unequal cooling of so large a mass of metal. To avoid this, then, the steel plants supply the forgings for our naval guns in the shape of roughly finished tubes and rings, oil tempered and annealed, and of certain prescribed tensile strength—the latter being established by approved physical tests in the presence of a Government inspector.

Parts of the Gun.

In the technical parlance of the gun factory, that forging which is the innermost one and takes the rifling is known as the "tube"; the one immediately over or outside of this, which reaches from one end of the "tube" to the other, is known as the "jacket," and the succeeding shorter forgings, which, step by step, build up the body of the gun rearward, are known as "hoops." The "jacket" and the following hoops are successively shrunk on the tube as a base, and of these operations the shrinking on of a jacket presents the greatest difficulties.

As the forgings for a gun come to the gun factory they are what is termed "rough bored"—that is, they are of internal diameter anywhere from a half to an inch less than they will be when ready for assembling. Let us follow the twelve-inch gun now building and anticipate its completion.

Soon after their receipt the outer surface of the tube and the inner surface of the jacket were further roughly machined and bored and carefully examined chemically and microscopically to see that the texture and the constituents of the steel were all that they should be. This proved, the jacket was then put in one of the great lathes, and its bore very exactingly cut by progressive stages, at each inch of which a minute examination was made of the work. This part of the task being finished and having passed the Inspector's examination with the "electric bore searcher," the bore of the jacket is then very carefully "star gauged"—that is, measured, inch by inch, across the bore by a three-pointed gauge adjustable to thousandths of an inch. From these measurements a "shrinkage" sheet is made, and with this sheet or plan for a guide the outer surface of the tube is cut down accordingly. It is a case where the wearer is trimmed to suit the jacket, and not to the contrary, as is ordinarily the custom in life. The tube, also after successive treatments in the lathe, is finally brought down outwardly to the proper dimensions, which, by the way, are a few thousandths of an inch in excess of the bore of the jacket. Now the jacket must be made to fit the tube, and to accomplish this the jacket is heated until it has expanded enough to slide easily, by reason of its own weight, on to the tube.

Heating the Jacket.

To heat this big "jacket," which is over forty-five feet long and weighs a goodly number of tons, a special plant is built. A well, or pit, of sufficient length or depth is constructed of fire brick and asbestos, and into this the "jacket" is lowered, big end down. The "jacket" is not exposed to flame, but is heated by hot air, gradually raised to something over 600 degrees Fahrenheit, which, in turn, is heated by a furnace burning jets or sprays of crude petroleum. This permits of a very nice adjustment or regulation of temperature. An especially constructed thermometer records the rise and variations of temperature. To heat to the proper degree so large a mass as that of a "jacket" for a .45-calibre twelve-inch rifle requires no less than sixteen or seventeen hours.

While the "jacket" is being heated to the right measure of expansion, the "tube" has been lowered into the shrinking pit and secured in an upright position—muzzle up. The top of the "tube" is plugged and the lower end is connected with a water main and water is kept continually flowing within the tube so as to reduce its temperature uniformly.

Everything is now in readiness. A small crane comes rumbling up the shop overhead and halts just above the furnace containing the "jacket." A heavy block, with a chain tackle, is lowered and hooked into the ring on the furnace top. There is the grind of a running chain for a moment and up goes the top and away it is whisked. The foreman now mounts upon the rim of the furnace and peers down into that scorching pit, and a moment later, sure that all is right, reels away dripping with sweat. Up thunders the big 110-ton crane, and, with remarkable precision, lowers the stout steel slings that are to grip the heated "jacket." This is made secure by workmen, the crane promptly raises the "jacket" and quickly brings it over the deck of the pit, where the foreman in charge, with carefully set cross-points, checks the bore to see that the expansion is sufficient.

This made certain, the "jacket" is swung further over into that corner of the pit where the "tube," still chilling under the influence of its internal flow of water, awaits the "jacket."

Carefully the "jacket" is centred over the "tube," and the workmen with great asbestos mittens push and guide the "jacket" into place, giving it at the same time a rotary motion to make it slip on the easier. Slowly it settles over the "tube," every one watchful for the slightest halt, for should the "jacket" catch long enough to cool a little and "set" it would be a difficult, and, perhaps, expensive task to separate them again without loss. There is no hitch, however, for the expansion has been enough, and as the weight of the heated mass settles more and more upon the "tube" the "jacket" slides on quicker until at the end, when it settled with a rapid drop and a metallic thud that is cheer to the men in charge. But for the rapid flow of water in the tube there would soon be steam, and even with this chilling draught it will be twenty-four hours before the now jacketed tube will be ready for withdrawal.

When the "jacket" has finally cooled and shrunk it will still be slightly greater in diameter than before heating, and, because of this distension, will grip the "tube" all the firmer. This distension, in parlance of the ordnance engineer, is called "initial tension," and with the succeeding "hoops" it increases, the purpose being to take up gradually the force of the explosion of the powder charge, and, because of this, the tensile strength of the succeeding "hoops" increases outwardly. This "initial tension" or permanent grip also prevents the "tube" and the "jacket" from becoming loosened by heating during a long-continued series of frequent discharges.

Out of the Pit.

The jacketed tube is now taken out of the pit and placed in a big lathe, where it is most beautifully centred and the outer surface of the jacket machined down approximately to the desired dimensions. The first of the "hoops" is next to be shrunk on. Again, the inside dimensions of the "hoop" are fixed—this being the next jacket, so to speak, for the following shrinking. With the dimensions of the "hoop" determined, then the outside of the jacketed tube is finished, machined to the required measurements, which, as before, are slightly in excess of the internal dimensions of the unheated "hoop." The "hoop" is now heated just as was the original jacket, but, being much lighter in weight and easily handled, it is brought to the jacketed tube as it rests in the lathe, and there thrust on and allowed to cool. So the work continues until the last of the "hoops" is in place, and then begins the most delicate work of all—"finishing" the gun.

The "finishing" of a big gun calls for the most delicate handling on the part of the most skilful of mechanics, for, great as is the weight and mass of the twelve-inch rifle, still dimensions are carried to thousandths of an inch, and the most exacting inspection at all times calls for faithful adherence to prescribed figures. To correctly centre such a mass—weighing as it does more than half a hundred tons—demands the nicest kind of adjustment. With this done, the gun is finished bored and every inch of progress of the succeeding bits is watched most jealously. At the same time other bits are smoothing up the outside of the gun and a true balance of thickness of walls and masses is thus secured.

The Powder Chamber.

The powder chamber, which is at the rear of the gun, is next bored—this being somewhat larger than the bore of the gun along which the shot must travel. With this done, comes the work of cutting the screw box, or the threaded part of the breech, into which the breech plug is thrust and secured by corresponding threads. At every stage of this work all dimensions are most carefully star gauged. The threading of the screw box finished, the slots or flat places are cut out, which subsequently permit the breech block to be shoved straight in before it is turned or revolved into the threading for locking. With this operation finished, the gun is now ready for rifling. It is not possible to describe this operation in brief, but, as every one knows, its object is to impart that rotary motion to the projectile which steadies it in flight and aids materially to the precision of the shot's work. No part of the machinist's labor on one of these guns calls for more care or more exquisite judgment, and the utmost nicety is demanded at all times, for upon the perfection of this work so largely depends the ultimate accuracy of the weapon.

Wonderful Breech Mechanism.

While all of these various tasks are progressing upon the great body of the gun itself, other artisans are busy with the immediate fittings. The breech mechanism shop is a wonder of skilled handicraft, and while the breech mechanism in itself weighs but a trifle over one-hundredth of that of the body of the gun, yet it takes as long to perfect that mechanism as it does to build the mass of the gun. It is upon the perfect fitting and working of this mechanism that so much of safety and so much of rapidity of fire depends. A twelve-inch gun—not counting the mount—takes about eight months to build, and the mount, because of structural complications and the difficulties frequently encountered in getting satisfactory forgings from the private steel works, demands more time.

No less important than the breech mechanism is the sighting apparatus. Each big gun is now fitted with two of these sights, and here, too, only the most careful workmanship is permitted, for, after all—no matter how perfect the gun—it is upon the refinement of these little instruments that most depends in making the desired bull's-eyes.

Finest Guns in World.

It has been said without fear of contradiction that the finest guns in the world are made at the naval gun factory in Washington, D. C., and of the 3,000 and more employes most of them are highly trained and skilled craftsmen. Working night and day, however, as the plant has been for several years, it is impossible to meet the demand for guns made by the rapid increment to the navy's line of battle. Congress has been urged to add to the plant, for it must be remembered that guns can be made there cheaper and better than by private manufacturers, but so far the response has been inadequate. If the ships last authorized are finished in contract time, and it is to be hoped they may be, their armaments will be unfinished when needed, unless the naval gun factory is greatly and immediately augmented. To those who seek the solution in the gun plants of private firms it may be said that these enterprises now have as much of the navy's work as they can handle and as much as the navy, apart from its own plant, can efficiently supervise by detailed Inspectors. It must be remembered that all of this work is called for by a peace-time provision for the service's needs, present and prospective.

The building of the navy's guns was evolved from modest beginnings, and the perfection of that work is the outcome of twenty years of constant progression and the upbuilding of a peculiarly skilled personnel particularly devoted to its work. Of mechanical facilities the naval gun factory is likewise typical of advance, but to meet the fast growing demands these tools and equipment should be substantially doubled if we are to maintain the unrivaled position our ordnance has won.

To the seeker after figures, let him know that the modern twelve-inch gun, finished but not mounted, represents an outlay of $40,000, and the mounting costs $30,000 more. To fire one of these guns with an armor-piercing shell, the powder and shot cost no less than $465, so it is easy to appreciate the economy of having everything so perfect that the largest possible percentage of shots shall be hits.

THIEF CATCHERS IN HOTELS.

"THE life of a hotel detective is a rapid and anxious one," said a man who has followed this career in New York for upward of thirty years. "He must never blunder. He must protect all those within his fold. But the arrest of the wrong man would work serious injury to the house. His greatest danger is at the time when clerks change duty, anywhere from 6 to 7 o'clock in the evening.

"Last week Mr. and Mrs. Blank came from Washington at 5:30, went to their rooms for a short time, and then went in to dinner. At 6 o'clock the clerks changed for the night shift. A superior looking man went to the desk, asked for the key to No. 167, remarking, 'You see I have managed to get the same old rooms.'

The clerk smiled, looked at the register, recognized the name, and handed over the key. The man had secured all of Mrs Blank's jewels and other valuables that should have been left in the safe, and would have got away with them unnoticed had not Mr. Blank unexpectedly returned to his rooms to get a Senate document he wished to give to a friend who had called for it.

"Well, it turned out that the thief had met Mr. Blank on the train coming in from Newark, introduced himself as the son of an old friend, and had been invited to call at the hotel.

"'You will find us in No. 167,' said Mr. Blank cordially. 'We have managed to get them every visit for a number of years.'

"Now, what's a man to do when he's up against a game like that?" concluded the hotel sleuth.

EFFICIENCY OF SIGNAL SERVICE SHOWN AT BULL RUN

Contrast Between Present Methods and Those in Use at First Battle of Manassas.

FORTY-THREE years ago at Manassas, better known as Bull Run, the first great battle of our civil war was fought. On the same ground a great sham battle was fought last week. Aside from one fact that no lives were sacrificed, the latter battle of Manassas was as real as the other. Between the two battles there are great differences.

To the layman reading descriptions of the two battles the greatest difference perhaps would seem to lie in the massing of troops for a hand-to-hand struggle in the earlier fight and the open formations and long-range firing in the other, accounted for to a very great extent, but not wholly, by the greatly improved weapons of the army of to-day. The student of military affairs, however, will readily see that the most striking difference is in the comprehensive signal service of the new army as against the crude and unreliable means of communication available forty-three years ago.

The first battle of Manassas was abortive and indecisive for the reason that neither of the opposing commanders was able to keep himself informed as to what was taking place even short distances away to the right or left of his position. Had either commander been able to communicate easily with the several divisions of his force he would have won a decisive victory within an hour from the time the first shots were exchanged.

From an intelligence department depending upon messengers on foot and on horseback to the best equipped and most highly efficient signal corps the world has ever seen is the difference most striking between the old Manassas and the new.

The abortiveness of the first battle of Manassas, due as it was to the lack of any adequate means of intercommunication between the various divisions of a command, caused the military geniuses of the North and of the South to set about the development of a signal system that would to a great extent do away with the transmission of orders and intelligence by the slow and uncertain foot and mounted orderlies. The result was the introduction of flag signals, known now as "wigwags," and later the use of hastily constructed telegraph lines for long-distance work.

The introduction of improved field guns and small arms of great range and increased deadliness has made necessary radical changes in military tactics, and in modern warfare the troops of a command of given numbers are scattered over a much wider area than in the old order of battle; hence it has become more than ever essential that the signal service shall be able to transmit orders and intelligence with the utmost speed and accuracy, for it is vastly more important that a commander have positive knowledge of what is taking place in the various divisions of his force and be able instantly to order an advance or retreat at any given point than that he be advised of the enemy's movements.

Use of Wigwag.

The wigwag, or flag telegraph, the heliograph, the telegraph, and the telephone are all used in the transmission of intelligence by the modern signal corps. The wigwag can be used successfully up to ten or twelve miles, but only under the best conditions and by the use of powerful field glasses. The ordinary range, however, is only about six miles, and then its usefulness at the front is impaired by the fact that frequently the signalman must expose his position to the enemy.

The heliograph is an instrument of great range, and can successfully be used under perfect conditions up to a distance of fifty miles. In this instrument mirrors are so arranged that rays of sunlight may be projected in any desired direction, a shutter being used to interrupt and control the flash. Ordinarily, this instrument must be used from an elevated position in order that the flash be not intercepted by obstructions. It also is at a disadvantage in that an enemy possessed of the code may read the message and the answer flashed back. For night signaling powerful flash lanterns, having about the same range as the wigwag, may sometimes be used. While all these visual systems have the advantage of simplicity and ease of operation, they are practically useless in bad weather and in rough country, where the view is much obstructed. The telegraph is used to greatest advantage at the rear of an army where the lines of communication are long and well protected. The telephone has practically all the advantages of all other means of communication and none of the disadvantages. It has besides, as will readily be understood, many advantages peculiar to itself; hence the telephone has become the principal instrument for field work.

Telegraph and Telephone.

The extensive use of the telegraph and still more extensive use of the telephone has rendered it necessary for the army to draw upon the electrical field for skilled linemen and operators; in fact, under the provisions of an act of Congress, passed in 1898, one-third of the Signal Corps must consist of skilled electricians.

The rapidity with which telephone communication is established by the Signal Corps is little short of marvelous. Lines are laid well in advance of the main body of troops, even when the army is advancing by forced marches, and perfect connection is maintained at all times between the commander's headquarters and all the divisions of his forces, thus giving the commander absolute control at all times of every part of his command, even to the outposts. Thus he can order changes in the disposition of his troops at will and on the instant that such changes become expedient.

Where the nature of the country and conditions will permit, the reels of wire and the batteries are carried in wagons. The line is laid on the ground as rapidly as the horse can advance. If the line so laid is to become permanent, a detail follows the wagon at leisure and attaches the wire to trees or hastily erected supports. For plying lines, or lines in the zone of action, lines connecting the commander's headquarters with the various divisions, the detail following the linesmen merely lay the wire in protected places where it is least likely to be damaged. The lines may be taken up, moved, or abandoned, as the occasion requires. Where the nature of the country or other conditions render the advance of the wagon impossible or inexpedient, the line is advanced by men carrying coils of wire on their shoulders. A scout advancing into the enemy's country beyond the point where the wagon must stop is accompanied by a telephonist, who uncoils his line from his shoulders as he moves forward. To the inner end of the coil is attached the telephonist's instrument. Thus he is able at all times to report the scout's observations direct to the scout's commander and to receive instructions from headquarters. When the scout is called in or is forced to fall back, the line may be recovered by the telephonist or abandoned after cutting the instrument loose. If the scout is taken, the operator at the other end of the wire is made instantly aware of the capture by the cessation of signals, and the line is useless to the enemy.

Time Element Eliminated.

It will be seen that the use of the telephone in the field eliminates the time element in the transmission of orders and intelligence, and guarantees against mistakes. It also affords the means of communicating orders with absolute secrecy.

Frequently in great battles it has occurred, as in the first battle of Manassas, that batteries were kept idle for hours and much-needed reinforcements held in check with resultant disaster because the means of rapid communication was lacking. It has occurred, too, that a retreat at one point and an attack real or feigned at another would have saved an army from defeat—movements that were not made because the commander lacked information of what was taking place at those points, or if he was informed lacked the means of promptly ordering the necessary moves. That the commander of to-day is at no such disadvantage is made clear in the accounts from Manassas of last week and the reports of the efficient work of the Signal Corps.

The tactics of to-day are based, as were the tactics of other days, upon the assumption that the opposing forces are equally well equipped with death-dealing weapons, and that in a general way all soldiers are men of great physical courage. But the operations and strategy of the older time would not do for to-day.

As has been stated, modern weapons are in a great measure responsible for the new tactics, but the strategic operations of modern warfare are made possible only by the highly developed efficiency of modern methods of transmitting intelligence.

The importance of a superior intelligence department was shown by the operations of our forces during the war with Spain. It is more clearly shown in the operations of the Japanese against the Russians, where other things, to all extents and purposes, are equal.

The birth of the modern Signal Corps occurred, as has been shown, during our civil war and immediately after the battle of Manassas, and while much in the way of advance has been accomplished from time to time by other nations engaged in war, it is not claiming too much to assert that the intelligence departments of the armies of the world are in a great degree patterned after the Signal Corps of our own army.

M. C. SULLIVAN.

ONE WOMAN'S NIGHT IN THE PARK.

"I WENT out to sleep in the Park," said the woman, "partly to see how it would be if I ever had to come to it, but mostly for the story.

"I selected Union Square Park. I dressed in my oldest clothes, put on a rainy-day hat, and found a vacant seat.

"It drizzled slightly. Besides, it was chilly, sitting still. The tramps were huddled together under the trees, whose great leaves flung black shadows on the pavement. They had ranged themselves directly under the leaves, which in a measure took the place of umbrellas. I had found a seat next to an old negro woman who sat placidly sleeping, her hands folded, the rain gently wetting them. She was not black, but a brownish yellow, and her hands were wrinkled and freckled. The rain ran down the creases of them.

"Next to me on the other side a man had huddled himself into an excruciatingly uncomfortable attitude. He was so sound asleep, however, that he seemed not to mind.

"It seemed to me that it was not so bad, after all, to sleep out in the open air, except that the rain chilled even in the Summer night. That and the dense quiet, together with the awkward, cramped positions of my companions, saddened me.

"I sat still a long while, looking across the flower bed at a row of sleepers under a tree. Now and then one would awake, stretch his arms, walk to the umbrella-like leaves of another tree, and seat himself, head drooping, legs curled under the seat, hands hanging down.

"By and by a boy walked back and forth in front of me. At length he stopped, looking at me in a pitying way. There was a vacant seat between the old negro woman and myself. He took it apologetically.

"'Do you think,' he asked, 'if I gave this old woman a quarter she could find a bed?'

"'You might try it,'" said I.

"'You ask her,'" he insisted, and I roused her and put the question.

"She replied joyfully in the affirmative, took the quarter, thanked him, and hurried out of the park and away.

"He gave another quarter to the man on the other side of me, who also went in search of a bed. Then he looked wistfully at me.

"'What about you?' he asked.

"I laughed.

"'Oh, never mind me,' I said.

"'You are a philosopher,' he decided, 'taking it so cheerfully. Are you going to sit out here in the rain all night long?'

"'Yes,' I nodded.

"With that he began to talk reminiscently into the night.

"'A year ago,' he mused, 'I came to New York without money, not even enough to get me a bed. I had to sleep out here in this park all night long. It was cold, terribly cold. There were no flowers in the bed then. If there had been they would have frozen.

"'I nearly froze that night. So did the others who slept out here. Well, ever since then I have come here to try and help these people who sleep in the park.'

"I looked at him smilingly and approvingly. He was a very young boy, not twenty yet, and many a boy of twenty would long ago have forgotten the terrible experience of that Winter night.

"Again he turned his eyes on me.

"'Would you take a little money from me?' he asked, timidly.

"I started back, then recovered myself. It was a perfectly natural question.

"'No, I thank you,' I answered.

"'If you would take a dollar,' he urged, 'and go to some hotel, I would be glad to give it to you.'

"I shook my head.

"'Well, then, go with me to a little restaurant somewhere and let me get you something to eat.'

"'I am not hungry,' I demurred.

"He sighed.

"'If I had a little sister like you,' he said, 'and she had to sit out here in the park all night long it would break my heart.'

"I fell to comforting him.

"'I don't mind,' I declared.

"'But I do,' said he. 'If you must stay here I will go home—it isn't far—and get my umbrella and sit out here with you.'

"That settled it. I had to own up that I was doing it for a realistic story, and let him take me home.

"He left me at the door, and though I have often thought I should like to see him again I have never laid eyes on him from that night to this."

Dead Easy.

"Say, pop, how do parrots talk?"

"In polysyllables, I suppose."

MILLIONAIRE FARMERS WHO TILL the SOIL WITH HEAD INSTEAD of HANDS

Brain, Not Brawn, Nowadays Winning Rich Gifts from Mother Earth—The Man with the Hoe and the "Husking Bee" Now Only a Memory.

THESE are the days of big things because we are getting down to business more and more. In other words, we are realizing that so much can be accomplished by observing labor-saving, therefore time-saving, methods. Perhaps the farmers have been among the most recent to realize it, as is indicated by the actual revolution in agriculture in America which is taking place.

The work of the farmer has been called an industry, but with the man of to-day, who depends on the soil for a livelihood, it is also a business to become more productive to the extent that each phase of it is carried out on progressive and systematic lines, and this is why the expression "one-horse" is regarded as contemptuous, since the one-horse farmer is usually among those who cannot make ends meet at the year's end, and comes out with a balance on the debit rather than the credit side of his account—if he keeps an account, though he may be too negligent even to keep one. Under this heading is not to be placed the small land owner, for he may get as much net value out of fifty or one hundred acres by economical and at the same time methodical agriculture as his neighbor who pays taxes on double the area, but who has not appreciated the profit which comes from progress. The same rule applies to the farmer as to the merchant, the manufacturer, even the banker—it rests with the man himself to apply judgment and method, as already stated, in making a business out of agriculture, or plowing and sowing haphazard, trusting to nature to repay him with the harvest.

But nature helps those who help themselves by taking advantage of mechanical invention and applying processes which experience or possibly the farm college has taught them. The best proof of this fact is what appears to be the wonderful results which have attended agriculture on a large scale in the great grain belt beyond the Mississippi as well as in the Central West. Here the corn or wheat field may be calculated by the square mile—not the acre. Instead of the one horse you hear of four, six, even a dozen hauling the apparatus. The bushels of grain are reckoned in fifty-thousand lots, and one man may own what would be called a township in the older States. Yes, they are one-man farms, not one-horse farms, but with this difference—the man may not put his hand to the plow or toss a bundle of hay from one year's end to the other. He farms with his head—not with his body. He devotes his ability and experience to getting the best results out of the men he employs and the machinery he owns, and wherever it is a question whether the man or the machine will do the most he takes the machine every time.

Twenty-five years ago the man ambitious enough to attempt to cultivate a thousand acres would probably have been thought idiotic, but such has been our agricultural progress that to-day one can find farms in the West ranging as high as ten thousand acres. In a single year the owner of one containing 6,000 acres in Iowa has placed in the bank $50,000—the profits of that period after taking out all expenses. In other words, every acre of the farm netted him over $8, counting in 400 acres of woodland, roads, and soil on which nothing productive was cultivated. It may be needless to say that this farmer kept an account, and a minute account, of every item of income and outlay. An analysis of this account is of interest, for it explains in part how he succeeded where others would have failed.

The farm in question is called a "corn farm." This title is somewhat misleading. In addition to corn, no less than 1,000 acres are planted in wheat each year, and about 600 acres in oats. Corn is relied upon for the principal money return—the cash crop—but if all the available soil were devoted to it annually far more fertilizer would be required than if another cereal were occasionally planted, so the crop is rotated by raising three successive harvests of corn from a field, then "putting" it in wheat or oats, and following this harvest with three more of corn. The land is valued at $30 an acre, representing an investment in the soil of $180,000. The improvements, which include houses, barns, and buildings of all kinds, fences, sewerage, machinery, and live stock, swell the total to $258,500. If the farmer had this capital placed where it paid him 5 per cent. interest his income from it would be about $13,000—at 6 per cent., a little over $15,000.

Here is the problem for him to solve: Can he make his soil yield sufficient in quantity and quality to pay him $15,000 annually after meeting all expenses? If so, his money is a 6 per cent. investment. As already stated, he has cleared as high as $50,000 in one year, and in a period of ten years his profits have never been less than $19,000 at each year's end. The expense account would stagger many a man who calculates on a hundred or five hundred acres. It would buy what would be considered a good-sized farm in some parts of the United States, for it amounts to $25,000 a year—but it includes everything, even the depreciation in value each year of buildings and machinery, which the owner estimates at 10 per cent. Therefore every harvest must yield him at least $44,000 in order to make the smallest profit recorded, but, as already intimated, this kind of farmer estimates by the fifty thousand and hundred thousand bushels, as he calculates his outlay in tens of thousands of dollars. Here is what was put into his granaries in one season:

He sold the corn for $64,500, the wheat for $30,000, and by feeding the oats to his animals reduced his year's feed bill to $200.

Gang Plows in Action.

The expert corn grower who reads this article will doubtless be surprised at the harvest to the acre—over fifty bushels—but this farmer, who makes it his business, does not waste an acre of cultivated soil, and, after it is plowed, gives one part the same attention and care he gives to all—through his machinery and the men behind it. In the preparation of the ground the gang plows come into play, each drawn by six sturdy horses. If the soil is heavy even the seeders are drawn by four horses, never less than two. You do not see the "man with the hoe" walking over a field and wasting a half dozen kernels where he plants one; then another man following him to bury the seed in the earth. These machines drop just three grains in every space allotted for a hill because they can be adjusted to do it, and cover the grain automatically. In planting time you can count thirty of them in operation, so the thousands of acres are seeded as quickly, if not more quickly, than a hundred. To harrow the surface the farmer starts out a hundred harrows in a morning. If they were placed side by side they would cover a strip 400 feet in width as they move along. He keeps the weeds from choking the young corn with seventy-five cultivators, each drawn by two horses. The "man with the hoe" exists only in poetry on this place. Time and space are too precious for him. When the crop is gathered seventy-five four-horse wagons haul the piles of ears to the barns, placed here and there at convenient points, to save time.

Throughout it all the idea is to keep every man, every animal, and every machine doing what can be done to the best advantage—each forming a part of a system of which the farmer is the director. Consequently, the same thoroughness is noted in one part as in another, and the farm is as carefully divided into departments as an up-to-date factory or store, each one knowing what he has to do, and how and when to do it.

It is not strange that this man may "make" his corn crop for 10 cents a bushel where it costs his neighbor, who does not believe in "new-fangled" methods, nearly twice this amount. When a farm can be conducted as a business, and the cost of plowing, planting, cultivating, and every other expense sum up less than $5 for every acre, while the corn from every acre sells for two or three times this amount, the business of agriculture is worth thinking over.

Ingenuity in Inventions.

The part which mechanical appliances play in aiding the modern husbandman is one of the most interesting features of this subject. Ingenuity has been displayed in few inventions more notable than those which concern the soil and its products. The inventor has so reduced actual human labor in field and garden that a man can perform about every operation required by merely the turn of a wheel here and the pull of a lever there with one hand, while he guides his horses with the other. He can actually plow, cultivate, and seed 100 acres without walking a step, and with his two or four horses and machine will accomplish as much as a dozen or a score of men with hand tools. Even when the corn is ready for cutting, no longer is it necessary to swing the sickle blade and get the backache gathering and binding the stalks. One reason why the Western corn "patch" may extend a mile or more in length is because it can be cut and grasped by fingers of steel and bound like a bunch of wheat without a touch of the hand.

The corn binder and shocker moves along as rapidly as the horses drawing it can walk, cutting every stalk of the hill close to the roots. Held in the shock former the stalks are wrapped into a compact bundle ready to be carried to the barn or stacked amid the hills. When it is time to separate the ears from the husk the farmer does not call in his neighbors. One of the hands pitches the stalks and ears into a machine that strips every piece of covering from the ears and piles them into the wagon or on the ground. Then it takes the husks and blows them through a pipe into the barn loft to be stored for fodder. Here again a steam engine having the power of two or three horses will do as much in a day as forty or more human huskers, and the only wages are water, oil, and fuel.

The "husking bee" has gone like the man with the hoe, and even the haymaker is rapidly becoming a memory. We are all familiar with the horse rake which gathers the hay into long swaths. At last apparatus has been designed that gathers up the swath as it moves along, raises it to the top of a wagon, where the man with the pitchfork adjusts the load. As the vehicle moves forward it is filled by this hay elevator attached to its rear and the hay adjusted, ready to be hauled to the market without another touch.

A Mechanical Giant.

The grain field at harvest time presents an animated scene, especially when the wheat is thrashed on the spot where it is grown. The old-time thrasher with its horses in the treadmill was considered a little short of marvelous, but it was long since discarded for the one driven by the traction engine which hauled it from place to place, and now the visitor to a California wheat field can see the climax of the agricultural engineer's effort—a mechanical giant, which, as it passes through the mass of waving stalks, cuts them, separates the kernels from the sheaf, and binds the straw. Actually the only manual labor performed with the wheat itself is to remove the bags of grain as fast as the machine fills them, and to load the straw bundles on the wagon to be hauled away, yet cutting, raking, binding, and thrashing are continually being done from the time the man at the lever starts his motor until he stops it. In fact, steam power is utilized in Pacific Coast farming more extensively than elsewhere in the world. Tractors representing the power of fifty horses are substituted for animals in plowing a field, making a series of furrows twenty feet wide and dragging from 12 to 20 plows after them. When the earth is ready for harrowing, they are attached to harrows fifty feet wide specially built for them. The steam harvester is in common use. With it 150 acres of grain can be cut, thrashed, and sacked in twelve hours, for it mows a swath 22 feet wide. The tractor draws its plows over fifty to sixty acres in a day, according to the character of the soil.

When one stops to consider what these figures mean he can get some conception of how machinery is aiding in the revolution we have referred to. The invention of it has been stimulated by the demand for labor and time saving appliances, but this demand has originated from the desire of the agriculturist to apply methodical ideas, as in other channels of human activity. As he has studied his vocation he has realized the great opportunities of which he can take advantage if he has adequate facilities. If a man believes he can make a thousand or five thousand dollars more by adding to his acreage he is strongly tempted to make the addition, especially when modern methods will give him the desired results without overwork. This is the secret of the expansion of many of the Western farms to their present size. Not all their owners have succeeded, as in the instance we have cited, but many have done so, and the stories of the rural capitalists who direct operations from their automobiles and drive over their places behind teams of thoroughbreds have more than a grain of truth in them, as the camera proves. But they are of the class who use their heads more than their hands, bearing the same relation to their property that the President of a cotton mill or of a foundry does to his industry.

Agricultural College a Factor.

Undoubtedly the advantage of putting brains into farming has been greatly developed by the work of the agricultural colleges of this country. Their graduates have shown beyond question that the scientific cultivator is no longer to be ridiculed as an impracticable theorist. The thousands of young men and young women as well who have had the benefit of study at these institutions have perhaps done more in furthering American agricultural progress than any other medium, because education has caused them to appreciate that true economy lies in applying modern and systematic ideas in caring for tree, shrub, and shoot. It can be asserted without fear of contradiction that they are numbered among the most prosperous of rural citizens, for they have made their calling not only an industry, but a business.

DIAMONDS ONCE—NOW BEGS.

THE realities of stage life have on many occasions given ample evidence that "all is not gold that glitters," or, at any rate, that the gold of to-day is often the copper—sometimes the lead—of to-morrow.

Not many years ago, says The London Mail, the affluent youths composing what was then known as the "crutch and toothpick brigade" metaphorically, and perhaps actually, knelt at the feet of a certain fascinating young actress whose photographs adorned the shop windows and whose diamonds and broughams were discussed and envied.

A popular and generous comedian, who was as great a favorite a generation ago as he is now, was walking down the Strand the other day when he was stopped by a tired-looking, middle-aged woman in faded apparel. "Mr. ——," she said, "you don't know me now, I suppose; I am ——, ——. Could you let me have a shilling? I want to get some dinner."

She was a quondam idol of the Gaiety Theatre, what is left of the merry girl whose health the jeunesse dorée of the eighties used to drink at supper parties in the costly champagne.

She got probably more than the shilling she asked for, and went her way, having no grievance to relate against any one in particular or society in general—merely wanting a dinner, possibly being short of money only for the moment.

And this is not all that the Strand could tell.

MAKING HER "BLUFF" GOOD.

THE Eighth Avenue car was comfortably crowded the other evening when a woman boarded it. She was a stout person with a resolute chin, and she sat down as though she intended to remain for the balance of the evening. The conductor came through calling "Fares!" and she handed him a transfer.

"This transfer ain't no good on this car," said the conductor.

"What's the matter with it?" asked the woman.

"It's a day old," said the conductor.

"The other conductor gave it to me."

"Well, I guess he gave it to you yesterday. You'll have to pay your nickel or git off."

"Indeed I shan't," said the woman; "I'm going to ride on that transfer."

"You are very impertinent," said the woman. "I shall certainly report you."

"Well, just the same, Ma'am, you'll pay or git off."

The car by that time had reached One Hundred and Thirty-third Street. The woman opened her purse and carefully examined the contents. She fingered five pennies lovingly and examined the date mark on the transfer. The car passed the One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Street signpost. Suddenly she put the coins back in the purse and snapped it shut. Then she closed her bag.

"Very well," she said, "I'll get off. Stop the car, please."

The conductor was too dazed for a minute to pull the bell cord.

The lady looked out of the window. They were just crossing One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street. "Hurry," she said. "I said I wanted to get off. There! we've passed One Hundred and Thirty-sixth Street. Oh, dear, how provoking; you've taken me a block beyond my corner. I declare I really shall report you this time."

And then, just as she was alighting, she aimed the final dart: "I told you I would ride on that transfer, didn't I?" she said.

A Quaint Town Where Everybody Minds His Own Business

SOUTH JERSEY, for some occult reason, has been the scene of an unusual number of social and sociological experiments in the form of colonies. Probably the best known of these is Woodbine, where Baron de Hirsch opened a refuge for persecuted Russian Jews. The long row of houses at the original Woodbine, all empty, deserted and falling to decay, is an eloquent commentary on the inefficacy of colonization schemes not founded on correct ideas of the conditions to be encountered. The sense of desolation is heightened by the peculiar form of architecture employed in these houses. The South Jersey architect when left to his own devices makes the ordinary cheap dwelling, with its gable to the road, peculiarly tall and narrow. This gives it the aspect of a coffin stood on end; and the deserted village of Woodbine bears the aspect of a collection of coffins from which the occupants have escaped.

The colony, however, has not perished, but simply transferred itself to another point for development. The original colonists were transported to Woodbine, housed, supplied with an acre or two of land apiece, seeds and implements, and left to make farmers of themselves. The empty coffin village tells the result. Everybody cannot become a farmer, particularly in South Jersey. The South Jersey soil has ways as peculiar as those of the Heathen Chinee. It extends a warm hospitality to the grape, the sweet potato, small fruits, corn, and cabbages. To other crops it gives but a loose and sandy welcome. The Russian colonists tried to be general farmers. As a result men and boys with packs upon their backs soon began to appear in the surrounding country. Then a New York clothing firm, seeing an opportunity to utilize profitable labor, moved its factory down there. Better facilities led it to settle at East Woodbine, a mile or two away, and there the bulk of the colony has found homes and employment and built up a prosperous village.

The failure of the original colony has been widely heralded as an evidence that the Jew cannot be made into an agriculturist. It was nothing of the kind. The most interesting feature of the whole tale is that numbers of these Jews have gone to various points round about, acquired land, and built up several thrifty little farming communities, of which Rosenhaym may be taken as a type. Having learned what to plant and how to market, they have made successful farmers. These little Jewish villages of South Jersey are an interesting study, especially to one who knows the Jew in the lower east side of New York or in his native village. They are almost entirely Jewish, few individuals of any other race being found in them. The basis of their prosperity is the outlying farms. There are the ordinary small industries, little stores and the like, and occasionally a small factory. Each village has its synagogue, but these Jews have Americanized far more quickly than their compatriots of the same class in New York. The process of Americanization is very marked among them.

Jews as Agriculturists.

As a sidelight on the Jew as an agriculturist the success of Rabbi Krauskoff's school in Philadelphia may be mentioned. He has established an agricultural school on the plan of Briarcliff school, formerly in Westchester County. He takes Jewish boys out of the sweatshops and trains them to be superintendents of farms, dairies, and estates. He has proved that Jewish young men can do this sort of thing as well as any one else. Numbers of his graduates are earning salaries of from $800 to $1,400 a year and expenses.

More interesting to Americans is the history of Vineland. The concentrated essence of Americanism was collected in the colony of Vineland. It was founded forty years ago by Charles K. Landis, a Pennsylvanian. Mr. Landis had ideas, lots of them. In the first place, he was the father of the "boom." Old Vinelanders say that he was the first land boomer in America; the first man to conceive the idea of "promoting" a real estate scheme.

With his essentially modern notions in this respect he combined some ideas of an alleged Utopian quality. He planned a community from which the demons of drink and intolerance should be forever banished. Vineland by its charter was prohibited from ever allowing a saloon within its borders, and from that day to this, more than forty years, there has not been a place in Vineland where a man could buy a drink. Even to-day it is difficult to get a prescription containing alcoholic ingredients put up at a drug store, and the place has always been the headquarters of the Prohibition Party for the State of New Jersey.

It was a more subtle matter to exclude intolerance, for illiberal opinions could scarcely be prohibited by charter. The end was attained no less surely, however, through Mr. Landis's progressive methods of advertising. The place was widely heralded as one in which absolute tolerance of opinion was to prevail, where no one was to be criticised for anything unless it infringed on the rights of others or injured the public welfare. As a result, no one except those to whom that idea was attractive joined the colony. The town has never lost its marked attitude of liberality and tolerance, although to the casual observer it is as conventional as any other place to-day. A direct result of this early bent is the existence of seventeen churches, representing as many different denominations. This is startling when one reflects that there are only 8,000 inhabitants and that the usual statistical allowance of churches for a town of that size is five. Vineland is probably the only town in America with seventeen churches and no saloon.

There are elements of humor in the practical working out of Mr. Landis's ideas. It was so different from anything he expected, that the worthy founder stood aghast. Extremists of all kinds flocked to Vineland in its early days. For instance, the extreme wing of the Bloomer agitation, those who adopted men's clothes straight out, instead of the bloomer subterfuge, found a home in Vineland. There was quite a little coterie of women who for some years wore literally the useful garment which many wives are said to wear figuratively. Most of them subsided, with years and matrimony, into the innocuous petticoat; but a few stood out till the end. Among them were the Misses Fowler, who took a farm in Vineland forty years ago. One of the sisters has since died, but the other still runs the farm, from which she has reaped a comfortable fortune. She is now eighty years old, still wears men's clothes, and her prospective marriage was announced in the press a few months ago.

The Resort of Tolerance.

Another steadfast radical was Dr. Tillotson, a woman highly respected both socially and professionally. Dr. Tillotson held to men's clothes until her death not long ago. Dr. Mary Walker was an intimate friend of Dr. Tillotson's, and used to visit her for weeks at a time. Vineland was a haven of refuge to Dr. Mary. It was the only place in the United States where she could escape the hoots of small boys and the admiring attention of the public. Vineland has always adhered steadfastly to its original principle, to tolerate anything whatever that did not injure other people.

Curious idiosyncrasies were always cropping up to lend variety to social life. Dr. Tillotson, for instance, held some unconventional ideas in regard to the psychological effect of occupying another person's chair. When she went to a social gathering she always took her own chair along, or else a cushion or silk handkerchief, to place in the one offered her before seating herself. Numerous men wore their hair long. One clergyman, distinguished as a writer and lecturer, now located in one of the largest and wealthiest suburbs of New York, was in his Vineland days noted for the luxuriant mane of raven locks which flowed over his shoulders. A prominent editor of Vineland still wears his hair as long as a woman's. It waves behind him, flowing and unconfined, when he walks the streets of Vineland. But when he visits New York or Philadelphia he finds it expedient to "do it up," employing the humble but useful feminine hairpin, and covering the result with a broad-brimmed hat.

Then there was the man who had such an intense antipathy to being buried in a casket that he wove a receptacle of basket-work in which to be laid away, which he would describe and display to any one sufficiently interested to listen. He has since been buried in his basket, and his mortal remains have no doubt returned to their constituent elements with the facility desired by him. Vineland as a whole took to cremation as a duck does to water. It was the first town in America to extend the glad hand to the new method of sepulture. It has no crematory, but there is not a clergyman in Vineland who has not officiated at many funerals at the Germantown crematory. Mortuary urns are to be found in the spare bedrooms of most Vineland homes.

The Spiritualists took advantage of Vineland's cardinal principle very early in its history. At one period there was an invasion of Spiritualists. No less than 300 mediums were to be found, and for a little while the town went mad over table tipping and spirit poetry. The mania passed, perhaps because the town could not stand the financial strain any longer. The 300 are gone, and in their place one lone lady comes down from Philadelphia occasionally to bring messages from the cremated ones. The solid result of the high tide is that the local organization of Spiritualists owns the town Opera House, which it utilizes for services on Sundays and rents to traveling troupes on week days.

Free Lovers Not Wanted.

After the Spiritualists came the Free Lovers. Victoria Woodhull and her sister and some of their followers lived there for a time and conducted an active propaganda. They stayed longer, probably, than they would have done in any like community in America. Vineland, with its amiable interest in anything new, looked into the novel doctrines with an unbiased mind. It took the town some little time to wake up to the fact that this particular brand of progress was something it did not want. Then residence for the propagandists was quietly made socially impossible, and they sought new fields. Instead of an Opera House, the later propagandists left behind them as a souvenir only the name "Free Love," which a pair of perfectly orthodox, tight-married young parents had bestowed upon their innocent infant. It was a proof of their peculiar innocence of soul that they never realized what a name they had saddled upon their child until she, grown to years of sophistication, indignantly shed it and took another.

"Father" Gage was a revered old man who always used to carry an old-time shepherd's staff, taller than himself, when he went out to walk. He said it was more substantial and satisfactory than an ordinary cane, and nobody minded. The first Japanese hat to be seen in America, of that basketwork helmet variety which looks so weird when first beheld, very properly appeared on the streets of Vineland.

Throughout the history of the place, but especially in the days before the various "cures" came up, Vineland has been the refuge of men seeking to get control of the drink habit. It had the reputation of being the only place in America where the stuff was actually not to be had, in public or private, and prominent citizens and sons of prominent citizens of New York and Philadelphia have at times passed unexplained sojourns in this little Jersey town. More than one Vineland clergyman has had such men under his care.

Vineland never noticed or commented on any of these eccentricities. It never kept out anything but the saloons, or froze out anything but the freelovers.

Some solid material results have come from the early policy of the founder. Vineland was started in a wilderness of sand and scrub oak. But it was incorporated in the deed of every purchaser that he was to plant trees and hedges. As a consequence the streets are bordered with splendid elms and maples, and the town has always been renowned for its beautiful hedges of arbor vitae and other shrubs. The town was laid out in a square, intersected with two principal dividing streets. In each quarter was a small school, with a high school exactly in the centre—emblem of the American idea that education is the centre of civilization. The streets are beautifully broad, shaded, and well kept, a model to any city.

Inducements of free sites and remission of taxes were held out to factories by Landis, and several shoe factories took advantage of it, so that Vineland has a basis of industrial as well as agricultural activity. But the thing which gave the place its characteristic tone was the presence of people who moved there because they wanted a home in a quiet place, where there was more liberty and progressiveness of opinion than is usually found in a town of its size. Among these have always been numerous literary people. Thirty-five or forty years ago, when it meant a great deal more to be a writer than it does to-day, the presence of this element lent quite a distinguished tone to Vineland social circles. Marcius Willson, author of one of the most popular series of school readers ever published, still lives in Vineland. At the age of ninety-two he is as spry as a boy, and writes eight hours a day. D. O. Kellogg, one of the editors of the Encyclopedia Britannica, is a resident, and a member of the Glider family made his home there for years.

When Mr. Landis was advertising his scheme he paid every editor who advertised it with town lots. These lots were all in one section, and the inhabitants still call this the "editorial section," although most of the editors long since took advantage of rising prices to sell their lots. One cannot help speculating upon the possible results had all the editors gone to live upon their lots, forming an editorial colony.

Sociological Theories Flourish.

Socialism, single tax, philosophical anarchy, and probably every other sociological theory known all have their representatives in Vineland, and all are regarded with the same good-humored tolerance. For years there was a co-operative store in the town. One of the papers is a leading organ of the Populist Party.

Probably the prevailing atmosphere of ready acceptance of new ideas induced Vineland to lend itself so easily to the biggest scheme of municipal ownership undertaken by any town of its size in the United States. Six years ago it acquired its water works from the private company then operating them. It established an electric-light plant, and the two together, with the pumps for flushing the sewers, and other apparatus for conducting the sewage system, are all combined in one plant, a mammoth affair for so small a place. The sewage, instead of being left to befoul a river, is pumped on to land and filtered by chemicals, after the most approved modern ideas of Berlin and Birmingham. It was characteristic of Vineland that the Citizens' Committee having this matter in contemplation sent a public-spirited clergyman of the place to visit all the most notable examples of municipal ownership in the United States, and report before the town bonded itself.

Galveston Harbor Scene Looking West.

WHEN Gov. Lanham of Texas, in dedicating the great Chinese Wall of Galveston, on Aug. 22, declared its construction and completion to be a triumph of pride and patriotism no less than of trial and tribulation, it was an oratorical signal that Galveston had recovered from the disastrous solar plexus blow of 1900 and was prepared to challenge universal admiration. For its monster new seawall, aside from being one of the most remarkable engineering feats on record, is a monument to such powers of recuperation as few thought the American city of sorrows possessed.

Lisbon, with its seismic palsy, and Herculaneum and Pompeii with their sooty blanketing, succumbed to nightmares hardly more appalling than the one which Galveston experienced four Septembers ago, when wind and wave wiped out from 8,000 to 10,000 lives, destroyed nearly 3,000 dwellings, caused an erosion along the Gulf front of various depths, and resulted in a loss of more than $45,000,000 in property and trade.

That the town, half of whose populace favored abandoning it as hopelessly hoodooed, has weathered the gale and is now commercially and habitably as good as new, puts it in a class by itself.

Since the awful visitation four years ago a full regiment of masons and mechanics, engineers, and contractors, beginning work on Oct. 27, 1902, and ending on July 29, 1904, has erected a concave wall 17,593 feet, or nearly four miles, long, 16 feet wide at the base and 5 at the top, with a granite riprap apron extending out 27 feet on the danger side, at a cost of $1,198,318.80. One year four months and seventeen days were required to throw these huge breastworks around the entire exposed side of the island upon which Galveston stands.

Yet this is but the alpha of a campaign of defense—or prevention—which will not end until nearly four square miles of densely built and populated city are raised from two to seventeen feet higher than at present. This raising of the grade is intended to provide not only a solid backing for the seawall, but also to prevent the sea in no matter how great a storm from invading the island again. It also will furnish a sufficient elevation of drainage and sewerage throughout the residential section of the city, and will cost an additional $2,500,000.

A Herculean Task.

One may ransack engineering history without finding a parallel to this Herculean labor. If it fails it will mean, perhaps, the annihilation of Galveston, but, in the opinion of the foremost engineers, it will succeed. So far as the New York contractors can approximate, some 11,243,900 cubic yards of filling will be required to perform this resurrecting miracle. It will cost 18½ cents a cubic yard. Aside from this, an immense area will be made or filled by the Government as a protection for the extensive fortifications at both ends of the immense seawall.

New York has reason to be proud of its giant subway, which is about to be opened, but, all things considered, the subway is hardly in the same zone of magnitude and risk as the complete rehabilitation of the Texas metropolis. Galveston has believed in itself, and with a proverbial faith has touched the spirit robes of engineering science to be healed.

Over its healing scar the seawall is an abiding memory of what Galveston shudders over still as the great hurricane of 1900. Generally speaking the catastrophe was the most misunderstood phenomenon that has ever occurred, and it is astonishing that so few people who passed through it and had occasion to observe its devastating progress, can give a satisfactory explanation of the occurrence. A Government weather expert, in reviewing for THE TIMES the frightful visitation, expressed surprise that the general public, even in Galveston, continues to speak of it as a tidal wave or a tornado, when, as a matter of fact, it was neither more nor less than a regular West Indian hurricane, that was hatched in the vicinity of Martinique about five or six days before sweeping over Galveston. At the Washington observatory a record exists showing that its progress was kept and given to the world every few hours, from the moment of its discovery; and there was no trouble experienced in tracing its path until it was lost sight of in the Gulf of Mexico, near Key West.

As long as it was possible for the weather scouts to trace the hurricane, during the first few days of its progress, it was not different from the usual September hurricanes, which are generally of yearly occurrence and which always cause more or less damage along the Atlantic seaboard unless they die out before reaching there. It is only at times that the hurricane musters enough force to burst through to the Gulf of Mexico.

By reason of some meteorological influence about the time the 1900 hurricane entered the Gulf it had gathered such force on appearing before Galveston as to have attained a velocity of a hundred and twenty miles an hour. This engine of destruction, as described by a master word painter, simply picked up the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and hurled them against the defenseless city.

As a prelude to the majestic tragedy the September morning had broken in a bright sky, with a cool and clear breeze. The waves were racing at a sharp angle to the shore, carrying fleeces, an innumerable flock of vague green shapes. As far as the eye could reach the beach was white with the shearing of them. Clouds came, flew in a panic against the sun, and passed. Steadily the wind freshened and the waters rapidly heightened; colossal breakers began herding in like moving leviathans, until the night fell on a surf that appalled the best swimmers. As in a mad orgie of foam the gale began rending off the heads of the waves and veiling the horizon with a fog of salt spray, intermittently lashing the city with rain.

Higher and higher the tide rose, six, eight, ten, twelve, and then fifteen feet above normal until the mad swirl of waters was literally tearing and rending the city in twain. Within nine hours as many thousand persons were drowned and half of Galveston Island was a dozen feet under water.

Prior to the Galveston hurricane the weather departments of the world had hardly recorded a wind of such devastating velocity, and hence the United States weather officials had small opportunity to observe the effects in 1900 from the fact that instruments provided to register the greatest velocity of any known wind were demolished by the time they had recorded a velocity of one hundred miles an hour. Such a wind blowing for two hours over New York or London would have done as much, and likely more, damage than was done at Galveston. But in the opinion of experts the chances are that this country may never again experience any such hurricane. By the Washington Weather Bureau it is designated as a freak.

Safety of Galveston.

That Galveston is as safe as any other American city under ordinary circumstances has been demonstrated by reason of the fact that many buildings, located along the water front and within a short distance of the beach, while only a few feet above the sea level, stood for more than thirty years in perfect safety. So it is probable that the necessity for building a sea wall and raising the city seventeen feet is based upon a sentiment brought into being by reason of Galveston having fallen a victim to the mad humor of a freak.

But scarcely had the hurricane abated when the work of regeneration begun. Steps were at once taken to secure the passage of a law enabling the City and County Commissioners to co-operate in levying a tax sufficient to undertake the work. Accordingly, in March, 1902, a proposition to issue bonds in the sum of $1,500,000 and levy a tax of 50 cents on the $100, to pay interest and create a 2 per cent. sinking fund, (appropriate name,) was suggested to the people. The result of the election, commonly known as the sea-wall election, was a victory for the spirit of the community to remain and properly protect itself against another similar visitation.

Bids being invited and opened, the seawall contract was let to a Denver construction company at the afore-named figure. Higher portions of the city are generally above overflows during seismic disturbances, and is only during phenomenal tempests that e island is to any alarming extent sub- rged.

Reasons for Sea Wall.

nquiry into the frequency of cyclonic heavals originating in the West Indies vealed the fact that about once in three d a half years hurricanes and tidal erup- ns endangering some portion of the xan coast will appear. Hence the results he attained from the sea wall were these:

1. To protect the city from the force of ves and currents in the severest storms own to occur in the Gulf of Mexico.
2. To protect the city entirely from the ater of the bay and Gulf in all such orms as occurred during the fifty years eceding 1900.
3. To prevent the water in the most ter- ific storms, such as the one in 1900, from er reaching a depth in the city dangerous life and property.
4. While providing for the above, to ar- nge the filling so as to secure sufficient evation for drainage and sewerage.

As is well known, Galveston Island is erely a sand spit, not exceeding three iles in width and extending parallel to e mainland a distance of about thirty-one iles. Having realized the necessary capi- l from the sale of bonds, which, it may e added, were purchased not only by the ealthier class, but by clerks, laborers, nd others who could only afford to buy ne or two of the bonds, plans were drawn p by a board of engineers consisting of en. H. M. Roberts of the United States rmy, Alfred Noble of Chicago, and H. C. ipley of Ann Arbor.

According to their surveys, as furnished y them to THE NEW YORK SUNDAY TIMES, he waters during the September, 1900, ca- astrophe rose approximately fifteen feet t Fort Crockett, in the western portion of he city. That is the greatest height offi- ially reported, although if unofficial re- orts were accepted, a much higher level as reached.

Basing their estimates upon their care- ful survey, the engineers decided to build the sea wall a full three feet higher than the highest point reached by the water in 1900, which is eighteen feet above the beach and from thirty to seventy feet above the concrete foundation of the three-and-one-half-mile wall.

One reason why the United States became a party to the reconstruction and fortifying of the city against future disaster is that Government property to the value of $12,000,000 is in the direct path of the destructive forces. An item on the Government ledger is $8,000,000 spent in constructing the jetties. Another item is $2,000,000 represented by Forts San Jacinto and Crockett at the two extreme ends of the city.

Since the 1900 calamity the Government has expended $1,500,000 in mending the jetties which were damaged and destroyed on that occasion. They are now nearly five miles long, and are being extended nearly a mile further to reach a depth of water designed by the engineers.

Importance as Port.

Another and even more impelling reason for Uncle Sam extending a helping hand to Galveston is because of its importance as a port for the entire trans-Mississippi country. Galveston never made a better investment than in building the Galveston jetties, since they have opened a competitive outlet for the products of the West. It is stated on the authority of one of the best-posted transportation men that in the increased return to the farmers of Kansas, Missouri, Indian Territory, and Texas, through lower railroad rates, the Galveston jetties have paid in one year five times over their cost of building.

Construction of Wall.

The new Galveston Chinese wall intersects the Government jetty at the foot of Eighth Street on the bay shore, and will be extended still another half mile by Uncle Sam as a greater protection for the Fort Crockett Reservation. Some idea may be gained of the massiveness of the great barrier in that many of the single stones weigh a ton each, the entire 18,000-foot wall weighing 40,000 pounds to the linear foot.

Texas granite, Portland cement from Germany, San Jacinto River sand, and Alta Loma water have been used in making the concrete of which the wall is constructed upon a round piling foundation, the piles being driven forty-five feet underground at intervals of four feet. Placed in the masonry there have been approximately 13,300 carloads of material, 5,200 carloads of crushed granite, 1,800 carloads of sand, 1,000 carloads of cement, 1,200 carloads of, or 17,000, piles, 400 carloads of sheet piling, 3,700 carloads of riprap, and 5 carloads of ramfilling rods.

Yet this giant labor is only a curtain raiser to the herculean task of raising four square miles of the city above any possible clutch of the waves. It is intended to use such money as is saved through an abatement of taxation for this work. At present Galveston slopes each way from Broadway. According to the plan, which already is being put in operation, the city is to slope from the fifteen-foot level at the Gulf shore to the present level at the bay shore. This means that the existing grade at Broadway will be raised two feet. North of Broadway there will be only a slight elevation. As all the business buildings are in that territory there will be no occasion for disturbing them. South of Broadway, the residential section of the city, some 2,700 buildings and residences, among them the greatest and costliest mansions on the island, will be raised from six to seventeen feet.

By means of this increasing elevation, which it is hoped will be attained within two years, a perfect sanitation of the city will be assured.

From Submarine Regions.

But, it is asked, where is the filling necessary to hoist such a tremendous territory going to be obtained? The astonishing answer is: From the bottom of the Gulf. Several giant pumps are now being installed, and within a month they will begin pumping sand, clay, and other substratum material from the submarine regions to be used as rapidly as the buildings are raised. One million dollars is estimated by the engineers as the cost of the filling alone. Five times this, however, will be expended in raising and otherwise practically rebuilding the city.

As soon as the proper level is reached the top of the great wall will be used as a walk—an exaggerated Battery—back of which a thirty-foot driveway will run. On the inner side of the drive is to be another promenade fringed by a lawn four miles in length. This will be decorated with trees and tropical shrubbery, so that instead of being an eyesore along the beach front the great wall of Galveston will be a feature and part of an attractive esplanade and boulevard.

In resurrecting itself Galveston will thus have spent not only some millions of dollars before the job is completed, but it has been done by a city burdened already with a storm loss of $45,000,000 and a quarter of its population. As a sequel to one of the most appalling tragedies of history it is a feat that has never been approached on the engineering stage.

Real Spanish Bull Fights in St. Louis

Little Danger to the Bulls, but Plenty of Peril for Toreadors.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 4.—A revival of the thrilling part of bullfighting as practiced for centuries in sunny Spain is one of the developments of the Exposition period in St. Louis. All manner of opposition has been brought to bear upon the enterprise by the authorities and church and humane societies of Missouri, but it appears that the bullfighters have devised a scheme whereby the law can obtain no clutch upon them.

At any rate, the managers of the bullfight game in St. Louis County, just west of the World's Fair, are advertising two performances daily, and already they have pulled off four exhibitions without being molested. This, too, in the face of the unqualified disapproval of the Governor of Missouri, who proved that the exhibitions are criminal under the law. The proper procedure, these lawyers claim, is for Mr. Crow to swear out warrants against the managers of the show and try them on questions of fact.

The manner in which the proprietors of the bullfight enterprise are evading and propose to evade the law is simple enough. They merely arm their matadors and toreadors with blunt instruments. Then, holding that as these instruments do not let blood and neither man nor beast is injured in the exciting frays that are given in the arena, they defy the authorities to convict them of violation of the law.

At first thought it might appear that a bullfight in which no blood is let and no beast is slain would be a tame affair indeed. A majority of the 3,000 persons, men and women, who went out to see the exhibition last Sunday, seemed to take a cynical view of the affair before they went in, and hundreds hung about the gates for some time before they decided to pay the price of admission.

But so delighted and edified were the spectators after they went in that when the "spieler" of the show offered to refund the money of any person who was not satisfied with the exhibition, not a single person accepted the invitation to call at the box office.

The bullfight was voted a highly exciting and entertaining exhibition. Although the bulls were not wounded or slaughtered, they were driven to the highest pitch of rage by the clever and fearless matadors, and the way the bulls tore around the ring, charging and stamping and pawing the earth, thrilled the spectators and at times gave them real qualms for their own safety.

Blunt-edged swords were thrust into the maddened animals' sides, and gay shawls and blankets were flaunted in their faces till the big beasts, every one of which was chosen for his ferocious nature, would bellow with wrath, and, throwing tail in the air, charge the intrepid matadors and toreadors around the arena. The agility and wonderful quickness of movement shown by the bullfighters was a revelation to the majority of the spectators, who had never witnessed anything more exciting in the way of an athletic exhibition than a baseball game.

Twice during the Sunday afternoon performance the large crowd was hushed into stillness by the imminent peril of a fighter. Once Ben Cerzier, a toreador, was forced into a corner by a big black bull, which threatened to stamp and gore the life out of him in short order unless he could escape from the trap into which he had unwittingly fled. In the nick of time Cerzier espied, an opening under the protecting fence around the arena, and he dropped on his hands and knees before it just as the bull charged. Friends on the other side pulled the toreador through none too gently and not a second too soon. His shoulder was badly wrenched in the scramble, but his life was saved and the spectators breathed again.

At another time during the exhibition Felix Robert, the celebrated matador from France, who learned his "trade" in Spain, fell before a big bull's maddened charge, and, but for the assistance of another bullfighter who distracted the animal's attention for a few moments, might have been killed.

The bulls shown in the ring were all large and strong animals, with evidently carefully cultivated viciousness of temper. Only one of them failed to give battle at the first taunt flung to him. This craven was promptly hissed out of the arena. The others charged the gayly bedecked matadors, toreadors, and picadors as soon as they saw them, and, driven wild by the thrusts of the flat swords and the flaunting of red rags in their faces, soon were driven to fair desperation, which greatly entertained the crowd.

Señora Marianna Cervera, widow of Don Manuel Cervera, who was killed in a duel with Capt. Careton Bass, manager of the bullfight enterprise, appeared early at the arena last Saturday and made personal appeals to the Deputy Sheriffs to prevent the contest. The Señora has vowed vengeance on her husband's slayer, whose trial is pending, and she seemed to be distraught with rage and grief that he, Bass, was to be permitted to pull off a probably profitable exhibition with the men and troupe her husband had collected.

When the officers of the law refused to take any action to prevent the fight, and when the members of the Humane Society admitted their helplessness to do anything, Señora Cervera stationed herself by the gate leading into the bull pen, and closed and reclosed it during the afternoon many times. Garbed as she was in mournful black and with her grief and passionate vengefulness written plainly on her haggard face, the handsome Señora's presence lent a tinge of romance to the unique and entertaining exhibition.

Since Sunday afternoon five performances have been given—one Sunday night and two each yesterday and to-day. How long the bullfighters will be permitted to operate their "game" is purely a matter of speculation. But certainly the managers seem to have struck a plan of getting rich quick which promises most gratifying results. The bullfight promises to become the fad among World's Fair amusement seekers. The crowds increase at every performance, and every one expresses keen enjoyment of the show, declaring it is not so brutal as a football game, far more exciting, and calls for the exercise of quite as much physical agility, strength, and spirit.

SOAPSUDS AND SODA WATER.

JUST plain soapsuds—sweetened, carbonated soapsuds," said a physician, as he watched the crowd around a soda fountain the other night. "That's what they are drinking, and half of them would be angry if I told them. Besides, it might injure the trade of my friend the druggist, and incidentally my own, for half of the minor stomach irritations which physicians have to treat during the Summer, especially among women and children, are due to a too liberal diet of soap.

"It isn't the druggist's fault, either—at least not altogether. The public wants foam on its soda. If it doesn't foam, the public, in this case the women and children, think it is no good and refuse to drink it, and the druggist does not object, for the more foam he serves the less soda

SHE CLIMBED THE FACE OF THE SPHINX TO MODEL IT IN CLAY

American Woman Artist May Bring Her Reproduction of the Eternal Girl of the Desert to New York

FRONT VIEW OF MODEL.

"And near the Pyramids, more wondrous and more awful than all else in the land of Egypt, there sits the lonely Sphinx. Comely the creature is, but the comeliness is not of this world; the once-worshipped beast is a deformity and a monster to this generation, and yet you can see that those lips, so thick and heavy, were fashioned according to some ancient mould of beauty—some mould of beauty now forgotten—forgotten because that Greece drew forth Cytherea from the flashing foam of the Aegean, and in her image created new forms of beauty, and made it a law among men that the short and proudly-wreathed lips should stand for the sign and the main condition of loveliness through all generations to come. Yet still there lives on the race of those who were beautiful in the fashion of the elder world, and Christian girls of Coptic blood will look on you with the sad, serious gaze and kiss your charitable hand with the big pouting lips of the very Sphinx."

ord who does not tell all she knows. w, in the beginning of the twentieth tury it is quite possible that the rnal Girl of the Desert is coming to w York.

Coming to New York.

The Latin Quarter student sounds more picturesque in story than the reality turns out to be. Bare walls, with none of the vulgar modern conveniences that mean cleanliness and health, are disappointing, but the charming American studios of Paris, with their busy expatriate workers in art, are fascinating in their combination of the modern New Yorky atmosphere, with the art-saturated air of the boulevards.

Mrs. Longworth studied art in Paris before she went to Egypt to do her Sphinx. Her principal idea was to paint it, and with this aim in view she studied Egyptian lore with the fascination that all students feel in this great Girl of Gizeh.

A Dangerous Task.

She found, as many other artists have, that the Sphinx does not lend itself to painting, so she determined to model the monument, and returned to Paris to study under M. Beaudel, the M. Rodin's talented élève.

When she felt competent for the work in hand she returned to Egypt and began a task fraught with much risk, discouragement, and danger.

The face of the Sphinx is out of all range for purposes of close study. The that gigantic head—the enigma of archaeologists.

Mrs. Longworth's mathematical facts are perfectly correct, and she has even reproduced in a mysterious manner the look of age that has always denied itself to the painter's brush and has been lost in most of the best known photographs of the monument.

In the replica the American sculptress has the strength, the unity, the brutal power of the antique. She is averse to talking about the work, for, as she says, there is nothing to say. She has been so long away from America that she could not recognize the necessity for detail as to her swinging on a scaffold far above the earth in all sorts of dangerous positions so that she might see the Sphinx, feel the tremendous stubborn lips, the unflinching eyes, and the big ears that have been listening to much sadness and much folly since they first heard the voice of the world.

Of the merit of the work M. August Rodin, the French sculptor, has said:

"C'en est une interpretation libre, interessante parce que comprehensive. C'est autre chose et néanmoins c'est le Sphinx avec toute son énigme et toute sa grandeur. * * * Dans cette sculpture inspirée du Sphinx, il y a une oeuvre

TOPICS OF THE DRAMA

A Dearth of Foreign Plays Promises to be Abundantly Supplied by Work from the Growing School of American Playwrights—"The Duke of Killicrankie" and Other Current Successes.

In the benediction to last season it was pointed out that whatever its financial result, it was well up to the average artistically, and perhaps above it. The cry of theatrical failure has since been raised in London. The financial losses of the managers have been rated as high as a million pounds, which certainly sounds high enough; and Mr. A. B. Walkley, the spirited critic of The London Times, has been publicly lamenting that what Henry Arthur Jones has called the renaissance of the English drama has passed its climax and is on the decline.

A Few But Very Few Good Foreign Plays.

Mr. William Archer, sane and hopeful as always, points out that the cry of decadence is founded on the plays of "the season"—always more or less given over to shows for travelers; and that the plays of the best dramatists had been, as usual, brought out in the Autumn, when they stood a chance of the longest run before the closing of the theatres. Capt. Marshall's admirable "Duke of Killicrankie" we have already with us; Jones's "Joseph Entangled," which Henry Miller is playing on the road, is said to be in its author's best comedy vein, and Pinero's "Letty," in which William Faversham and Carlotta Nielson open to-morrow, is said to be as masterly as his previous studies in feminine character.

We are promised two plays from Mr. Zangwill, whose profound and exquisite genre tragedy, "Children of the Ghetto," was so undeservedly a failure, and whose inferior yet deliciously fresh and appealing "Merely Mary Ann" was so deservedly successful. One may look to "The Serio-Comic Governess," in which Cecilia Loftus appears at the Lyceum Tuesday, with the most pleasurable expectation.

At the same time it is evident that the general run of theatrical importations is not to be of a particularly high popular value. We have had all of Barrie that is coming to us just yet. There is nothing of moment from Henry V. Esmond, and R. C. Carton's "The Rich Mrs. Repton," in which Fay Davis is to appear, seems to belong to the class of "A Clean Slate" rather than to that of "Lord and Lady Algy." Gilbert's "Fairy's Dilemma" is highly spoken of, but appears to be a peculiarly English satire on conditions that are already obsolete. From France, Germany, and Italy there seems to be nothing of the first order. Mrs. Patrick Campbell's appearance in Sardou's "Sorceress" bids fair to be nothing better than interesting. Perhaps the greatest contribution from abroad is the actor Novelli. I have only seen him once, and that in an almost empty Roman theatre and in a modern problem play, but with everything against him, it seemed evident that he fully deserves his reputation as one of the first of modern actors.

The Promises of the American Playwright.

Even if the foreign supply were to fail, however, the fact would not be irremediable from the artistic point of view, which is what most concerns us here. Vastly as our playwrights have profited, and highly as our audiences have been edified by the example of the modern school of European playwrights and actors, there is a point at which it ceases to be a virtue to give over our theatres to them, and this point has been sadly ignored by the managers. The dearth of foreign plays this year, it is to be hoped, will open their eyes. It is high time that they began to see the wisdom of cultivating home talent, working in the native and intimate fields of American life. Not many foreign successes have equaled those of native origin, crude as these often are, and those that do are becoming every year proportionately fewer. The curse of the American playwright is that in his efforts to conciliate the rule-of-thumb manager he can an admirable stock company to support Mrs. Fiske, including Arliss, John Mason, and Robert Ferguson. Until after election he is to give a revival of Mrs. Fiske's "Becky Sharp" with Mr. Arliss as the Marquis of Steyn, and perhaps also a revival of Mrs. Fiske's admirable "Hedda Gabler," the striking success of which last year was cut short by Mrs. Fiske's out-of-town engagements. Mr. Fiske has also a serious drama, said to be of very unusual merit, by "Hugh Morton," author of "The Belle of New York," who will produce it under his own name, C. M. F. McLellan, and also "What Will People Say?" by Rupert Hughes, a domestic tragedy with a striking part for Mrs. Fiske.

John Drew in an Empire Success.

The phrase "a characteristic Empire success" has of late had such a doubtful meaning that even the mendacious billboards have abandoned it in despair. In applying it to John Drew and "The Duke of Killicrankie" only its most flattering connotation is intended. The play, while scarcely equal to Capt. Marshall's "Royal Family," is pretty sure to be one of the great hits of the year, as it was the shining success of "the season" last year in London. Like the plays of the late Oscar Wilde, it is in the Gilbertian tradition of light wit and polite absurdity; but whereas Wilde added a touch of world-weary cynicism to the sufficiently cruel quality of his master, Capt. Marshall infuses a lighthearted and wholesome atmosphere. Airy as the play is, farcical and romantic as it is in texture, the appeal it makes is always to the intelligence and to the acutest and most wholesome risibilities. The spontaneous and unaffected laughter that greeted almost every line was a gratifying indication of a fact frequently insisted on here: those who write plays on the assumption that success comes only by insulting the good sense of an audience launch a boomerang that is bound to bring the insult back to their own intelligence.

The acting of Mr. Drew's company reaches a height of excellence that has been all too rare. Mr. Gottschalk has taken many light and grotesque character parts; and, from Tweenways in "The Amazons" down, they have all been admirably done; but it may be doubted whether he has ever combined such opportunity as he is at present enjoying with such variety and richness of ability and humor. Particularly subtle is the manner in which he unflinchingly and unfailingly connotes the dominance of the mercenary in Pitt-Welby's matrimonial endeavors, without for a moment forfeiting the sympathy of the audience or provoking a single cynical laugh. Every one is on his side, and not the less so because the object of his cupid and his cupidity is very tactfully represented by the playwright, and by Fanny Brough, as not of the most trusting sensibilities. Her motto is, "Once a widow always—cautious!" Miss Brough is quite as admirable, both in her skill and in her power of investing her character with the charm of truth. As the Bayswater hostess in "The Man from Blankley's" her virtuosity was as great, but she was obliged by the necessities of the character to appear in a most unamiable light. Now, as the widow of the Glue King, she is quite as inexorable in denoting middle-class hardness and shrewdness, but the last act, in which in a skillfully contrived comedy scene she is made to dragoon her mercenary and all too willing suitor into marrying her, gives scope for a bit of genuine and richly characteristic feeling. Hitherto, while granting that she equals Mrs. Gilbert at her best as the Daly mother-in-law, it has seemed likely that she lacks Mrs. Gilbert's more expansive and lovable traits. Her present performance, sharply ascid as it is in the main, suggests a range of feeling beyond what she has yet shown.

An interesting feature in the methods of both Mr. Gottschalk and Miss Brough, as of those of Miss Margaret Dale, who is excelling herself both in comedy and in tender emotion, was the use of the pause. It was particularly effective in the cat fight of the dinner scene. As spiteful dig followed clever rejoinder, to be succeeded by renewed attack, one fairly saw the slow, malicious germination of soul-satisfying repartee. It was not the slow and tedious delivery that many actors of late have fallen into in the idea that they were gaining intensity, but a vital and positive living of the part in its innermost instinct and mental process.

When so excellent an actor as Mr. Drew is so neatly suited with such an amusing play it is not pleasant to be scanty in his praise; but on the first night, at least, he was far from ready with his lines, and his impersonation, as a whole, lacked harmony and consistency. The one point on which he seemed perfect was the slurring of his "ings" in the true manner of the racin' and the bettin' aristocracy. The essentials of the Duke of Killicrankie's character are eager whim and romantic passion. Mr. Drew's lovemaking was at times whimsically cold and at others artificially impassioned. Mr. Drew is often said to be a bad performer on first nights. With repetition his impersonation will no doubt be more accurately modulated. No actor on our stage is better fitted, both by temperament and by ability, to excel in such a part.

Mr. E. G. Kennedy points out with exceeding courtesy that the part of the Duke of Killicrankie was not played in London by Cyril Maude. The Morning Telegraph just plainly points it out, and in passing makes two errors on its own account. Fanny Brough's part was played by Marie Illington and Margaret Dale's by Eva Moore, the gifted wife of Henry V. Esmond. To the subway with the hatchet! What are such trifles among friends!

Conventionality and True Feeling in "Mrs. Wiggs."

The dramatization of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," and for that matter the original, is a curious study of what happens when true feeling and authentic observation are expressed in an unduly conventional manner. The character, humor, and emotion are undoubted, and are of the most exquisite. But many of the "points" made date far back into the history of the novel and stage. It reminds one at times of the man with a funny joke who puts his tongue in his cheek and approaches you as if to say: a laugh or your life! How well one knows the whole repertory of funny jokes, and how willingly he would renew the raw joys of the youth in which he laughed at them! But to be reminded of a present disability is a poor substitute for comedy. In some cases Mrs. Flexner has aggravated the original sin. To make the pessimistic and pitiful Miss Hazy a loving and scorned spouse of the irresponsible Mr. Stubbins is to make the absurd pitiful, not enheartening. Still, it will not do to dogmatize. The audience laughed. It has laughed too long at such things to forget the bad habit in a day. And it must be said, and said forcibly, that for the most part the humor, however conventional, was genuine. Particularly happy were the many touches of stage business with which the absurdity of the characters was projected over the footlights. Miss Hazy's wedding gown was a creation of the grotesque, which no diaphragm could resist. The essential quality of both book and play is intensely feminine, and not more so in its accuracy of minor observation than in the frugal re-employment of old material. The technique of the whole, too, is of the kind one has seen so often in plays by women. It was quite naïve, lacking the vigor and consistency of theatric narrative, which seems the exclusive product of hard masculine minds. The intelligence that would be shocked by the merest stich of basting is not troubled by the loose ends of dramatic technique.

The real triumphs of the evening were the performances of Miss Lowell and Mr. Hodge as Miss Hazy and Mr. Stebbins. Mr. Hodge combines a technique of the homely and a mastery of unction well-nigh as perfect as that of his late master, James A. Herne, or the living and always delightful Denman Thompson. There are rumors that Mr. Hodge is to have a play of his own to star in. He richly deserves it. Miss Lowell was equally admirable. The only trouble was that the lifelikeness of her impersonation was almost too intense to be amusing.

The Revolutionary Drama in New York.

Mr. Julius Hopp and his enthusiastic associates are still hard at work on their project of giving New York a people's theatre of ideas, such as has long been familiar to the great Continental capitals. If one can believe all they say, the trivialities of Broadway taste are to be shamed and the sins of plutocrats be put to the blush. We heartily pray that both projects will prove successful and shall watch the course of events with vast interest. Yet it may be doubted whether conditions are ripe for the project, or soon will be. The only true hotbed for the theatre of ideas is afforded by a Government that oppresses ideas and denies the individual the opportunity of gratifying the two great desires of mankind, which philosophers tell us are hunger and love. It will be many years before Americans of ability are unable to feed themselves and those dependent upon them, and until they are, those who have ideas and the ability to give them form and effect will be too busy to put much heart and soul into the drama of protest.

JOHN CORBIN.

IRISH FAIRY LORE

NABBY was an old lady out in County Sligo who nursed us all and who in her old age got America mad or else insane for one look at her son's face again. Nabby and her husband (an old man of eighty Winters) sailed over here one fine day in spite of all my mother's protestations. A month later we got word that both of the old couple had succumbed to the change of climate and been laid to rest in foreign soil. So life goes—an old tree will not bear transplanting. Nabby was a veritable storehouse of lore regarding the "good people" as the fairies are called in Ireland. Many an hour have I listened to little fairy tales. I wish I had the power to write them more nearly in her picturesque language, but the following will give an idea of what those folks at home believe regarding those delightful fairies of theirs—for they do really believe all this, and will tell it as gospel truth to this day. I have a distinct recollection of being made by my mother to return a piece of sweetbriar which I had taken from one of those fairy forts."

Ach, allanna, it's thim new-fangled notions ye got away in thim cities an' towns that makes ye be doubtin' ould Nabby now."

"But, Nabby," I protested, "I'm not doubting you really; only I do find it hard to believe that fairies could do as you say—take your baby boy right away and leave one of 'them' instead. But, don't mind me, Nabby," I added, for a shade of sorrow crossed her patient old face; "don't tell me the story unless you like; don't if it hurts you."

"Ach, it's a long day now since it happened, an' it only aises me mind to talk id to ye, asthore; so rest yerself, agra; sure I'll not be in this hour yit; rest yerself, and I'll tell ye id."

So I seated myself on one of Nabby's rotless creepy stools near the broad hearth, my old friend in the corner opposite rocking herself to and fro on the creepy as she talked, and bending forward now and again to tap or twist or turn to her liking some boxty cakes that were being cooked for Tom's supper.

Twilight was stealing over fair Aughavass, and the light breeze that ruffled the budding lilacs in the little garden plot outside had still the pure coldness of Spring. There was nothing to disturb the evening stillness except the chirping of some crickets that held court in the crevices of the hearth—and the arrival of Patsy O'Brien, who came in for a moment as he passed, to get a coal for his pipe and to tell Nabby that, "Glory be to God, the spuds on the Breagh farm was down an' all in the good weather, and that they'd be at the oats in the mornin', plase God," to which Nabby responded:

"It's God's blessin' to have thim down while the dryin' lasts; it is, indeed, Patsy," and when he had gone she told me the story.

"I was a likely slip iv about yer own age, (God bless ye for fear I'd overlook ye,) whin I met Pat McGovern first. It was at a weddin' over in Garthy, an' I was dancin' wid an up-counthry farmer. There was rale grand music, too, I remimber. 'Twas the Murphys was fiddlin' that night; an' I was always the wan for to step to their tunes—ould wild airs they always played. So me an' me partner kept on dancin' whin all the others was dead bate out, till some wan fired a turf that just hopped on me feet, an' without a word or thinkin' at all I just tuk an' threw id back straight where id kem from. Thin every wan laughed, for where did it light but on Pat McGovern's head, an' they sed I'd have to make up to him for brakin' his skull. Well, out iv id all we med grate frinds intirely. Pat used to say jokin' after that he got me all be a sod iv turf.

"'Twas here, too, he brought me, a bride, though the ould people wor sayin' it wasn't right to be livin' so near a fort; but 'twas the ould home iv the McGoverns, an' I knew all along that theirs was wan iv the families that was followed by the 'good people'; so 'twas all the same. Wherever they lived the 'good people' id cum afther, ony mebbe we'd been nearer the fairies' home id hear the warnin's iv anythin' that was to happin sooner than the rest.

"First I saw the warnin' lights the Summer afther I kem here. Three nights they wor out, an' I used to trimble watchin' thim, not knowin' what might come from thim, dancin' up an' down, like stars swingin' about on the fort. The banshee, too, was moanin' in the glin below, for all the world like an ould woman cryin' sorrowful or a keen wind whistlin' through bare trees. But three days afther we got word that Pat's brother—God rest him!—his only wan, too—was dead an' buried out foreign—so thin we knew what the lights wor for.

"But the nixt time they wor seen was the night that me boy was born. I heard the wimmin whisperin' to wan another that 'they' wor warnin' for another iv the McGoverns, an' I knew thim they thought that the gossoon id die, but he didn't; only lived an' thrived, though Pat an' me was always unaisy, for the warnin' lights never failed before to bring the height iv bad luck.

"So, asthore, the Winther an' the Spring an' the Summer passed, an' 'twas just three days from the date iv ma bouchal's birth whin the lights wor seen again. We wor half likin' an' half fearin' to watch thim, but ye don't know how grand it is to, see thim in the harvest iv the year, whirlin' round an' round on the ould fort beyant like big bright stars. Oh, acushla, it's grand intirely; an' the noise iv the fairies' saddles—for we cud hear id plain—was low, quiet music—like the singin' in the chapel in Passion Week. Sad as that."

Nabby rested her elbows on her knees and seemed to have forgotten my presence as she rocked herself to and fro on the creepy stool, and stared silently for a while into the bright heart of the fire.

She need not have feared that I would not have known how beautiful the old fort would look in the harvest, though I had never seen the fairy lights upon it; but Aughavass was ever beautiful, with its fort and glen almost side by side, and the green vale and upland, with the glistening white cottages of the village near. It was always at twilight the lights were seen—they told me—and the fort and the valley and the glen all would be bright. The fort, with its pretty, irregular, green-clothed banks, from which upspring the whins, with their long-since-withered May flowers, and the sweetbriar, and the sloe trees with their weight of wild purple fruit—the last of the season—and the ripened upland beyond would be lying in sweet-smelling, golden swathes, and in the glen the rowan trees would be weighted with the crimson berries.

Above—just facing the fort—was the gray and white chapel rock, where in the soft light one might almost think to see the chalice, with the Sacred Host upraised above it, that pious hands had carved in the hard face of the rock—hands that centuries since must have crumbled to dust, perhaps in the churchyard below, perhaps on some far foreign shore; but hands whose work neither time nor the malice of man could efface, though the—presumably—Gaelic inscription beneath was blurred and indistinct, unhappily, or another link would be forged in the long chain of evidence of the sufferings our forefathers had endured for the faith. For it was a well-known fact that that same rock had served for an altar times innumerable during the terrible penal laws.

But Nabby got up suddenly from the creepy and went across to the doorway, from which she could see the old fort in the field beyond—though the first shade of night was upon it. Did she think to see her boy there? I wondered. And I asked her to finish the story for me then.

"Well, allanna," she said, "three nights the lights wor out, an' Pat tried to make little iv them to me whin we watched thim togither. But he knew in his heart 'twas for some iv his race. So the third night late, afther we wor tired out watchin' thim, I was sittin' at the fire wid me boy in me arms, whin a big breeze kem suddin—an' the night so still before—that blew in the door wide open, though 'twas heped as tight as cud be, an' blew out the light. Thin I felt the child draggin' an' draggin' away from me arms. I cudn't cal out or do anythin' for a while, only hould to the child as well as I cud, till Pat, God rest him! got the door shut an' the dip lit, for there was no matches or candles in the counthry thim times—that's nigh forty years now, asthore. All that night well, the nixt day afther the child was moanin' an' cryin' quare. Every day for months 'twas the same, he cryin' always. We brought him to docthors far an' near, but 'twas no use. 'Twas thin the cowld thought kem on me that it wasn't me own child at all was in id afther that night, but wan iv 'thim,' for ne'er a part iv him grew at all but his head, an' he was always ailin', ailin', the whole time, an' always cryin' an' moanin'.

"Months wiat by, till wan day a woman from the far counthry was passin' and kem in a while to kally. She was known as 'Good Maurya,' an' she had the second sight. Well, the first thing she noticed was 'him' in the corner, an' he ailin' away, as usual. 'Musha, Naoby,' she sez to me, 'where did ye get "it"?' pointin' to 'him' in the corner. An' I tould her all about the lights an' everythin'. 'He' commenced moanin' worse at us talkin', an' Maurya brought me outside a minit.

"'"He's" wan iv "thim,"' she sed, 'an' d'you go an' pluck the fairy fingers, ye know the speckled purple flower that grows in the glin below, (an' two other weeds, I forget their names thus now,) an' boil thim, an' give "him" the juice, an' ye'll see the change it'll make in "him."'

"Well, ahasky, I wint that very evenin' an' pulled the fairy fingers an' the weeds, for God knows I'd have gone anywhere to get a cure for him thin. An' whin I crossed the threshold there wid the flowers in me hands I saw him watchin' me quare, an' just out iv a thought I held up the flowers before him an' sed, 'Now, me boy, I've somethin' that'll stop yer cryin',' whin, glory be to God, if he didn't throw up his hands like this, straight in the air, an' gev wan awful cry. The nixt minit he flnt down his face an' covered it with his

STALKING THE STATELY DEER

North Woods Shooting Season Well Under Way.

Special to The New York Times.

PAUL SMITH'S, N. Y., Sept. 10.—The shooting season in the North Woods is now well under way. Since early in the Springtime the deer have been making their appearance along the highways in the vicinity of the gardens or have come in the morning or at evening to the remote ponds to bathe in the still waters or feed upon the lily pads, and from time to time the visitors to the region have seen them. Gradually the coats of the animals have been turning from red to blue, they have grown sleek and fat upon tempting foods, of which there has been a greater abundance since the forest fires; they have shaken off the lethargy of the Winter and early Summer months, and are now the worthy prize of the skillful still hunter, against whom they match the acute instincts of sight, hearing, and scent.

A new element to be met with in the forests of Northern New York is in the restocking of the region with moose and elk, the success of which is not assured even after a trial of two years. While it is not possible under the law to kill the big game, the elk have caused great damage to green growing things, shrubs, &c., and nowhere in the region are they counted a benefit. In some localities it has been found impossible to keep them from the gardens; they have killed dogs that have attempted to drive them away, and as a final resort exasperated caretakers of private property have emptied charges of birdshot into their hides. But the elk have returned to inflict further damage.

Only a few moose have made their appearance of late, and some are inclined to think that the moose have sought more favorable conditions, or dropped in their tracks.

There have been several costly experiments with big game in the North Woods. The great private parks in which the animals have had hundreds of acres to run over, and where there have been men to care for them, now contain few big game animals. The destruction of fences by trees falling in the forest fires has resulted in the liberation of the few remaining animals of their kind in the private parks.

There may be one left of the wild boar brought into the region by the carload by Edward H. Litchfield and turned loose in his inclosure of 8,000 acres at Big Tupper Lake. The black-tailed deer introduced in the Adirondacks by Dr. W. Seward Webb have escaped from time to time, and the hunters upon State lands in Hamilton County now and then kill a large deer that shows some of the characteristics of the black-tailed deer.

The English stags brought into this locality by William Rockefeller and released in his private park seem to have thrived, for now and then a hunter brings down one of the kind.

Of deer and black bear there has been an increase in the number where they have been left to roam upon wild lands. There is a remarkable contrast to-day in the appearance of the deer confined in parks with that of deer on the State lands. The wild animals are in good condition, and their coats are approaching the color one expects to find at this season, while the animals in the inclosure are red and poor.

Only a small percentage of the owners of large parks and estates in the North Woods attempt at this time to confine any game animals. The greatest estates are those of William Rockefeller and the late William C. Whitney. In each instance the area is about 100,000 acres, and while guards patrol trails there are not any fences to interrupt the freedom of the game animals. Both Mr. Rockefeller and the late Mr. Whitney expended large sums with the object of improving the hunting conditions, and the sportsman and poacher alike share in the benefits.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt has some tame deer running about the grounds at Sagamore Lodge. These deer spend the night in the forest and return by day to feed upon the offerings of the visitors to the lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt will entertain at house parties throughout the Autumn at Sagamore Lodge, and there will be hunts from day to day, but the wild deer of the forest that roam the ridges regardless of the limitations of private and public grounds will be the creatures sought.

Where Women Hunt.

The private parks favor the hunter in that they have well defined trails over which man and woman may walk with ease compared with tramping through the brush of the State lands. Here women hunters enter into the spirit of the season with every hope of success. Mr. Rockefeller has many shooting lodges in the forest where one may spend the night while on a hunting or fishing expedition. The trails in the park of Timothy L. Woodruff are very superior and afford pleasant pilgrimages of upward of sixteen miles. The log roads throughout the vast estate of the late William C. Whitney have been made comfortable to walk over and from them branch ways to the beechnut ridges or groves of cherry trees where one finds the deer feeding after the frosts have opened the burrs and loosened the fruit of the black cherry tree until it falls upon the leaves below.

The deer runs in the estate of the late William C. Whitney are defined in an unmistakable manner, and nowhere in the world are they to be seen to a better advantage than on a certain ridge where hardwoods flourish in the Whitney park. Here the deer runs resemble the cow paths of the pasture land, with the exception that the hoofprints are finer and cleaner. There is an interesting confusion of these paths of the deer. They cross and recross and have parallel paths like the ways of the city. Although there are many paths, it would seem that there must be many deer, for in the Autumn, when the leaves come down in showers, the flying hoofs kick the leaves out of every path, and instead of an indistinct trail covered by myriads of brilliant colored leaves, one sees fresh dirt cut up as though horses or cattle were in the habit of crossing the territory frequently.

The deer runs lead hither and thither. They may connect a waterway with the forest covert; one may lead to the briny waters of a marsh where there is a suggestion of salt that is much relished by the game creatures, or the path may lead to another feeding place and on into the forest depths, where the shrill notes of the warning bird betray the intruder.

Not the least interesting place in such a locality is the battle ground where rival stags met. Here the roots have been dug up or chopped into minute pieces and mingled with the soil, and there is not a handbreadth of vegetation in the plot twelve feet square where the deer battled. It would seem that the creatures must have stamped and pawed and dug up the earth here for hours during their fierce encounter.

One is not permitted to kill deer in the North Woods except by stalking. Night hunting, which embodied one of the rarest and richest experiences in the memories of old hunters, is no longer tolerated under the law: the hounding of deer is likewise unlawful, and there remains only the opportunity for a man to shoulder his gun and enter upon the forest trail or sit down in a locality frequented by deer and await their coming.

AUTO-SPEEDING AT NIGHT

Macomb's Bridge Dam a Favorite Course for a Spin in the Dark.

I stood on the bridge at midnight
As the clocks were striking the hour,
And I wondered what I had taken,
A fizz or a whisky sour.

I saw the bright reflection
Of the Harlem under me,
But the things I beheld above it
I had never thought to see.

Scarce had the distant chiming
Tolled off the middle of night,
When there started a strange procession
That froze my wondering sight.

First one, and then another,
Then two and three swept by,
And then they came at such a rate
They dazzled my watching eye.

And some were still as phantoms
That come when the night grows cold,
And some shook the bridge like giants
That strode in the days of old.

These are the feelings described of the bridge tender at the Macomb's Dam Bridge over the Harlem River when he got his first sight of the midnight speedway of the automobiles. The bridge has of late become the favorite speeding course of the fastest autos in the city. After midnight the bridge is practically deserted. There is no car line over it, though every day it is expected work will be begun on track laying from pier to pier. As there are no houses for many hundred feet, the auto owners can take chances there and let out their machines. It is the only place in the city where they can do this. That they do it with a vengeance one will not deny after standing for an hour or two after midnight at the north end of the bridge.

A few autos pass over before midnight, but it is not till the clocks in the big Harlem belfries sound out 12 that the speeding begins. Then from Seventh Avenue and Eighth Avenue streams of motor cars may be seen making for the bridge. They seem to be going fast as they approach, but this speed is as nothing compared with the gait they strike as the front wheels hit the bridge. Then "everything is thrown wide open," and they reach nice track velocity before they slow down far up on the road to Yonkers. Then they turn back, but at a slower speed, as there is greater danger of hitting pedestrians. And so back and forth the autos fly over the bridge for an hour or more. Those who see the machines going north up Seventh and Eighth Avenues, near One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, after 11 o'clock often wonder what the steady movement of autos northward means.

A Seeming Paradox.

One Superintendent of an auto station in Harlem said: "Yes, night speeding is getting more and more popular. There are fewer chances of accidents then. This may seem paradoxical, but it is true. The reason is plain. There are so few noises at night to distract the attention of pedestrians that they pay attention to the autohorn, and besides, toward midnight the streets are so still the noise of the moving machine itself is enough to warn people. Again, pedestrians are more careful at night. They don't step off curbs to the street as thoughtlessly as in the day. This, too, may seem singular, but it is true. In the day people have more things on their mind, and there are more things to attract their attention. A woman may be intent on another woman's dress as she steps into the street, or a man may step off the curb thinking far less about a possible collision than about the handsome woman across the street.

Senses Are Acute.

"Again, the senses of every person are more acute in the nighttime, especially the hearing, and the faculties are more on the lookout for danger. The glare of an approaching headlight is far more effective than the sight of the machine itself in broad daylight. It is a fact well known to railroad men that nearly all accidents at crossings in the city and country are in the daytime. The hush of night, the soundcarrying capacity of night air, the sensitiveness of the senses, all conspire to warn the pedestrian of approaching danger. In daylight a person will think he can estimate the distance the auto is away, and the speed at which it is going, and that he can dodge it. It is in wrongly estimating his power to do so that he is hit nine times out of ten. In the daytime you will see persons dodge back and forth to avoid a bicycle or automobile. In the night, do you ever see it done? Hardly ever. Why? Because when a pedestrian sees the light of an auto coming he waits till it gets by, realizing that night is no time to do dodging stunts.

Fascination of Darkness.

"Macomb's Dam Bridge is a popular speeding place now, but real speeding does not begin there till about midnight. Until 12 there is a fair drift of people homeward bound over it, but after that hour the bridge is practically deserted. Many of the greatest lovers of auto speeding enjoy that fascination only after dark, and do not call for their machines till after 9 P. M.

"There are many reasons why auto speeding is most seductive at night. The noiseless flight of the machine, the whirling through a lane of light made only by one's own lamps, the absence of the long perspective seen in the city, accentuate the feeling of speed and make more vivid the impression of flying. I know there are those who say some autoists prefer the night because they can escape detection more easily then, but as I have already shown the comparative infrequency of night collisions, it can readily be seen how small a factor that consideration is in shaping a motorist's love for night speeding.

"I am glad our auto lovers have taken to the Macomb's Dam Bridge, for there is little danger of collision there, and every accident hurts the sport to a certain extent. It will be an unfortunate day for us when tracks are laid across it."

WITH a revival of "Becky Sharp," Mrs. Fiske and her permanent stock company will begin their season Wednesday night at the Manhattan Theatre. Harrison Grey Fiske began many months ago to get together a stock company that would equal many of the organizations that have become famous in the past. As leading man he secured John Mason. Two members of the original "Becky Sharp" company besides Mrs. Fiske are present in the new one; they are Robert V. Ferguson and Staley Rignold, in the parts of Sir Pitt Crawley and George Osborne. Mrs. Fiske and her supporters are to be known as the Manhattan Company. They will stay in New York most of the Winter, presenting a repertoire of both classic and modern plays. As soon as it is evident that the theatregoing public has seen enough of one production it will be taken off, and another will be substituted. The setting and costumes to be used in "Becky Sharp" Wednesday evening are exactly like those used years ago. There will be a larger number of auxiliary players in the ballroom scene. John Mason will appear in the part of Rawdon Crawley, George Arliss as the Marquis of Steyne, Laura McGilvray as Amelia, and Mary Maddern as Briggs. Among the others in the cast will be W. B. Mack, Frank J. McIntyre, Henry J. Hadfield, Emily Stevens, Anne Gregory, Ethel Howard, Cecilia Radcliffe, Frances Welstead, Edwin Brewster, Kate Fletcher, and Lucy Spencer.

Mrs. Fiske's success in "Becky Sharp" is too recent for the play to have been forgotten by now. The scenes are laid at Miss Crawley's, at the Duchess of Richmond's ball, at the Mayfair of the Rawdon Crawleys, and at Becky's lodgings in Pumpernickel.

After three seasons as a "leading lady" Cecilia Loftus has at last become a star and her name will appear in big electric lights over the door of the Lyceum Theatre Tuesday evening. Her play is "The Serio-Comic Governess," by Israel Zangwill. It was chosen by Daniel Frohman, Miss Loftus's manager, because he thought it suitable to her individual talents.

As Eileen O'Keefe the star plays the part of a governess, who is supposed to be nothing else, but who is a music hall artist on the sly. The young man of the family in which she is governess falls in love with her. She also has a lover far off at the wars, but he doesn't count for much except as the absent one to whom the heroine must be constant.

The fact on which the story hinges is the fickleness of the far-off lover. He comes back and falls in love with the music-hall singer without knowing that it is really his old love. The third act occurs in the dressing room of a vaudeville theatre, and it is here that all the troubles and mistakes are finally set right. The play is described as a comedy drama.

Arthur Wing Pinero's play, "Letty," will be presented at the Hudson Theatre tomorrow evening, with William Faversham in the leading male part of Neville Letchmere. "Letty" ran all last season at the Duke of York Theatre, in London; it was one of the few real successes of the year.

The appearance of Miss Carlotta Nielson as Letty will not be the least interesting feature of the new play. Heretofore she has been seen in New York chiefly in special matinée performances. As one of the supporters of Mrs. Fiske in "Hedda Gabler" she won general praise.

The plot of the Pinero play centres about the love of Letchmere—who comes of a family noted for its depravity—for a humble girl clerk—and the couple's final victory over the temptation to fly with one another. The man, who is already married, is about to leave England with the girl when he suddenly gets news that his sister has left her husband. His sorrow at this opens the eyes of Letty, and she begs him to let her go.

In the cast with Mr. Faversham and Miss Nielson will be Julie Opp, Ivo Dawson, Henri De Barry, Frank Goldsmith, Wallace Widdecombe, Tom Terriss, Arthur Playfair, Sidney Herbert, Fritz Williams, Olive Oliver, Margery Taylor, and Katherine Florence.

"The Street Singer" will be at the American Theatre this week. The star is Florence Bindley. The press agent describes the play as a "coherent drama in which several musical numbers are introduced." The scenes show a forest near Lakewood, N. J.; the Erie Railroad ferry at West Twenty-third Street, a Fifth Avenue mansion, and a Summer home on the Hudson.

***

The principal female parts will be taken by Helen Ware, Isis Maynard, and Jessie Ralph.

"Piff, Paff, Pouf" will be at the Casino a good while longer. Eddie Foy is still the chief reason for the show's success.

***

"The Offenbach Review" is still a part of "A Little of Everything" at the Broadway Theatre. Pete Dailey and Fay Templeton have a large following of admirers, so the crowds hold pretty well.

Many changes have been made in "The Isle of Spice," at the Majestic Theatre. Agnes Cain Brown, the new prima donna, has won favor.

CASTLES IN THE AIR.

AMONG the most recent and curious acquisitions of the Metropolitan Museum is a gallery of photographs received from an attaché of the Turkish Legation who, in his diplomatic journeys about the world, has gathered a remarkable collection of pictorial castles in the air. All of them are colored the same as the originals, and perhaps the most curious are the Meteora monasteries, near Larissa, on the Gulf of Salonica, in Turkey.

Accompanying each photograph is a running comment in which the monasteries are described as having been originally set far aloft in their impregnable location for reasons of safety. A few years ago only eight of the original twenty-two were inhabited, the remainder having been destroyed, often by artillery fire from commanding positions in the vicinity.

The monastery of St. Stephen is the only one which could be entered on foot, a plank drawbridge spanning the abyss dividing it from the adjacent mountain. This queer building was invaded by the Turkish Irregular Guards in 1886. Disappointed of the rich booty they expected, the vandals tortured and killed many of the monks. All of them would have been slain in the first Greek war of revolution had it not been for the English and Russian Consuls at Larissa.

The other monasteries can be entered only by means of ropes, windlasses, and nets, in which visitors sit and are drawn up to a small window several hundred feet in the air. Generally the monks themselves use the ladders and look like black flies crawling up the face of the rock.

Perhaps the most picturesque of the ancient castles are Barlaam and Hagia Moni, in the same neighborhood. Life today in those aerial castles is the most peaceful possible—no sound coming up from below save the tinkling of the sheep bells and occasional faint cries of the villagers. The air is delightfully fresh and pure, and all around stretches a magnificent panorama of rich plains, brilliantly tinted hills, and snowy mountains. Yet to-day the region is infested with brigands and every precaution is taken to prevent unwelcome visitors entering the lofty castles.

Besides these Turkish castles are others in many corners of the world, one of the most interesting being in China. It is the dwelling place and temple of a small band of monastic priests on the top and side of a giant rock in the middle of the Yang-tse-Kiang River. It is about three miles below Hankow, and is seldom visited by tourists. It has all the charms of a mountain home and is one of the most picturesque sights in Asia.

AMERICAN SCULPTOR HONORED ABROAD

THAT American painters should have their triumphs in Europe no longer strikes us as a surprise, but as yet we are little accustomed to have American sculptors honored abroad. Yet this has been the experience of a young sculptor brought up in San Francisco and later an art student in New York. His works decorate European museums, and at least one European capital has a fine imaginative figure by him, while a second monument for a foreign city is in preparation.

Sigurd Neandross, the son of a Norwegian sea Captain, was very fitly born at sea, but passed his early life in California and is an American citizen. Born in 1871, he studied at the art school of the Cooper Union in New York and then went to Europe, where he began to work at the Royal Academy of Copenhagen, studying painting under Kroyer and sculpture under Stephan Sinding. On his graduation in 1896 he traveled in France, passed several years in Belgium and several more at Stavanger, in Norway, coming home from time to time to work in this country. Recently he has been employed on enlargements for the St. Louis World's Fair, earning journeyman's wages for translating the designs that decorate the exposition.

Although young and very little known, Mr. Neandross enjoys the rare distinction of being the author of a monument on a public square in Copenhagen. It is the poetic "Song of the Sea" illustrated above. It was presented to the city by the architect Nielsen, and stands near the Frederiksberg Allee. Eight feet in height and carved of a gray-green hard stone, the nymph with wildly blown hair strikes her harp and sings the song that inspired the Viking pirates, the song of the wind in the sail and the wave beating against the prow. Noteworthy is not merely the fact that a young American should have a public monument to his credit in Copenhagen, it is also remarkable that this should be no portrait, no memorial to commemorate a fact in history, but a piece of pure imagination, a symbolical and poetic monument such as nowadays few sculptors dare to make. An intensely practical, commercial age is afraid of sentiment and leaves poetry to children, neglects to encourage the imagination of artists, and then wonders why the highest types are absent.

For the town of Stavanger the young sculptor is designing an allegorical group which is to be twenty-five feet high. It typifies the debt owed by the present to the past, and personifies the present as a young woman with her child, and the past as an old woman—a figure of Saga, in fact. This colossal monument is finished so far as the models are concerned, and has met with a good reception at Stavanger, so that there can be little doubt of its erection there.

Mr. Neandross is the rare example of a sculptor who handles sentiment without overstepping the bounds. In treating sorrow, for example, he does not loosen the bonds of reserve, he does not allow his figures to be theatrical. He has a very unsculptor of his years. A small panther in bronze has been taken by Tiffany & Co., has been reproduced, and has proved attractive. These are some of the most characteristic works by him which have come before the public.

A group which he is finishing just now is called "The Kiss," and though it shows a nude man standing close to a nude woman it is singularly chaste in expression, so full is it of a tender, noble passion, expressed by the figures as well as the faces. Realism like that of the modern French school is joined with idealism like Thorvaldsen's, and forms a combination as delightful as it is rare.

The difficulty under which sculptors having the gifts of imagination and sentiment labor is clear enough; there is a dearth of art lovers who understand and care for sculpture sufficiently to encourage work of this kind, so that the sculptor has to resort to portraiture of the living or the dead, to soldiers' monuments and to frank pot-boilers in order to keep the wolf from the door. Some of them become teachers, others work for marble men whose output is rarely other than commercial hackwork, or for architects and decorators who supply statuary for buildings. There are few amateurs who appreciate the worth of sculpture as they do paintings for decorating the interior, who seek out men and women with genius in order to enrich their collections with sculpture as well as pictures. Their number, however, is increasing. Small bronzes and marbles for the mantelpiece and writing desk are being produced here and in Europe, sometimes in the shape of useful articles, sometimes as pieces of pure decoration. The wider this taste spreads the more chance there will be for sculptors like Neandross to express their finest ideas, because sculpture on a small scale, which is constantly about and near to hand, educates people in appreciation, and unconsciously they apply what they have learned to works on a larger scale for public buildings, public squares, cemeteries, and private grounds.

EXCESSIVE RACING THE HORSE'S PERIL

Great Turf Careers Cut Short by Commercialism in Sport—Famous Horses Gone Wrong—Beldame and Pretty Polly.

THE elimination of the very best horses of the mature division has progressed with startling regularity through the present racing season, and at the very opening of the Fall campaign it would be difficult to name a single animal, rated as really high class in the Spring, that can be counted on with any certainty to race again this season or train on through another year. Each of the horses that battle out for the oldest and most famous of the big handicaps, the Brooklyn and Suburban, has been shelved for a great part of the Summer, and of the number it is more than doubtful that Hermis and Irish Lad ever will stand training again.

Waterboy, the most successful horse of the East a year ago, made but a poor showing in his five-year-old form and has been retired, while Dick Wells, the most famous horse of the West, is destined for the stud, as it has been found that he cannot be trained back to his old championship form. McChesney, Africander, The Picket, and Gunfire are other notable animals that figured among the high weights for the big handicaps that have been amiss at some time in the year, and, though all save The Picket have raced recently, all show the effect of the strain of racing, and there is small chance that any of them again will be at his or her best this Fall or in another year.

In view of the evident fact that the career of the highest type of the American thoroughbred horse is short, extending in but few cases into the fifth year of the horse's age, comparison of American with English and French thoroughbreds has engaged the attention of horsemen. The unanimity with which practical racing men who have been racing in England and France declare that the foreign horses are better than the American, and that they race longer, is convincing. They do not agree so well on the explanation, but the conviction was expressed generally by John Huggins, Matthew M. Allen, and Matthew Byrnes, all skillful and experienced trainers in this country, and men who also have trained horses abroad, that the first reason for the difference in horses of much the same blood in countries where the climatic differences are not great, is the difference in the methods of racing and training, the American horse's usefulness on the turf being impaired by early and excessive racing. "Charley" Ballard, at one time a successful jockey on the New York tracks, who has ridden and trained abroad, went a little further, and while stating his belief that the moderate use made of the English and French horses prolonged their term of racing life, he thought that the turf courses abroad were less severe on the feet and legs of the horses than the hard earth or "dirt" tracks of America.

On the score of blood all agreed that the American turf was supplied with the best that could be procured, the tendency in that direction having been toward improvement in the very period when the practices of the American turf were shortening the career of its best products. Within ten or fifteen years more and better English thoroughbred mares and stallions have been imported to America by wealthy patrons of the turf than ever were imported by the public breeders, who made a business of stock raising, and the infusion of winning blood from the best families of the English stud book has been so general that it would be next to impossible to find a winner anywhere in the United States or Canada that does not trace directly to English blood in a few generations. In the meantime, however, the turf has grown further and further away from the type of horse that raced on year after year, and stood campaigning as did Kingston, Ben Brush, Henry of Navarre, Sir Walter, and Clifford, and Miss Woodford, Firenze, and Imp, to leave aside those animals of the "iron horse" variety such as Barnum and Logan.

According to horsemen, other than those who have raced abroad, the shortening of the race horse's career has kept pace with the increase in the number and value of the stakes for two-year-olds, and the tendency of even the greater stables owned by rich men who race for sport to make their young horses earn all that is possible by campaigning them early and late.

The horsemen in effect condemn commercialism in racing as the influence which is working evil to the breed of horse which racing supposedly is conducted to improve.

Of the differences between the conduct of racing stables in England and France and America there is no horseman better qualified to speak than Mr. Huggins, who after thirty years of experience as a trainer in America for Churchill & Johnson, A. J. Cassatt, and Pierre Lorillard, went to England nearly ten years ago and trained there successively for Mr. Lorillard, the late Lord William Beresford, and the late William C. Whitney. "The English horses are better than we have here and they race longer," Mr. Huggins asserted. "Why, where will you find a half dozen first-class old horses in America? In England there are many that race on past four and five years. The first and only reason that I can see for the difference is that horses are better used there than they are in America. There, if a trainer finds he has a good horse he does not try to win everything in sight with his two-year-old. He would not have the chance even if he wanted to, for the racing of two-year-olds is restricted by the rules of The Jockey Club. In France the government of the turf does not permit two-year old racing until late in the Summer, and in England they have no yearly racing for two-year-olds, and the big stakes are not run until the horses are well on toward three-year-old form. Then, too, they only permit the handicapping of two-year-olds after a certain date late in the season, and there is less incentive for an owner even were he inclined so, to overrace his horses.

"An influence on the English race horse begins even earlier than this, for the breaking of yearlings is better managed than in this country, and you would never see on a training ground anything like what may be seen on an American track at this season when the yearlings are being broken and tried. The better treatment of the young horses shows in them when they are ready to race, but even then a two-year-old in England will run perhaps half a dozen races in the season, while in America it is not unusual to see a colt or filly run four or five times that many races. They finish their first year of racing with something to take them on through their racing later on. The older horses are not raced anything like as hard as the similar horses would be raced here, and it is only natural that they last and retain their best qualities longer than the American horses that have to run twice as often."

Mr. Huggins was not inclined to believe that the difference between the well-cared-for turf of the English courses and the earth tracks of America had any effect on the feet and legs of the horses, though other trainers who have raced in England thought that the softer cushion of century-old turf was of benefit to race horses in relieving the shock and was less severe on them than the packed earth of the present "fast" tracks here. All agreed, too, that since the advent of the American jockey in England the English horses were tried by as much pace as is the custom here, the old-fashioned methods of waiting for a sprint at the finish having gone out of vogue after the American riders, following Tod Sloan's lead, began to win races by going out from the start.

Horsemen who have never raced in England have suggested as one other explanation for the shortened career of American race horses the rivalry among racing clubs for time records, which has brought about a vast change in the management of the earth tracks. For eight or ten years the race tracks, and especially those of the East, have been made harder and harder, the top soil being scraped off to a thin dressing on the surface with a view to permitting the making of records, and it is worthy of note that within that time every distance commonly run in races has had a new time mark set. That the horses have improved in speed within the last fifteen years is conceded by horsemen, but the improvement in the records is perhaps due in a far greater measure to the tracks than to the superiority of the horses. While fast time thus has been achieved, the horses have suffered proportionately, in the strain on their feet and legs.

In view of the idea held by all the American trainers who are familiar with English turf usages, that excessive and early racing are chiefly to blame for the breaking down of American horses, the case of Beldame, the most remarkable filly of the American turf, and one of the most remarkable that racing has ever produced in this country, was cited as an illustration, in comparison with the phenomenon of the present season in England, Pretty Polly, Major Eustace Loder's unbeaten three-year-old. Beldame, by Octagon-Bella Donna, fared more fortunately than the vast majority of American two-year-olds last season, in that she was raced much as are English two-year-olds, she having run fewer times than did Pretty Polly, which ran and won nine races, while Beldame ran but seven races, of which she won three, was second once, and third once. The judicious campaign then made with Beldame left her with full power and vigor at the end of the season, and her development into the grand three-year-old that she is must be attributed in a great measure to the fact that she had a chance which does not often come to an American two-year-old with Beldame's speed and ability to win rich stakes.

When August Belmont decided to retire temporarily from racing last Fall Beldame was not sold, but leased to Newton Bennington for the present season, and through this year has raced in Mr. Bennington's colors, though at the end of the season she is to be returned to Mr. Belmont, who will retain her for his Nursery Stud. This year Beldame, grown into a splendid filly, has raced twelve times, and has won ten races, against horses of all ages and at all distances, her only defeats having been when she was third to Irish Lad for the Metropolitan Handicap and when she was second to Hermis for the Test Handicap.

Pretty Polly in England has continued her unbeaten career and has won five races as a three-year-old, or half the number that Beldame has to her credit. Pretty Polly is by Galinule-Admiration, and is described as a rich chestnut, with a strong tint of flax in mane and tail, and standing nearly sixteen hands high. She is of blocky build, and in the eyes of Harry Stull, the painter of horse portraits, seemed a trifle punched up, though Mr. Stull declares that there is nothing in England that can beat her. She is level headed and sweet tempered, and seems actually fond of being petted by the wife of her owner. Beldame is just a shade under sixteen hands, a rich chestnut, with a powerful back and strong body, and though a filly of wonderful strength is built on light racing lines. Beldame, though good tempered, is brimming over with spirits, and is so eager to go that she generally has to be led on the track when going to the post for a race. She, too, is of English blood, her sire, Octagon, though bred by Mr. Belmont in Kentucky, being a son of Rayon d'Or, English thoroughbred, imported from France by Congressman William Scott of Pennsylvania, and his dam being the imported mare Ortegal.

NAIVE ITALIAN FIGURINES

A RECENT addition to the treasures of art at the Metropolitan Museum, one which came too late to be placed in time for the opening when the Duc de Dino armor was shown, is a large group of figurines in fayence representing Christ taken from the cross surrounded by various saints, with the Virgin Mary in the centre. It will be found in the north gallery overlooking the sculpture hall in the Fifth Avenue wing, where it occupies the central show case in a good light.

The richness of coloring attracts the eye, and the singular garments of the female saints rivet the attention. Purples and dark blues, a strong yellow that is never harsh, greens both apple-colored and turquois, browns, and pale blues are found in bold yet happy combination. The Christ, nude except for a yellow scarf about the middle, lies with closed eyes on a long coffer, and behind the coffer are ranged the figures. All the faces but one look down on Him, and on all, without exception, the painter of the statuettes has indicated tears. In the centre is a group of three figures in one piece, the Madonna supported by a female Saint and another woman with aureole close behind her on the other side. Four other figures are separately modeled and are ranged to right and left of the separate group of three. This arrangement indicates that the eight pieces forming the entire group were placed in an alcove or broad niche above an altar; against the wall, we may suppose, was a cross not of this company. What adds to the quaintness of the figures and their robes is the landscape background which forms part of each of the pieces that shows a standing figure. This background is modeled with and directly behind each figure, and consists of a hill roughly indicated by sections of green or pale yellow, like the angular rockwork often shown by the primitive painters as backgrounds of religious paintings. In only one case, that of Mary Magdalen, is there an attempt at foliage. Above her luxuriant yellow hair hangs a tree-trunk with a clumsy mass of green foliage.

The coloration and the robes, the backgrounds of rock, which recall Chinese groups in colored stone, the half-open mouths expressive of grief, the discolored cheeks to indicate tears, belong to Italian work prior to 1500. There is a date also, curiously divided on two separate pieces of pottery that fit into the head and foot of the boxlike bier or sarcophagus on which the Christ is extended. The date is 1487. Certain differences in tone in the colors of these two pieces, however, suggest that they belong to a later period than the figures themselves and were added afterward, in order to fix the real or supposed date of the group.

The naïveté of these figures is great, but the color scheme is also remarkable, not only for its variety but for the way in which the painter has separated the yellows and blues from each other by varying the combinations. The more the group is examined the more one realizes that the artist had complete control of his materials. There is no disharmony, and the coloration is broadly distributed with a master's hand. In pottery there is little opportunity for the fading of colors, so that time does not produce those charming effects of tonality we often admire in old paintings; it is therefore fair to suppose that the original painter of these figurines had a wonderful feeling for color. That this work is fayence, made at Faenza, is not likely. Such yellows as we find in it can be seen in Caffagiola ware, but groups of this complexity and importance are more likely to be met with in old Gubbio ware.

The coloring and the attitudes bear a faint resemblance to Japanese and Chinese figurines, though neither the costumes nor the patterns on the cloaks and robes are Oriental. It is as if the artist had seen Oriental pottery and the latter had not been without influence, as we see in the early attempts at porcelain in Europe how the first porcelain makers imitated Oriental ware. The unknown Saint on the left has a strong resemblance to Oriental figures, particularly to those of Japan.

Wherever made and by whom made is not of so much importance; the main thing is to have such a fine primitive feeling as the figures and faces contain, combined with such beautiful tonal colors. The white and blue of the Della Robbia reliefs and their much more clever modeling appear a trifle cold and mannered when compared with the robust but somewhat awkward modeling and deep rich tones of this group. Whence the figurines came is not stated, but it would be interesting to learn, if only to arrange a setting for them more in keeping with their devout air than a showcase. They are well worth a careful study.

HOW STRANGE!

"I NOTICE," barked The Scion, "that when the trees begin to leave, although they have their trunks with them, they remain right where they are."

"And I'll be switched," chipped in the leap year Bud, "if that should prevent us from branching out."

"Although that might be construed as a shady proceeding," rejoined The Scion, "I think the trees should not take umbrage at what promises a fine umbrageous effect."

HOW AMERICAN "BLUFF" WON PEACE CONGRESS

Promises in Three Languages to Secure Attendance Here of Interparliamentary Union.

THAT two hundred members of the Interparliamentary Union, an organization comprising representatives from the legislative bodies of every country where white men rule, save Russia and Spain, are touring the United States as guests of this Government, and will to-morrow hold the first session of the International Peace Congress in St. Louis, instead of Copenhagen, Denmark, is due solely to American "bluff," as exemplified by Richard Bartholdt, member of Congress from Missouri, and Chairman of the Congressional Committee which is charged with the entertainment of the visitors.

Mr. Bartholdt was the only representative of the United States in attendance upon the 1903 Peace Congress held in Vienna under the auspices of the union. Denmark was a candidate for this year's congress. The Government of that country had already provided for a large entertainment fund, and the citizens of Copenhagen had mapped out a tentative programme, which they felt sure would induce the delegates to accept their invitation.

"I have been a member of the union for a number of years," said Mr. Bartholdt, on the occasion of his trip to New York to welcome the delegates, "and when I went to Vienna last year it was with the intention of bringing the congress to this country if possible this year. I didn't know how the task could be accomplished, but I made up my mind to try anyway.

"When the member of the Denmark group extended Copenhagen's invitation, backed up as it was by his Government, I felt that my chances of success were decidedly remote, but would not acknowledge defeat. I listened to every promise made by the gentleman from Denmark, and when I took the floor went him one better. I had not discussed the matter of an appropriation for the purpose of entertaining the delegates should they agree to come to America before leaving for Vienna, but I promised $50,000 and a convention hall.

Pledges in Three Languages.

"I pledged Governmental recognition of their visit, and repeated the pledge in three different languages. The greatest difficulty I had to overcome was my inability to offer the use of the Capitol Building for the congress. Wherever the annual meeting has been held on the Continent, the sessions have taken place in the national legislative hall of the country honored by the congress, and the delegates thought it beneath their dignity to meet in another kind of building. I was forced to explain at length that there was a specific and inviolable rule in America prohibiting the use of the halls of Congress for any other gathering than that of Congress itself.

"I dwelt upon the fact that there was a World's Fair to be held in St. Louis, and right there I ran up against another snag. The Hon. W. Randall Cremer, member of the British Parliament, and Secretary of the English group of the union, balked. His British conservatism took alarm at the mention of the Fair, and he at once became imbued with the idea that I wished the presence of the congress to boom the show. When I had reassured him, and completed my address, the Danish representative withdrew the name of Copenhagen as a candidate for the congress, and offered a resolution fixing St. Louis for its gathering.

"After I had won my point, I awoke to the significance of the step I had taken, and more than one of the nights I spent, until I saw President Roosevelt, were sleepless. I would have found myself in an awful predicament if, when the time came, I was unable to live up to the pledges made by me, and as soon as I put foot on American soil I hastened to Washington.

"There I sought the President and placed the situation before him. I told him the importance of the union, and impressed upon him that its coming would be a great thing for the United States. I cannot begin to say how much he relieved me when he agreed with everything I said, and told me that he would lend me every assistance in securing the necessary appropriation. He was as good as his word. He mentioned the prospective conference in his annual message, and as a result of his interest Congress appropriated the necessary sum for the entertainment of the delegates.

Importance of Congress.

"There is a general disposition on the part of the public to underestimate the importance of the congress. It is the greatest power for good in the world to-day. The purpose of the Interparliamentary Union, as I understand it, is to enable responsible representatives of all nations to jointly consider questions of common concern and to blaze the way, as it were, for the cultivation of such cordial relations as will lead to the negotiation of arbitration treaties and thus preclude the possibility of armed conflicts.

"If Japanese and Russian interests had been bound together by an arbitration treaty the present war, in all its bloody horror, would have been an impossibility. We do not begin to realize in this country the loss of life which is marking the conduct of the struggle in the far East and the atrocities which take place on the battlefield. It will be years before the truth is known, if it ever comes to light.

"There is the greatest admiration among the people of foreign nations for the military system of the United States, and I am convinced that the present visit will enhance the feeling. Before their trip is ended they will have a pretty good idea of the country and its resources, and any one who does not believe that the delegates are men whose approbation is well worth winning, is far from the truth. They are, each and every one of them, the biggest kind of men in their respective countries, and the money which is to be devoted to their entertainment will be well spent."

Since the invitation to the union was extended by Mr. Bartholdt and accepted by that body, the Missouri Congressman has organized an American group which now numbers no less than 100 Representatives of Congress and United States Senators. He expects to increase the group.

The methods he used in securing the congress for St. Louis are even yet a source of amusement to his friends in that body. A number of delegates were laughing about his "American assurance" when they greeted him Tuesday morning last.

"I am afraid," said Mr. Cremer, in discussing the work done by the Congressman, "that he will want to exhibit us when he gets us to the St. Louis Fair. There is no telling what a man who takes it upon himself to make the promises he did, in bringing the union to this country, may do if he gets a good chance."

A MODERN RIP VAN WINKLE.

WHEN I returned from South America this afternoon," said a railway engineer at the Democratic Club to a friend who crossed the dining room to welcome him home, "I went to my house in West Forty-seventh Street to get a change of raiment before taking the train to Bar Harbor to join the family. My wife had left the place in charge of a caretaker. Needless to say, she had never seen me. As luck would have it, my latchkey was in my steamer trunk. The caretaker answered my ring at the bell.

"'What d'ye want?' she inquired.

"I politely informed her that I was the master of the house, and that with her permission I should like to come in and change my clothes. But sarcasm was lost on that woman. She slammed the door, and in a few moments cautiously raised the front parlor window.

"'Gwan, now,' she said, 'or I'll call the p'lice. There's a photygraf of the boss in the parlor, and you're not the man.'

"I had forgotten, for the moment, that while traveling in Brazil I found it more convenient to raise a beard than to shave. I rang the bell of the house next door. To my delight it was answered by the cook, with whom I had a speaking acquaintance.

"'Jane,' I said, 'I am Mr. Blank. Don't you know me? I am just back from a journey. Tell this woman who I am, please, so that I can get in.'

"But Jane said she did not know me from Adam. 'Your voice sounds like Mr. Blank's,' she said, 'but you look no more like him than I do.'

"I talked with that caretaker for half an hour. The express company brought up my traps from the steamer. I showed her my initials on the trunks. It would not work. Finally a gleam of intelligence shot through the caretaker's mind. She actually smiled.

"'Why don't ye go to the p'lice station?' she asked.

"'Happy thought. To the station house I walked, five blocks away. But I was as much a stranger to the Sergeant as I was to anybody else. Fortunately the patrolman who covered my beat at night, and with whom I was on pretty good terms, was asleep up stairs. He was sent for, and greeted me cordially, in spite of the beard. I was actually glad to shake hands with him.

"'Well, it has changed you some,' he said when I told him my story. 'Shouldn't have known you myself in the dark.'

"He went around to the house with me, and the caretaker weakened. She knew the policeman all right. Once in possession I hiked to a barber and disposed of that South American beard. Otherwise, I believe, even you would have mistaken me for a stranger. But if that caretaker wants a recommendation from me as a woman of caution and diplomacy she can have it."

NO PIPE SMOKERS FOR HIM.

THE most aristocratic gang of diggers, excavators, and stone heavers I ever saw was in an up-State town the other day," said the observant man. "Nearly every man, from the boss down to the water boy—who was a lusty chap of about twenty with one arm—puffed away at a big, black cigar while hustling on the job. Some of the cigars were five-inchers, and others were snipes clinched between the teeth. Occasionally an olive-skinned fellow would straighten his back and lift up his hand; thereupon the water boy would hasten to a box about the size of a herring crate and run with a fine stogie to the worker. The smokee end was snipped in a jiffy, the boy snapped a match, and, presto! the man was back at the job, puffing away as happy as a clam, and evidently contented with life as he found it in a hole in the ground.

"When the boss eased around toward my place of observation I touched his arm and said:

"'Pardon me for troubling you, but your gang is the most exclusive set of aristocratic workmen I ever saw. This is quite the smart set among toiling laborers. Not a pipe smoker in the lot.'

"'Aristocratic nothing. It's a matter of money on this job. I'm after money. Takes time to dump the ashes out of a pipe, load up, and fire the old thing. The stogie is a cheap and glorious thing to the man who has a gang like mine. No time lost firing up, see? A man doesn't smoke so many cigars in a day after all. He can't. Strongest brand I could get from Wheeling. Come in crates like herrings. The fellows average about three of those big lunkers a day. Three for a nickel is not bad. I'd discharge a pipe smoker in a twinkle. He's too rich for my job, see? What about the non-smokers? There is one here and there. Oh, he sells his daily allowance to his mates. No butts lyin' about? They are kept for the evening siesta. Great scheme this of mine. Work and smoke cigars, and the best of it they are proud when folks mention the thing. There is a richness about the cigar the pipe does not have after all, see?'"

THE FIGHT AGAINST TRACHOMA

What the Department of Health Has Done in Stamping Out the Disease Among Children of the Public Schools.

THE authorities of a great city have never carried on a more persistent and picturesque fight against disease than that of the New York Department of Health against trachoma, that dangerous disease of the eye from which the school children of the city have long suffered. A year or so ago trachoma was epidemic in the schools. A careful examination showed that more than 10 per cent. of the children enrolled were suffering from it. To-day the disease is well under control, and another year of well-directed effort will reduce the number of cases to a minimum.

Although the months when the schools are in session give the surgeons who are fighting the disease greater opportunity, the work has been continued steadily all Summer at the new Trachoma Hospital in Harlem and at the Board of Health pavilion on the grounds of the Gouverneur Hospital on the east side. The schools open to-morrow, and a score of Inspectors will go from building to building examining the eyes of every child. Those found to be suffering from the disease will be sent out of school until they begin treatment. They may go to their own physicians or the Board of Health will treat them and supply medicines without cost. Necessary operations will also be undertaken free of charge in cases where the parents give their consent.

The first trachoma hospital of the Board of Health was established in December, 1902, in the east wing of the old Gouverneur Hospital on the East River. Thousands of children were successfully operated on, and more than 15,000 received medical treatment before the department was ousted when the reconstruction of the hospital began. By this time the disease was no longer epidemic among the Jewish children of the lower east side.

The Italian youngsters of Harlem, however, were nearly as badly off as the Jews were when the fight for clear eyes began. They could not afford the carfare for the long trip to Gouverneur, and when a new hospital became necessary a location in their section was decided upon. A roomy private dwelling on the corner of East One Hundred and Eighteenth Street and Pleasant Avenue was secured and formally opened by Commissioner Thomas Darlington last March. It was placed in charge of Dr. H. W. Wootton of 35 West Forty-fifth Street, the department's expert in diseases of the eye. In the six months in which the hospital has been open 530 cases have been operated on successfully, and more than 18,000 treatments have been given.

Though there is nothing to make the children come to the hospital with their ailing eyes when school is not in session, there has been a steady stream of patients all Summer. The fact that there was no penalty attached to letting the disease run—such as losing one's seat in school—has not kept the children away.

Marching Up to the Doctor.

The mornings at the trachoma hospital are given over to the treatment of cases on which operations are not necessary or where permission to operate is refused through the ignorance of parents. At 9 o'clock the long, wiggling line of boys and girls—mostly Jewish or Italian—forms in the two rooms which comprise the outdoor clinic. Here and there a mother is in line, perhaps to have her own eyes treated, more likely to see her baby through the ordeal. While the hospital is primarily for school children, the director realizes the uselessness of attempting to cure the children without treating the mother if she is a trachoma sufferer.

As they have all visited the clinic before, there is no nervousness except on the part of the very young patients. The treatment is unpleasant, but the hurt does not last long, and it "ain't as worse as a lickin'," as one youngster declared when a TIMES reporter questioned him about it. They march up bravely before the doctor, who is waiting for them with a greenish pencil of sulphate of copper, which is the caustic found most effective for the burning-out process in non-operative cases.

A nurse is there to hold the head firmly while the doctor rolls back the lids. He touches them with the caustic, burning away the granulations. It hurts in spite of the cocaine with which the eyes have previously been treated, but most of the children show their nerve and refuse to cry before their fellows who are waiting.

An exception in Ruth, a four-year-old tot, with long golden curls, a regular little beauty. She approaches the operation stool with a smile that positively beams.

She has made the same declaration every morning for a couple of weeks. The nurse picks her up, taking care to secure a firm hold, the doctor leans over, and then the trouble begins. Long before he has touched her, in spite of her boast that she was not going to cry, she howls and shrieks and kicks as though she were being murdered by inches. The doctor's skillful fingers run the caustic under her lids, and the ordeal is over for another day.

As soon as they let her up she is all smiles again.

"I cried 'cause it hurted," she declares, "but I won't cry next time." She will, though.

A Lingering Treatment.

The burning-out treatment is a lingering one. The children have to come every day for several weeks and then every other day for a couple of months and then every week for the rest of the year. There are reactions and relapses which prolong the treatment. These are reasons which make operations preferable.

On the second floor of the trachoma hospital are two wards holding ten or twelve brass cots. Five of them are filled with patients operated on the day before, and the other five are for the youngsters who will come under the knife that afternoon. The rooms are pleasant and well lighted and the bunch of five who are about to be sent away are amusing themselves in the convalescent ward.

The operation for trachoma as practiced by the city doctors is not a complicated one. They are experts at it, and they should be after the wholesale experience they have had. Dr. A. R. Dumock, who now has charge of the operations, has performed no less than 3,000, and with a dozen or so exceptions the first operation has been successful in all cases.

Every effort is made to make the trial as easy for the youngsters as possible. They come to the hospital at noon on the day of the operation. They spend a pleasant hour with books and games. As the time approaches one of the nurses gives them a "jolly" about their never feeling it—and, indeed, they seldom suffer any pain—and tells them how much better their eyes will be afterward.

When the time for the first operation arrives the child is taken to the second floor. In a room set aside for the purpose, which contains nothing alarming in the way of knives or operating tables, the youngster is treated to laughing gas. Ether is disagreeable to take, but with laughing gas preparation the child knows nothing about it. When he has passed into unconsciousness he is carried into the operating room.

The instruments are tiny things, and the surgeon handles them with great rapidity. The eyelids are pulled back with a pair of forceps, and with an instrument which consists of a pair of tiny grooved rollers the yellowish-red, semi-transparent bodies which have formed and which cause the trouble are torn away. The rollers exert a verticle pressure without too much stripping, and get hold of the deepest follicles. The eyes are bandaged tightly and the patient put to bed. As soon as he comes out of the ether the bandages are taken off and cold applications put on. Generally by the following morning the swelling has so far receded that the child can use his eyes, and on the evening of the second day he is sent home. For two weeks he returns to the hospital every day for treatment, and then for a month or so at weekly intervals until the doctor is certain that no trace of trachoma remains.

The Harlem youngsters who have been operated on are usually quite boastful about it. Their contempt for those who are afraid to undergo an operation and elect the longer non-operative treatment is as sincere as it is amusing.

Importance of the Work.

If trachoma is not treated in time it grows into a more serious disease, which the doctors call pammus. The follicles disappear, the membrane shrinks, the cornea is covered with a hazy film, blood vessels appear, the lashes turn in, and sight is finally lost. They are treating two cases of pammus at the hospital at the present time. Neither boy could see a thing when brought in, and they could barely distinguish between light and darkness. They have undergone one operation and can now distinguish objects at a distance of four or five feet. A second operation will restore their sight still further, and the treatment which will follow promises to clear their vision entirely.

The two youngsters are really sorry they are getting well. Never have they had such meals as they enjoy at the city hospital table. They are actually growing fat. One of them is a musician, the other something of an acrobat, and they give performances for the amusement of the trachoma sufferers every afternoon. When they do not obey the nurses there is one threat that always brings them to time.

"Very well, then," the head nurse says, "we will send you home this afternoon."

They begin instantly to beg for forgiveness and are model patients for the next twenty-four hours. The authorities will probably have trouble discharging them. It would not be the first time. When the hospital occupied the east wing of old Gouverneur Hospital there was one youth who became so attached to the hospital after a long and painful treatment that he would not go home. They put him in the street, but when night came he slipped back into the ward and crawled into his old cot, clothes and all. It was several days before they finally got rid of him.

At the up-town hospital there is one little girl who is determined to be a nurse. She was operated on successfully and played at being nurse while recovering. Now she returns every morning and holds the heads of the other children when the regular nurse has other duties.

Found in Public Baths.

For the past few weeks Inspectors have been dragging the public baths in the upper part of the city for trachoma. About 20 per cent. of the children were found to be suffering from trachoma or the more mild conjunctivitis. The trachoma sufferers were advised to report at the hospital for treatment.

"The baths themselves are not a source of infection," said Dr. Wootton, "for the water is clean enough. Very wisely the city decided not to furnish towels, which would have been dangerous. The children, however, who bring towels from home often loan them to less provident youngsters. One towel sometimes does for three or four, and they wipe out their eyes first of all. If one of the four has trachoma the disease is very likely to be communicated to the others.

"We had no trouble making examinations at the baths, though our Inspectors were without authority. The New York child is becoming used to health examinations. He comes up for vaccination once in so often; he is thoroughly gone over by the doctors of the fresh-air societies which send children to the country; he gets another overhauling from the Inspectors of the Department of Health when school begins. The fear of being operated on for trachoma is rapidly passing away. The children know others who have been through the ordeal. It is as it was at the old swimming pool. The boy who gets into the water first insists that it is warm, even if his chattering teeth give the statement the lie. The child who has been through a trachoma operation insists that it did not hurt, at least that it did not hurt much, and that only babies would be afraid of it.

"As soon as the schools open we will start a noon clinic at the Department of Health headquarters, Fifty-fifth Street and Sixth Avenue. All doubtful cases will be sent there for examination. If they have trachoma they will not be allowed to return to school until they have commenced treatment. We anticipate a great rush of sufferers the first few weeks, and the trachoma hospital will have to work overtime. There is no doubt, however, that we are making progress against the disease. The number of cases is considerably less, and they are becoming more mild. That is due to the fact that we get hold of the children before the disease has time to develop."

The doctors and nurses engaged in the trachoma fight have suffered somewhat. Six of the nurses and three of the doctors have contracted the disease. It is almost impossible to keep from touching the eyes in some thoughtless moment, and a single touch, if there is any infection on the fingers, is enough to bring on the disease.

The nurses and two of the doctors have been successfully operated on. The chief operator, however, is still suffering from the disease. His fellows laughingly declare that he thinks no one can operate as well as himself and that he is trying to figure out a way of operating on his own eyes.

Just before school closed in the Summer the children in a few buildings were inspected for defective eyesight. The distance test alone was used and 30 per cent. of the children were found to have defective sight. As soon as school is well under way a more extended test will be made. Children who need glasses will be advised to visit an oculist. The department simply acts in an advisory capacity. Furnishing glasses to children who need them is out of the question, owing to the expense. East siders especially are not inclined to be careful of anything which they get for nothing. If the department furnished glasses the children could be counted on to break them on an average of once a week. If their parents have to purchase them, the youngsters will take care of them or the parents will know the reason why.

GILLETTE'S LITTLE SLIP.

WILLIAM GILLETTE was telling a story about the South one night not very long ago to an interested circle of friends in the Lambs Club. He was extolling the ingenuousness of the natives, setting the scene of his story in an ordinary day coach of a train bound from Atlanta to Charleston.

"In the seat behind us sat a mighty pretty girl, whose gorgeous raiment failed to hide the fact that she came from 'way back' in the mountains," the actor said. "My friend and I were both much absorbed in the beauty of the scenery, the hills in the distance calling forth many expressions of admiration from us.

"'I reckon you all are from the lowlan's,' the girl behind calmly ventured, leaning her arms on the back of our seat and smiling sociably at us. 'It's just the other way with me. I've lived all my life up back in the mountains, and I just dote on comin' down into the lowlan's.'

"After thus breaking the ice she didn't stop until she had told us that her father had been killed in the civil war; that a cannon the 'Yarks' had abandoned stood right in front of their door; that they had three cows, the youngest of which had just weaned her first offspring; that the chickens, eighteen in number, weren't 'layin' the way they orter,' and that she was nineteen years old, 'goin' on twenty.'"

"Last Summer," answered the unsuspecting narrator.

"You say the girl was nineteen years old," the other continued.

"Well," replied Gillette, "she told us all she knew, and I guess a little more. Down there, you know, they don't think anything of telling their age, and—"

"I understand that, the other interrupted, "but can you reconcile the fact of her father's having been killed in the civil war and the girl's being nineteen more than thirty-five years later?"

The howls of laughter which followed this pertinent query were stopped by the actor's remarking impressively: "I said the young lady may have told more than she knew. But as regards that particular slip I'll take the blame myself."

ONE BORN EVERY MINUTE.

THIS story of elaborate enterprise and abused confidence comes from Jersey and is vouched for by commuters in the region about Union.

A farmer, who may be called for convenience Timothy Hay, was driving along near the railway station when he observed a well-dressed man very busy with his stick poking about in the roadway (which is rocky at that place) turning over a stone here and scratching in the gravel there, and every now and then bending down to look intently at the ground. The man was so absorbed in his singular occupation that he did not appear to observe the farmer, and Mr. Hay's curiosity was aroused. He climbed down from his wagon and asked the stranger if he could render him any assistance. The stranger said at first that he feared not—and kept on prodding with his stick. Mr. Hay, however, continuing to stand by and watch the proceedings, the other presently looked up.

"The fact is," he said, "I lost a diamond ring somewhere about here, not now. It is a very valuable ring, and I've spent an hour already trying to find it, but I've got to catch a train in ten minutes, and if you will help me look I'll be much obliged."

The farmer joined in the search. Presently there was the sound of the whistle of an approaching engine. The stranger stopped.

"That's my train," he said. "I've got to run for it. I'm sure I lost the ring somewhere between this point and about twenty yards back. It's worth $500, and I'll be glad to pay $100 reward to anybody who returns it to me. Here's my card with my address. I don't think there's much chance, but if you should happen to find the ring or hear of anybody finding it drop me a line."

And the stranger made a dash for the train, which was just pulling into the station a hundred yards off. The farmer saw him swing aboard the last car, and then settled down to look for the ring. He spent the rest of the day at it—it was about noon when he had first seen the stranger—and it was good and dark before he gave over the search. He came next day, and looked again very carefully, and every time he drove that way for a week he got down and looked about more or less. He never found anything like a ring.

It was three weeks afterward, perhaps, (that was only a few days ago,) and Hay had pretty much forgotten all about the stranger and his ring, when as he was standing near his barn watering his horses a tramp came up—a particularly disreputable-looking tramp—and asked for something to eat. Mr. Hay told him gruffly to "git out," but the man sidled up to him and whispered:

He drew a very dirty hand from within his shirt and displayed what appeared to be a diamond ring.

"What are you doing with that; did'ye steal it?" asked Hay, sharply.

"I foun' it," said the tramp.

"Git away with your old glass," said Mr. Hay.

"Sure, boss, I did fin' it," the tramp insisted, "jus' now down the road a piece not fur from the railroad depot, what the road's full of rocks. I dunno what it's wuth, but I thought you might give me somethin' fur it."

At the mention of the road near the station, Mr. Hay started, but he concealed his agitation.

"I don't go in for them kind o' things," he said, "and I don't know much about 'em, but that there ring don't look to me valyable. Most likely if you foun' it, which I don't believe, it's jus' plain glass. But I'll chance it to give you dinner for it."

"Not on yer life yer don't," said the tramp, and made a move to depart.

"Lemme look at the thing again," said Hay.

The tramp held out his hand cautiously.

"I'll give you $2.50 for it," said Hay.

The tramp told him roughly that he wasn't throwing diamonds away, and the upshot of the matter after much talking was that the farmer agreed to give $1.50 for the ring, reflecting within himself that he would get the credit of honesty and clear $50, anyway, on the reward the stranger had mentioned.

He wrote at once to the name and address which had been given him to announce the finding of the ring, and waited with confidence for the result. When, in a couple of days, the letter came back marked "Person Unknown," Hay got uneasy and went to a local jeweler to have the ring valued. Previously he had said nothing to anybody, cherishing his luck in secret. When the jeweler said that the ring was worth "about 88 cents," the victim broke out into loud lamentations and told his story. His neighbors now greet his every appearance with a chorus of hoots and jeers.

Success.

Mr. Cutter—What do you wear when you wish to attract attention on the beach?

Miss Flutter—Oh, nothing much.

A MODEL BOATHOUSE

Picturesque and Comfortable Quarters of the Crescent Athletic Club Aquatic Enthusiasts.

THERE was opened yesterday—with a regatta in the afternoon and a dance in the evening—a boathouse on the Brooklyn side of the Lower Bay the fame of which has already swept over the country among aquatic men as perhaps the crack boathouse of America. If it is not quite that, amateur oarsmen concede it is very nearly the best ever built. The Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn, which now is also just starting work on the foundations of its new city house, has erected it to take the place of its old and historic boathouse, burned to the water's edge last February, on the night of the great Baltimore fire.

The new boathouse stands on piles out in the Lower Bay at the foot of Eighty-third Street, across the road from the Crescents' country house and almost opposite it. It is not precisely on the site of the old boathouse, but a few feet to the north. Some rods beyond to the north is the promontory of Owl's Head, the extreme westerly point of Long Island. The house joins to the pier at which the Sea Gate and Crescent steamboats from the Battery land. Across this pier are the landing stages, and in front of them is a small harbor formed by a breakwater.

Revival of Aquatics.

Aquatics have had a sudden and a great revival in this club. Water sports had been dead for many years until the Summer of 1903, when a new interest sprang up. The burning of the old boathouse crystallized this. At once the hands of the Crescent management went down into the club's treasury, and, despite the financial obligations of building the big new city house, appropriated $25,000 for his new boathouse and a new flotilla of boats. All the old boats had been destroyed in the fire.

The boathouse was to have been completed on July 4. But while enough of it has been finished to permit of much rowing all the latter end of the Summer, the finishing touches have only just been added. The room covers the entire floor, and there is mechanism in place so that in less than half an hour the rowing craft can be hoisted up the ceiling, forming one of the prettiest and largest ballrooms about New York. This is to be the Crescents' official dancing place, and dances are to be the great features of each Summer's programme from now on.

On each floor are great washrooms and shower baths. Literally an army can be accommodated in this new building.

Ample Accommodations.

A thousand men can easily be cared for at one time, in every direction save that of eatables, drinkables, and smokables, and for these the clubhouse itself, only a few yards across the Shore Road, has ample provisions.

The second floor has the 502 lockers, already mentioned; the third floor, the dormitory. The fourth floor (under the roof) is yet unfinished, and what use it will be put to has not as yet been decided. On each of these three upper floors the tower corners have been finished into sleeping rooms that will be the envy of all womankind. For these rooms are literally upon the water, and they will be famous resting places for hot Summer nights. There is sure to be a huge demand for them, and in accordance with the club's traditions the choice of them will probably be auctioned off to the highest bidder next Spring.

Each floor has splendid broad verandas, facing south and west. There are six of these verandas in all. Those over the third or dormitory floor are sheltered by the towers on the corners, and men may sit there in the heat of Summer nights, pleasantly negligée, with no possibility of feminine intrusion. The pale green of the exterior is on the lower floors and in the fourteen great columns on the front and the water side that extend up two stories. The towers, roof, and upper stories are the pale brown.

The Boating Element.

Over 200 men make up the active boating element of the club. The other sports draw fully a thousand more men. The boating set are men actively engaged in business, and have no time to train for crews or formal rowing. Hence the Crescent never enters nowadays into active rowing competitions. But its individual record is strong.

The leaders of the athletic interest in the club to-day are made up of Charles J. McDermott, Edgar J. Williams, Cornelius Van Brunt, Frank Torrey, and Louis Doyle. The new fleet is composed of two eight-oared barges, three four-oared racing gigs, eight single and two double gigs, a St. Lawrence skiff, and a seventeen-foot pleasure boat. This equipment is to be greatly added to this year. At the moment it does fairly well.

CRESCENT ATHLETIC CLUB'S NEW BOAT HOUSE.

Centre of Athletics.

It is a boathouse, and yet much more. In a sense it is a special club building for all the athletic interests. On the upper floors there are dormitories that will accommodate a hundred to two hundred men, besides at least a dozen private sleeping rooms. No club member now o' Summers will have to travel back to town late at night because he cannot be accommodated at the club. Here also will be the lockers for the athletes of the club—for the golf, tennis, lacrosse, baseball men as well as the rowing enthusiasts. Five hundred and two lockers have already been put into place and are fast being assigned. All the athletes will repair here instead of having to occupy uncomfortable quarters in the country house.

Architecturally the new boathouse is an imposing edifice. It is entirely of wood, of course, of pale brown and a very pale green that is just a tint off white. There are four stories, and the roof is "pitched," with a tower in the centre, a tower at either corner, and "eyebrow" windows in the roof between these towers.

The first floor is the boatroom, where the new fleet is now installed. This boatbuilding is so complete, however, that the delay was worth while.

GEORGE FIRST AND LAST.

MRS. N—— is the teacher of the infant class in one of the best known Sunday schools in the City of Washington. Among her numerous scholars is her own small son, who has the greatest respect and love for the memory of that illustrious man whom all loyal Americans love and venerate—George Washington.

On the Fourth John was up bright and early, and, between firing off "crackers," exploding bombs, and throwing torpedoes on the ground to hear the noise they made, besieged his mother to tell him of the first President of the United States, being particularly interested in the tales of him as a great soldier.

The Sunday following Independence Day the Sunday school lesson was about Paul. Mrs. N—— laid special stress on the fact that Paul was a soldier of the Lord, ever ready to fight when duty called. When she thought the lesson had been fully understood by all the small tots present, she said:

"If any of you can tell me the name of the brave soldier I have been telling you about, raise his hand."

The silence in the room could be felt. The little ones gazed at "teacher," but did not offer to answer her question. Finally her son caused her heart to swell with pride by raising his hand.

"Speak loudly, John," she said, "so we can all hear."

RAH! RAHS! OF THE OLDEN DAYS.

To Shout or Not to Shout, the Question Now at 'Varsity Games.

IS THE college "rah-rah boy," so famous in the comic press and on the variety stage, in danger of becoming an extinct species? The present controversy between Harvard and Princeton, in which Yale has taken sides with Harvard against the practice of "excessive" cheering, would seem to indicate that there is a strong probability of it, at least. But the undergraduate tendency for more "gentlemanly" sport has not been without severe criticism from alumni, Yale graduates being especially severe in their criticism of their Alma Mater for her stand against cheering.

The subject came up for discussion the other evening at the University Club between a couple of Yale "old grads," and a young New Yorker who is a junior in the university. The cheering of the Princeton contingency at the last game with Yale was unfavorably criticised by the younger man. One of the older men had caught on the university baseball team in the early eighties, and he unbosomed himself thus:

"You fellows who play the game in the present days of high civilization don't have any idea of what we old-timers were up against," he said. "You object to a little howling on the side lines. In the good old days the cheers were frequently reinforced with vegetables and overripe eggs, and when these commodities were lacking small stones were sometimes used.

"Why, on occasions we had to pay ten men on the team—one to stand behind the catcher and prevent the opposition rooters from kicking him at critical moments. I remember one time when a bat was gently insinuated between my legs as I stepped forward to make a throw to second base. It looked like a sure 'out' for us, but I took a header over the home plate, and the runner made third. Although I offered to lick all the men around me, they merely hooted me in a highly delighted manner, and for some reason the umpire didn't see the bat play, so the runner stayed on third.

"The rule which keeps everybody not engaged in the game back thirty feet from the base lines wasn't in force then, either, and the opposition rooters always made it a point to crowd up so close that I had to get up under the bat in order to see first base at all, and a throw to third was like a leap in the dark. And the cheering! Well, in one game I know of each side had three brass bands on the field, and there was a megaphone chorus or so to help them out. Every student with any college pride was expected to yell until he couldn't talk above a whisper.

"Of course, I don't like to criticise my Alma Mater, but this new-fangled objection to cheering doesn't look very favorable to her. Yale never kicked about the cheering until Princeton beat her. Perhaps if she would give more time to teaching her team to play ball and less to the ethics of the other side's cheers she would win more games, which I judge is what she plays for."

"But," sad a Harvard man, who had been an interested listener, "don't you think that the practice of hooting at the opposition team, aside from such rowdyish actions as you describe, is ungentlemanly, to say the least! And don't you think that there is more sport—real sport—in the more quiet game, as played under the present régime?"

"No, I can't say that I do," was the reply. "It's the do-or-die kind of playing that develops manliness, and enthusiasm is a natural accompaniment of it. You can't play good baseball or football on the 'After you, my dear Alphonse' plan. They say that the battle of Waterloo was won on the football field at Eton, and if it was I don't believe there was any suppression of cheering there. Of course I'm not defending for a minute any acts of rowdyism, and I think the rule which keeps the crowd back from the base lines a most excellent one. But when it comes to yelling—let 'em yell! It does a team good to hear it, and it does a college good to get up enough enthusiasm to do it properly."

The agitation against Princeton's style of cheering, which will probably be resumed when the universities reopen in the Fall, was brought to a head by the last Harvard-Princeton game. Harvard was well ahead until the last half of the last inning, when Princeton won in a grand batting rally, while every supporter of the orange and black stood up in his seat and yelled as if possessed. Yale was beaten not long afterward in a similar rally in the seventh inning. Shortly after the Harvard game The Harvard Crimson, the university's daily paper, came out with an editorial in which Princeton was charged with cheering to "rattle" the Harvard team, and was asked to explain her position.

"The Princetonian, the Princeton daily, answered with a general denial, and acknowledged no wrong on the part of the Princeton rooters. Soon after Yale's defeat the Yale Alumni Weekly took up the matter also, and in a manner similar to The Crimson's. The Alumni was severely taken to task not long since by "Dutch" Carter, an old Yale pitcher. Mr. Carter objected to the "howl," as he called it, which Yale had made in the matter in no uncertain terms. He exhorted the university to put good ball players in the field and let the cheering of opponents alone.

The last Yale-Harvard game on the Polo Grounds in this city is cited by the opponents of the new noiseless game as an example of the "goody-goody" style of playing. There were few spectators present, and the cheering consisted of two or three scattered efforts.

"It made me tired to hear it," said a Yale alumnus, speaking of the game. "It seemed almost an insult to the old bullfrog chorus to hear it given in the apologizing way that seems to be becoming fashionable. The Harvard 'Rahs' weren't much better, and the whole contest was about as exciting as the meeting of a sewing circle."

At Yale there was much discussion of the cheering question last year, and undergraduate sentiment seemed to be pretty well divided. The apparent tendency to slight the cheering caused much unfavorable comment, and it is entirely possible that the storm of criticism which The Alumni Weekly evoked by its editorial on the subject will result in a return to the more lusty expression of college enthusiasm of former days.

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

MISS CYNTHIA ROCHE

MISS ROSAMOND STREET

MISS BARCLAY

THE Newport season has ended. The word "Finis" has been written. Is it a question of "the King is dead—long live the King"? Hardly. For two years society has been in a period of transition. Each Newport Summer accentuates the changes. New York society is one thing; Newport society another. To-day it is the happy hunting ground, this historic island in the Providence Plantations, of the climber and the seeker for social preferment. Many peris look longingly through the gates which are not ajar for them. But you never know who is to be taken up, and this year more than any other Newport has been a bouilabaisse. Thackeray has called this dish a "hotch potch of all sorts of fishes," and this is true and a perfect definition. That, too, without any possible allusion to a renowned and notable and most respected family which bears a piscatorial name. Apropos of this the one and only artistic entertainment on generous lines at Newport this season was the scarlet ball given by Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish at the Crossways. It was a poetic harvest home, and the popples and the wheat and the garlands of early russet Autumn leaves and the song "Good-bye, Summer"—a little mediocre and cheap and somewhat tinsel as to sentiment—were excellent in their way. At least, there was something original.

But the social prestige of Newport has been trampled underfoot as the peasants thrash out the blood of the grape in vintage time in France. What has been the Newport season? Where have been the entertainments? Society is hopelessly divided into sets. For some of those bearing old and illustrious names, who have had the prestige of position for a century at least, this has been a protection. We choose our own friends, and we owe our relatives to the dispensation of Providence—and this time with a reverent capital.

When one remembers the Newport of twenty years ago, with its select and exclusive set, and its distinguished guests from abroad, and its delicious simplicity and its utter refinement—in the days when there was a leader of New York society—and contrasts it with this fifth Summer of the twentieth century, the comparison is truly odious. The best people kept to themselves, surrounded themselves with a small circle, entertained notabilities, and in their lists of guests selected the most amusing and the most eligible. Some of these hostesses had the prestige of family whose fame is historic and has been associated with Newport for generations. During the Summer, quite independent of the striving multitude, such hostesses as Mrs. George Peabody Wetmore, Mrs. Astor, Mrs. Perry Belmont, Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Mrs. James P. Kernochan, Mrs. Henry A. C. Taylor, and Mrs. Shaw-Safe, representing the Gammells of Providence, and a few others gave charming entertainments. Mrs. Ogden Mills is comparatively new to Newport, although her twin daughters were christened there about—well, say about a score of years ago—and the Wilsons, the Bargers, and others again come in comparative succession. But the great functions of the Summer were given by Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish—worthy of a first place in the first rank, but not an old Newport resident—Mrs. William B. Leeds, Mrs. Edward R. Thomas, Mrs. Pembroke Jones, Mrs. Roekler, who was the wife of Gould Brokaw; the Brugueires, who are no relation to the old New York Brugeres, but California people; the Carters, the Wideners, the Coogans, the Stewart Barneys, and so on.

There is a question for the coming Winter season in town. There will be no assembly or general entertainment. This Summer Mrs. Astor, who succeeded Mrs. August Belmont, Sr., as a leader of New York society, but who, with all her tact and savoir faire, has never been able to give the same éclat to either Newport or New York, is weary of the task. Mrs. Astor has had a very difficult problem to solve. Society is much larger and much more general that it was fifteen or twenty years ago. To-day she, alone among the older generation, stands as the representative doyenne, and an invitation to her house certainly bears a cachet. This Summer she has given three dinners. Perhaps she may give a ball during the Winter. It has been her custom, and it is the only assemblage to which society comes, as it were, en masse.

Many of the new hostesses did not have the apparent approval of the older set at Newport. What will it be in town this Winter?

There have been only a few scandals at Newport. One was most unfortunate. There seems to be, in the case of another a very curious fatality in one family in the choice of servants. Why in the rush to gain a little éclat in having English servants some people will take butlers and valets from New York intelligence offices, many of which are themselves deceived by bogus references, is a question. The Townsend Burden robbery a few years ago was the work of English servants. The references were presented and not verified. Perhaps Americans have had the experience of receiving letters of introduction from English friends presenting detrimentals, and have been so accustomed to this method of treatment that they hardly think it worth while to look into the character of their servants. The main idea is that footmen should match in size and be presentable, and that butlers should be silver-haired and have the look of old family retainers.

It was the experience of one family years ago to be futilely attacked by anonymous letters by a servant, until the master of the house, discovering many thefts, traced other misdemeanors, discovered the culprit, and had him arrested, tried, and convicted. And yet one of the Newport causes célebres of the year hinges on a repetition of the same story. If the Newport householders would only watch carefully the conduct of their servants they would perhaps be a little more secure. There is more than one fence in Providence; there are a few in Boston, and there is said to be at least one receiver of stolen goods at the city by the sea. However, it is well known that there is a gaming establishment for servants just off Bellevue Avenue, and that it is the resort of all kinds of characters. There has been more than one robbery in Newport this Summer.

To matters more personal and cheerful. The tableaux and the Horse Show at Newport were the last public functions of consequence. Miss Rosamond Street, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Street and the niece of Mrs. Levi P. Morton, took part in the first, and her beauty made quite a sensation. In the Horse Show, Miss Cynthia Roche, the daughter of Mrs. Burke Roche was ever notable and divided the attention of the audience with Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt, Miss Eleanor Lewis of Philadelphia, and the ever-radiant Miss Alice Roosevelt. At Southampton the Misses Barclay have been among the most admired of the younger set. They are daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Barclay. The oldest daughter is now Mrs. J. Stevens Ulman, and the two younger daughters are Miss Gertrude and Miss Mildred, the latter of whom makes her début this Winter. She is of a Spanish type and a striking-looking girl.

It has been otherwise rather a quiet week. The Baltusrol tournament was interesting to golfers and society and the reception, Friday, was quite a delightful event so early in the year. The story of the commencement of the Lenox season is told elsewhere. For a few weeks the Berkshires will be notable for a dignified gayety. There will be a horse show, hunts, and other outdoor diversions, and many house parties. At present there are quite a number of prominent visitors in this country from England and elsewhere. The Earl of Dartmouth is familiar on account on the one hand of his being a relative of the founder of Dartmouth College, and then again because of his being a descendant of Elizabeth Washington, and thus more or less endeared to the American people. The Archbishop of Canterbury will be in New York within a fortnight. He has enjoyed himself immensely in Canada. He has had almost as constant companions Bishop Potter, who reverently kissed his hand, in the most High Church fashion, on his arrival, and J. Pierpont Morgan. The financier was in his element a few days ago when he drove up Fifth Avenue riding between Bishop Potter and the Archbishop of Canterbury. The visit of the Prince Adalbert is still in the balance. William Waldorf Astor is in New York for a few days. Capt. Arthur Hill, one of the most delightful of recent visitors, has sailed for England. It was his mother, Lady Hill, who composed the famous song "In the Gloaming." Whether this entitles him to much gratitude or not, is a question with the music loving community.

This week everything will be in transitu. It is the flitting time. As each week has had its clandestine wedding, perhaps a sensation of that kind is in store for society. One of the arranged weddings for September is that of Perry Tiffany and Miss Olive Thompson, the daughter of Mrs. J. Hoffman Thompson of Newark. Mr. and Mrs. Perry Tiffany will go for a long trip abroad. Lakewood will begin its season next week, and already there is a nucleus of a circle gathering at the Hot Springs of Virginia. The fair for the Nassau Asylum, of which mention has already been made, will take place on Sept. 24. It will be held at Harbour Hill, Roslyn, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay. Mrs. Mackay is one of the patronesses, and is much interested in the work.

The wedding of Miss Mabel Stebbins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Stebbins, and Capt. James Brady Mitchell of the United States Army Corps, will take place at North Hatley, Canada, Oct. 1. North Hatley has been the abiding place of many New Yorkers this Summer. And a favorite Canadian retreat is Point a Pic. Murray Bay has also had its New York colony. The wedding of Miss Stebbins and Capt. Mitchell will bring together all of these elements, winding up the Canadian season at these resorts. Miss Stebbins is a niece of Mrs. Honorine Vail.

CLUBMEN are very much interested at the opening of the theatrical season at the possibilities of something new in the sartorial line as exhibited by leading actors, especially those from England or those who have been in the hands of an English tailor. John Drew, as a member of several exclusive clubs, dresses very well both on and off the stage. He is extremely conservative, so there is nothing startlingly new in his clothes this season. There is a return to trousers which are not so loose as were those of last Winter. The frock coats fit snugly to the figure and the lounge suits are of homespun.

George Grossmith, Jr., and his fellow-players, however, have brought the extreme styles over this Autumn. Mr. Grossmith's hats are always a revelation, but are a little bit too pronounced to be copied. When at Newport, as the guest of James J. Van Alen, he wore his favorite panama. In the play at Daly's he has a brown park suit of rough cloth which, were it in any other shade, would be very smart. As it is, Mr. Grossmith subordinates his clothes to the character he represents. He has introduced again, after many years, the gray topper, which the King favors and in which he appeared on several occasions this Summer.

The most grotesque of Mr. Grossmith's costumes is the double-breasted sack lounge suit of a peculiar shade of blue, which might be called ultramarine. With this he wears a Homburg hat of vivid green, with a small peacock's feather in the band; brown boots, and a most aggressive tartan plaid tie under an all-around turndown collar.

The famous evening cloak to wear with evening dress is none other than that employed by Italian and Spanish officers. A number of these were seen here two years ago, and Willie B. O. Field had one of them. It is more or less of a Hamlet cloak with a large clasp at the throat. It goes over the shoulders and has a rakish Spanish and Italian twist, such as one sees in the portraits of Continental cavaliers of the seventeenth century. It is almost universally worn in the evening by Spaniards and Italians. The other evening overcoat, of a frock cut, lined with white satin, is a bit too pronounced.

One of the latest fads at the different seaside country clubs is rail sitting. This is most disagreeable for those who do not indulge in the practice. The participants are all young men. They take up their position on the railing of the club piazza and sit there in rows with their faces toward the occupants of the piazzas and their backs to the sea. The hosiery of the year is variegated, and the old style of tan boots with white linen spatts is considered very ultra. Some of the tan Oxford boots have only white uppers, and above these the variegated "socks" can be seen. All trousers are turned up a little over two inches at the bottom, and at the seaside the favorite material is white flannel or duck. Dark coats, single and double-breasted, narrow four-in-hands, either of white, dark blue, or black silk, straw and Panama hats are essentials of the get-up, and many of the younger men carry thin bamboo walking sticks. This spectacle can be seen any day at any of the South Side Long Island clubs from Sea Gate to Montauk Point. The rail habit has reached Narragansett hotels, but not Newport. At the Reading Room there are still on view numerous soles of boots and shoes comfortably poised on the railing, while the owners loll or tilt back in piazza chairs.

The Duke of St. Albans, who is to make a visit to America this Winter, is the great ducal parti in England at present. He is very fond of yachting and detests society. He is said to be one of the handsomest young men in England as well as one of the wealthiest. His half brother, Lord Osborn de Vere, is well known to many New Yorkers. The Duke is thirty-four years of age. He rejoices in the beautiful name of Charles Victor Albert Aubrey de Vere Beauclerk, and he is a lineal descendant of Charles II. and Nell Gwynn, the madcap actress. He has three half sisters well known in London society—Lady Moyra Cavendish, Lady Henry Somerset, and Lady Alexandra de Vere. Lady Henry Somerset is the wife of the son of the Lady Henry Somerset who is the great temperance and religious worker.

The Earl of Dartmouth, who is here with the Countess of Dartmouth and his son, Lord Lewisham, is a great lover of a joke. Last year he sent to some woman's magazine in England a recipe for beautifying the complexion, which he claimed he found in an old manuscript belonging to one of his ancestors. The ingredients were all kinds of extraordinary things, including snails, toads, and mice. The recipe was taken seriously, and many letters were written to the periodical in question by women anxious to try the mixture, notwithstanding the repulsive ingredients. As a boy and as a young man at college, Lewisham, as the Earl of Dartmouth was then called, was always playing some practical joke.

The Baron Decles, who is expected this week from England, is a member of a branch of the Beresford family. His name is William Marcus De La Poer Horsley-Beresford. His country seat is Beresford Lodge, and he is a member of the Carlton Club. The Seton family in this country, a member of which—Major Henry Seton—died in Baltimore last week, are connections of the Beresfords. The Baron Decles is about forty years of age. He married in 1901 Maria Gertrude, the daughter of Sir John Pollard Willoughby. His youngest brother, the Hon. William Arthur Horsley-Beresford, married Miss Florence Miller of Providence, R. I. They live at Calgary, Canada.

Gustav Tosti, the Vice Consul of Italy, who for the present will act as Consul General in this city, is a physician with his degree obtained in America. He does not practice, but writes for different medical journals and periodicals on various subjects. He took up the study of medicine in this country as an adjunct to his numerous Consular duties. His family, and that also of Mme. Tosti, have been in diplomatic life abroad for several generations. Mme. Tosti is a relative of the Cantacuzene family, a member of which married Miss Grant, the daughter of Gen. Fred Dent Grant. Mme. Tosti comes from the older branch of this notable Russian house. Count Branchi, who retires, is a bachelor and a member of the Calumet and Lotos Clubs. He lived at the Lotos for a number of years. His retirement is also a step in promotion.

The plan which Louis Keller, the Secretary of the Baltusrol Golf Club, has arranged for the accommodation of a number of bachelors at Baltusrol is finding much favor. The bungalows which are to be built will contain one to two or more rooms, with heat and electric light and all the most modern comforts. They will be so arranged that they can be taken also by the families of members. The club is open all the year round, and it is as popular in midwinter as it is in the season for sports in the open. The bungalow plan is said to find more favor that that which has been made at Tuxedo, where the two clubhouses are only hotels on a limited scale. The first reception of the season was held at Baltusrol on Friday afternoon on the occasion of the golf tournament.

The Clambake Club will close this week. It has been one of the most popular institutions at Newport this Summer. Many entertainments have been given there, most of them of an informal character. Center Hitchcock, the President, is also at the head of the Brook Club in this city, which has now opened its doors and has begun to run smoothly. Each evening the rooms are crowded. Many of the visiting actors and men of note have been entertained there. Center Hitchcock has regained his health completely, and he has been much in evidence at Saratoga and Newport this season. The Clambake Club gave an entertainment in honor of Morton Plant before it closed its doors.

Frederick Gebhard is now one of the most picturesque-looking men on the avenue. Formerly he had a white patch in his black mustache, which gave him rather an odd appearance. Now both ends of his mustache have turned white, the middle part of it remaining black. Frederick Gebhard sticks to dark blues and grays, seldom changing the color of his different suits, and he is still addicted to bright neckwear. One of his friends, Jack Follansbee, the cousin of Foxie Keene, wears browns and olive mixtures. Both are much interested in the races and are present every day at the track.

The Duke of Newcastle is again a familiar figure on Fifth Avenue. He has long discarded the top hat of peculiar shape, and until the last two days wore a very modest straw and a checked gray suit. He takes long walks, interests himself in the work of the Ritualistic churches, and generally passes his evenings at the Metropolitan Club, where he is always delighted to have a quiet rubber or a game of backgammon. He never goes to house parties, and his only visits to the country have been to the houses of intimate friends at Bernardsville and nearby suburban resorts.

The name of Raoul-Duval is associated in New York with sport and polo and the Meadow Brook Club, but not until recently with the drama, and the announcement that Mrs. Brown Potter is to make her reappearance in a play written by Mme. Rene Raoul-Duval, the wife of a prominent Paris clubman, known in America, is a bit misleading. The Mme. Rene Raoul-Duval in question is her sister, who was Miss Jennie Urquhart, and not the wife of Raoul-Duval, the polo player, who married a Miss Tobin of San Francisco. Raoul is not a Christian but a family name, and one would be obliged to find it in the R's, and not in the D's, in the social register of the French capital, "Tout Paris." Rene Raoul-Duval is the son of a former Senator, and his father made a very large fortune in manufactures. He and his wife live in a pretty hotel in the Rue de la Pompe. M. Rene Raoul-Duval is fond of outdoor sports, also of music, and a bit of the upper Bohemian life. He is a member of the Auto and the Aero Clubs, the Cercle du Bois de Boulogne, and the Union Artistique.

There has been some discussion brought about by a recent cause célèbre as to the rule in England when a man becomes bankrupt. Ipso facto, appearing in The Gazette demands his resignation from the army if he is a military man, and also he is dropped from all of his clubs. Some take time by the forelock by resigning from the army and their clubs before their bankruptcy is declared. The list in certain London newspapers gives the name of all persons who have resigned or who are dropped from the army and ipso facto from their clubs. A recent case which came to the attention of many New Yorkers was that of a man who had splendid letters and was entertained and put up at all the clubs here after he had been dropped on the other side. He eventually was caught in some crooked work, ordering jewels from a shop, where, according to the stringent bankruptcy law, he could not have obtained credit. He tried to sell the jewels, was caught, arrested, tried, and convicted. He left some unsettled scores in some of the best New York clubs, but his name is never mentioned.

The twenty-third croquet championship meeting of the All England Lawn Tennis and Croquet Club was held at Wimbledon recently. It is the only large croquet club in England, and it holds annual championship meetings. It was organized in 1868. The first match was won by W. H. Peel and the Championship Cup by A. C. Joad. The hoops in those days measured 7½ inches in width. In 1872 they were reduced to 4 inches. The game has had another revival throughout England.

A professor announced at the recent convention of the National Educational Association that girls are "mannish." "There is something wrong," he exclaimed in a burst of eloquence, "when schoolgirls are not gushing and sentimental." There is hope for the sex if men have begun to beg for more "gush." Since the beginning of history the "gush and sentimentality" of the sex have been kept in a hothouse, to grow just as large and tender as possible; while their reason and judgment have been kept in cold storage, to sprout meagrely forth like potatoes in a cellar. It is a good thing for everybody concerned to have the process reversed for a while. But the good professor need not despair. There are still women to his taste in the world. We would respectfully refer him to those abundant females who send flowers and letters of condolence to every notorious convicted criminal, even condemned wife murderers.

In France a young woman of good family is absolutely debarred from marriage if she have no dowry. In that case she almost invariably enters a convent when the dread hour of her twenty-fifth birthday dawns. Many sisters also enter convents to save their brothers the expense of their dowries, and enable them to contract more advantageous marriages. In the year 1900, according to a recent English writer, 64,000 young women were thus immured behind convent walls in France. Doesn't the American bachelor girl system, with all its faults, entail less social loss than this?

MUSIC IN NOISE.

THERE is a remedy for the trials of the nervous individual who suffers from what are usually considered the ear-splitting noises of the city. It is nothing more than an application of mental suggestion. There are no noises—nothing but symphonies, says an Austrian musician. When he is in the mood for composition he makes with all possible speed for the nearest railroad train, boards it, and as the rhythmical sound of the wheels goes on he hears not noise but harmonies—marches, waltzes, songs without words, oratorios, and what not, are developed in his stimulated brain. This music of the train is so inspiring that every week without fail the composer takes a journey by rail.

That the composer finds the railroad a varieties of music proves the uncultivated ear of the individual who hears nothing but noise in the sounds around him. In time there may be conservatories for the study of the music in noise, but at present to find delight in what has hitherto been a nightmare must be the work of personal effort. There is an unexplored field with wide room for development along original lines. With the cultivated ear the clanking along the street of a load of iron bars becomes a Wagner opera, the insistent voice of the "cash for clo'" man a Caruso solo, the midnight faking cry of "Hextree! extraw!" may sound the deep bass notes of Edouard De Reszke. Plançon's voice can be heard in the baying of a hound, a pack of hounds will represent a male chorus of the Arion Society, a small cat concert on the back fence the Kneisel quartet, and a larger one the Boston Symphony.

This delightful study may be carried on indefinitely. There is the chug, chug of the little steam launch on the water to be interpreted, the shrill screech of the whistle of the big steamer, the snorting of the automobile, to say nothing of the noises of the wheels of various vehicles. Der Weltspiegel, a German paper, has set to music a few sounds, including the real music of the nightingale. This illustration is not to be confounded with the work done by different composers where sounds made by animals have been represented—it is too much to say reproduced. This has been done many times, notably with the trampling of horses, for the purpose of carrying out the idea of the story told by the music. That is the suggestion of sounds introduced into music. The four illustrations are the interpretation by music of ordinary sounds and noises.

WHAT WOMEN ARE WEARING

THE adaptation of the pointed bodice, without the girdle, that outlines the waist, bust, and hips can be adjusted to suit any figure, and the slim made to appear plump and the too plump will appear to owe their redundance of curve to material instead of flesh. For example, the draperies used about the bust of the thin persons will be full and so adapted as to conceal the deficiency in figure, while for the plump one they will be scant and underneath the drapery the figure will be closely drawn in. About the hips of the thin person the plaits or shirrings will be full and in the full-hipped figure very thin and scant or so fastened as to hold the materials flat to the form.

There is, therefore, no reason for either the thin or the very plump woman objecting to this style. The only woman who loses is she whose figure is so perfect that it is the revealing instead of the concealment of all the lines that is necessary to show it to the best advantage.

Two of the eloping brides of the past few days have been much in town since their respective elopements. One is Mrs. Austen Gray, who was Miss Alice Burnham of Boston and the other Mrs. Lawrence Perin, who was Miss Jane Sartor of Philadelphia. Mrs. Gray was on the avenue a few days since with Mr. Gray. She was gowned in a dark blue foulard, having tiny white dots sparsely printed over the blue. Very wide tucks distinguished both the bodice and skirt. The skirt hung in rather scanty folds from the waist to the pavement, a deep hem finished the bottom, and some sixteen inches above this there was a three-inch tuck; and sixteen inches above this tuck a two-inch tuck. The bodice had a wide tuck across the back perhaps four inches above the girdle that gave an Eton blouse effect, and there were several wide tucks in the front. The top of the bodice was blue chiffon over white, and this also formed the stock. The sleeves drooped from the shoulders and the foulard ended in a deep tuck effect at the elbow, from which point fell voluminous plaited sleeves of chiffon of a much darker blue than the gown, and the hat topping this was a large affair with a wide brim that curved downward a shade at both the back and the front, and with neither lift nor turn save the graceful curves from front to back. Instead of being blue, it was a soft shade of petunia red, very dark in color and was trimmed with ribbons of lighter shades of the same rich hue and a few red flowers, in which the tones of both hat and ribbons were repeated.

Mrs. Perin, who with her husband has just sailed for Europe, who is only eighteen, has been wearing a short white duck costume, a coat and skirt topped by a white hat.

Mrs. Belmont Tiffany has an odd gray gown. The skirt of gray voile trails and has five flat flounces about the bottom piped with gray silk. The tops of these flat ruffles are scalloped and piped with gray silk and are applied flatly to the skirt. They form more than one-third of the jupe. The bodice is entirely of gray silk laid in folds, and the large sleeves with the puffiness all above and at the elbows are draped affairs of silk. With this she wears a large round hat with a long plume.

Miss Mamie Pomeroy, the pretty sister of Miss Greta Pomeroy, was lunching at Sherry's with her sister and mother in a round-length skirt and half-length coat of rough gray goods in a broken plaid. This coat had long, curved seams that were outlined by strappings of grayish-tan smooth cloth over an inch wide. Her round, cream-colored hat was trimmed with pale-pink roses placed around and concealing the very low crown.

Miss Ewerretta Kernochan, in town with her aunt, Miss Whitney, wore a smart round-length skirt and three-quarter length, three-quarter-fitting coat of cream-colored duck. The former was boxplaited and the latter was severely plain, showing neither stitching nor strapping. It was topped by a large round hat of larkspur blue straw trimmed with wings shading from light to dark blue, the wings being laid flatly on the crown from the front portion of the brim, the crown being only a bit higher than the brim.

+ + +

Mrs. Frederic Edey is fond of simple gowns, and can wear them with good effect, as she has a full, commanding figure, well carried, and is a pronounced brunette. One of her gowns is some sort of thin wool voile with oval satin spots an inch long by two-thirds of an inch wide, scattered at irregular intervals over the voile. The skirt, which has a few scanty gathers around the waist, sweeps the floor all around, and its decoration consists of three wide tucks of different widths, several inches apart, that break the lower third of the jupe. The bodice has a V-shaped yoke that extends down the front and the back, but not down the shoulder seams, and a stock of white lace. The full sleeves are gathered into rather deep gauntlet cuffs of lace.

+ + +

The Countess Festetics has been wearing some simple and pretty muslin frocks quite ideal in their summery effect of coolness and lightness when she comes in from her father's country place at Closter, N. J. She is the granddaughter of James B. Haggin, and, while the Haggins are very wealthy, the Countess affects simplicity and quiet gowning for the street. One of her latest frocks is a white muslin with a modified scroll pattern in delicate china blue. The skirt is shirred in cord effects below the waist to outline a hip yoke, and about the bottom there is a narrow ruffle or two. The bodice is shirred around the shoulders, producing a yoke effect to match the skirt's hip yoke, and the full sleeves gathered at the shoulders are shirred at the wrists and finished with white lace to match the bodice stock. With it she wears a hat rolled at one side and trimmed with white flowers.

+ + +

Mrs. Bishop was in town recently with three of her little girls. The latter were dressed alike in white, with simple cream coats having deep capes of Irish lace and bebe hats of black crinoline with box-plaited brims and clusters of shaded red cherrtes nodding from the plaits. The eldest child is apparently about nine years old. Mrs. Bishop was a symphony in black and white, and wore a trailing frock of white with tiny black dots the size of pinheads a half inch apart over the surface. The skirt had its lower section gathered and set on, and a wide band of white lace was inserted a few inches above the hem of the set-on section. The top was covered by a handsome short wrap of white cloth having a large white cord tracing an artistic open design that radiated from the sides. This wrap was shaped much like the old-time short dolman, and hung straight from the neck to a distance of perhaps twelve inches below the waist. The sleeves appeared to be an extension of the wrap, and hung close at the shoulders, but widened toward the wrist. Down the centre back of the wrap, and also down the back of each sleeve, was a series of strips of black and white brocaded stuff perhaps six inches long by one in width, and these were arranged crosswise an inch apart; near their ends lengthwise strips of heavy white embroidery an inch wide was placed to conceal the termination of the crosswise bands. Her hat was a moderately large black affair trimmed with quantities of deep pink roses.

+ + +

Mrs. Harold Fitzgerald of Boston, daughter of Gen. Louis Fitzgerald of New York, has been much in this city of late, and has worn some dashing costumes. One is of mauve voile, and is topped by a large, round mauve chip hat trimmed with a single, wide mauve ostrich plume drooping at the side but having a twist toward the back. The gown itself is novel in its combination of shirred under portions overlapped by wide bands of plain voile edged with voile-covered cords. The Eton coat has a yoke portion of the plain voile edged with cord, then comes an underlying gathered section, and lastly a wide, corded, plain band around the bottom, the front matching. Below the sleeve-cap portion come wide, cord-edged bands, then a gathered section showing gathers, and then another plain section, and lastly the wide cuffs. The skirt matches, being gathered a little at the waist line and having three graduated cord-edged bands circling around it. The skirt is short, and the bottom hangs in full gathers.

+ + +

Mrs. Eugene Reynal was with her sister, Mrs. Fitzgerald, one day, and was also in mauve, or rather a light lavender, it being much more delicate in tint than the mauve voile. The skirt—the material was a very light weight cloth—was plaited full around the waist, but stitched to hang flat. Below these plaits the skirt hung very full and had wide tucks running around it; it was a round skirt. The jacket, if jacket it may be termed, was a series of tabs over a white under blouse. It was rounded out in the neck and was evidently donned by slipping over the head, as from a circular piece of cloth embroidered at the edges and through the centre in lavenders, extended a series of tabs some of which extended to a lavender girdle. The sleeves were formed of wide bands attached at the top to the round yoke piece and ending in tabs at the elbows. A large round hat of lavender with lavender trimmings topped the frock.

+ + +

Mrs. Pell is wearing a smart white linen costume. The skirt, of instep length, is laid in deep side plaits turning backward from the front, and the half length coat is cut with curved seams and is three-quarters fitting with plain coat sleeves. With it she wears a dark red straw hat or toque with rolled sides, in the indentation of which knots of red are placed, and at the side a short red ostrich tip curls over the blonde coiffure. The hat comes out over the forehead in rather a sharp point.

Mrs. William Carter, the blonde Philadelphian, was in town one day clad in an apparently simple but really elaborate gray gown. It was a princesse robe closing invisibly down the back. The material was gray crepe de chine and innumerable tucks and embroideries striped it perpendicularly. The sleeves belled a little at the wrists above the embroidered wristbands, and a rather wide-brimmed hat shaded her face.

+ + +

Mrs. Pembroke Jones, in from Newport, wore a smart tan voile, a round skirt, and Eton coat with many narrow, ridgelike tucks running up and down them. The skirt was the round length and fitted smoothly with a very graduul and not pronounced flare from the hips down. The very narrow lengthwise plaits or tucks were stitched in in groups, the groups being but a short distance apart and about the edge of the skirt was a fold of voile. The voile Eton cleared the belt and followed the outlines of the figure, although it swung out a little from it, and the sleeves were unlined. These sleeves were rather close from shoulder seams to the elbows, from the latter point they flared out slightly, and ended midway between elbows and wrists in much modified kimono shape. She wore a fine white underblouse and a large wide-brimmed hat showing lavender and mauve tints through the long tan chiffon veil that swathed both hat and face.

+ + +

Mrs. Walker is wearing one of the smartest linen costumes seen this season. It is a dull, medium blue. The skirt of course is the proper length for linen costumes, ankle length, and is laid in side plaits, fastened closely nearly to the bottom of the skirt. A panel outlines the centre front of the skirt, and near the top on each side are three mound-shaped buttons of white linen, with blue centres; they are a little more than an inch apart, and the top one is four or five inches from the waist line. These buttons simulate the holding down of the first plait on each side of the graduated panel. The Eton coat is fitted by seams in the back close to the figure, and the lower and stitched edge comes down over the belt. The fronts are also shaped to follow the outlines of the figure, but are loose, and swing open, showing the white underblouse. Buttons matching those on the skirt are placed each side of the fronts. The sleeves curve out from the shoulders to the elbows, and in again at the wrists, and are free from tucks or ornamentation. At the wrists the sleeves are partially cut down and partially plaited to fit under the deep, shaped cuffs. These cuffs flare at the outer edges and curve in rounded circular extensions at the side tops. They are six inches deep at the inner seams by seven or eight at the outer, and the centres are formed of plain white linen, with an inch-wide border of the blue. A white linen collar, bordered with blue to match the cuffs, finishes the neck of the little coat, and is so shaped that a wide tab runs out over each shoulder seam to the sleeves and another down a few inches the centre back. A rather small, flat, cream-white chip hat, with touches of black velvet, tops it.

Mrs. H. Carroll Brown of Baltimore, a daughter of the late Marcus Daly, one of the Montana copper kings, and a sister of Mrs. James W. Gerard, was walking with Mrs. Gerard on the avenue. Both were in black and white and both wore large hats. Mrs. Brown's hat was flat with a brim projecting all around her face, and was swathed in a black veil. Her frock was a black liberty satin sprinkled with medium-sized white polka dots an inch and a half apart. The skirt was laid in wide box-plaits that fell to the pavement—she had been driving, and it was not a walking costume—forming a full, but somewhat boxlike effect. The bodice full and blouse-like, was cut with a short V at the top in the back and a deep one in the front. A white lace guimpe was worn and a short string of pink coral beads. The sleeves were voluminous, and were draped to fall in several broken and very wide puffs to a little below the elbow, where they were finished by drooping frills with inner frills of white lace.

Mrs. Gerard's frock was a black Swiss muslin with tiny white spots. The bodice had a white lace stock and shallow vest, and the swiss was smocked around the shoulders to form a combined yoke and sleeve caps, and below it were crosswise insertions of fine black lace. She wore a white girdle. The sleeves, close at the tops, flared out and had several inch-wide black lace insertions circling them, and were gathered at the wrists into lace and swiss cuffs, falling above the cuffs in puffs. The yoke, which was shallow in the back, was rather deep and square in the front, and was partially covered with black lace. The skirt was shirred around the waist and fell in very full folds to the pavement, having an applied flounce set on the bottom with a band of black lace insertion joining it to the jupe. Six inches below this joining insertion was with tiny jet sequins. The bodice was trimmed with lengthwise strapping of black silk over the shirrings and tucks of tulle, and there was a deep, white lace yoke underlying the tulle. The full sleeves were gathered into deep cuffs through which white lace showed. A moderate-sized round chapeau of black tulle, with a white willow plume curled all around the brim an inch from the rim, was set slightly back from her face.

An unusual linen gown in ecru tones embroidered in white was seen at Delmonico's at the luncheon hour the first of last week. It was a shirtwaist costume. The blouse, closing invisibly in the back, had a yoke of the linen embroidered in the open-work English embroidery, the pattern being single curving sprays, and the edge of the yoke was done in fine scallops with a vine inside the scallops. The collar forming a part of the yoke was an inch and a half wide and was done in eyelet-hole embroidery, the edge being done in scallops. From the yoke down the bodice was laid in quarter-inch tucks a quarter of an inch apart, and at the bottom this tucked portion was plaited into a linen belt embroidered to match the stock. The skirt had a deep hip yoke that formed its upper third. The portion close to the belt and for six or seven inches below was plain, free from embroidery, and was laid in tapering tucks so that the skirt fitted without a fold around the hips. Below the tucks there were eyelet holes scattered in sections, and lower yet more of them arranged to simulate single leaves, while just above the edge of this embroidered section the leaves outlined by embroidery were large and in clusters. This yoke was cut in in four or five deep curves where it overlapped the lower portion, and these large curves were bordered with tiny scallops. The lower part of the skirt was really a wide Spanish flounce, the upper portion of which was tucked to a depth of eight inches, the tucks being half an inch deep and that distance from each other. The release of these tucks formed the full flounce. The lower edge of the flounce had a vine embroidered an inch from the edge and above and below this a tiny curved line of white embroidery.

In fur coats for Winter wear there are a number of new shapes in boleros, and while the blouse coat in fur will be less worn than last season, still styles in blouses are also shown.

The long-skirted Louis XV. and Louis XVI. coats in fur have vests of embroidered cloth, velvet, or a contrasting fur, and the new fur, yetta, which can be embroidered, is also used.

Moiréd caracul and baby lamb, being short-haired, will be much seen in these coats. Pony skin in black will be another favorite in long coat furs.

Sable paws are being worked up into coats as well as muffs, and while much less expensive than the sable skin garments, the cost of combining the small pieces into coats renders them anything but cheap.

In squirrel-skin garments, the heads of the animals will be utilized, and the matching of the stripes will result in effects quite unlike the furs made of whole skins.

The making of these small pieces of fur into garments is done in Germany, where manual labor is much cheaper than in this country.

Bear, raccoon, and fox furs will be much seen in neck pieces, the long nap making them a softening setting for the face.

Flat stoles and pelerines are to be much worn, and in muffs the flat shape will be the most fashionable, though dealers are trying to get up some new-shaped affair for the wear of exclusives.

THE Duchess of Roxburghe (Miss May Goelet) was one of the most gorgeously gowned and begemmed women presented at Court, and the Baroness de Forest was the other. The Duchess of Roxburghe wore her wedding gown, which was a mass of glittering jewels, giving the effect of bows, and the lace draping its train was studded with gems. It is the custom for brides who are "presented on their marriage" to wear all the jewels they possess, and precious stones adorn shoe buckles, and form shoulder straps and pendants, as well as providing the usual ornaments. In fashionable society in England brides have their wedding gowns made as much with a view of presentation at Court as for the wedding itself, the bodices being so contrived as to be made decolleté at will. This accounts for the extreme gorgeousness of English wedding gowns. When Lady Herbert was lately presented on her marriage by her mother-in-law, the Countess of Pembroke, she wore a frock of white crêpe de chine, the skirt of which was embroidered in lilies done in silver and having pearls and diamonds fastened here and there, while a few large sapphires shone like blue stars on the white gown. The presentation gown of the Duchess of Norfolk was draped with a scarf of old Brussels lace. That is one of the most beautiful and priceless lace scarfs in existence. It also adorned the wedding gown of her Grace. It is said on good authority that no less than $3,000 worth of real lace is often used on a simple-appearing presentation robe.

Melon à la Schley or Lillian Russell can be easily prepared at home, and furnishes a delicious dessert to the fruit lover. The melons should be small and of uniform size, and after being halved and cleaned should be placed on ice until thoroughly chilled, and should be filled only a few moments before serving. The filling should be of finely sliced peaches, ice cream, and a spoonful of maraschino. The melon should be filled even full of vanilla ice cream, and then covered with a layer of sliced peaches; enough ice cream is then added to round up quite a high mound in the centre of the melon, and then a teaspoonful of the maraschino liquor is dropped lightly over the whole, and the melon is served at once on very cold plates. The filling may be varied to suit the taste, and some sweet plums or other fruits used with the peaches, but ice cream and peaches are the necessary ingredients. The liqueur may be omitted if desired, for some prefer the melon with nothing but the ice cream and peaches.

They were discussing Summer experiences and odd losings and findings.

"It was my very best shell comb that I lost," said the first girl, "and what possessed me to wear it in bathing I don't know, but I did, and of course I lost it. We hunted high and low and for two or three days after, but without result, and I gave it up. It was at Waterford, Me., where we rowed across the lake for our bathing, and it was the night after I had finally given up my comb in despair that we took a moonlight row to the bathing beach. As the boat was pushed up against the shore I remarked sadly:

"'Is this it?' asked one of the young men looking down into a few inches of water where just beside the boat he saw a small dark object and fished up my comb as good as new, with not even a tooth gone.'"

"'Don't lose your purse,' were the last words my mother said to me as I started off for a little trip this Summer," said the second girl. "That was when she left me at the station at Deer Park, on Long Island, where you know we spend our Summers. Of course I promised, and of course I was thoroughly frightened when I looked for it after the train had started and found that it was gone. Well I stopped in the city, poor dad ponied up for my trip, and I went on. But the funniest thing about it was that the night of the day I left on the 7 A. M. train Uncle Charley was at the station, just twelve hours later at 7 in the evening, and as he drove up he noticed something lying just under the edge of the platform, and picked up a purse. He opened it, found my card and took my lost wealth home."

"It was a good many years ago," said the man, "that an aunt of mine lost and found a brooch. She had been huckleberrying and wore a big round gold brooch the size of a small cart wheel, the style worn in those days. It became unhooked and was lost and could not be found. Three years later one of the family wandering through those same woods found the brooch unharmed, though tarnished by its long experience of wind and weather.

The fashion of late has been for mothers-in-law rather than the mothers to present their daughters "on their marriage." Queen Victoria was wont to hold Drawing Rooms in the throne room, but King Edward and Queen Alexandra prefer the great ballroom of Buckingham Palace, and hold Court in the evening instead of the day. The announcement that presentation could be by card from the Lord Chamberlain only, made after the year of mourning for the late Queen, created a sensation in England. Women who desire to be presented are, however, permitted to send their names to the Lord Chamberlain, and should he see fit to grant the card, their desires are fulfilled. About 1,000 invitations are sent out for each Court, and the convenience of those presented is looked after to a far greater degree than formerly. During the presentation the King and Queen stand with the Princes and Princesses grouped behind them, whereas in Victoria's day they were arranged in an awe-inspiring semicircle that did not tend to allay the nervous palpitation of débutantes. Their Majesties do not address those whom they know, nor does the Queen embrace any of those presented, as the former Queen often did.

There is now no hand kissing; as the women pass their Majesties they drop two deep curtsies, one to each, and hasten on. The idea is to get the thing through with as quickly as is consistent with dignity. A substantial buffet supper is served at these evening Courts, and there is a seated supper for royalty, and a few friends are usually asked to sit with them.

The coming figure—termed the Venus because of its generous curves—is responsible for a lot of written nonsense as to how to obtain it. It is safe to say that no woman having a full bust and wide hips did away with them because of the passing vogue of the slim figure. She couldn't. Many who had been built up merely dropped their padding. Of course the style of corsets and dress can be made to modify the outlines of the figure, and in the coming models, with their pointed waists, the waist line will be exposed to view, while folds below and full draperies above will conceal deficiencies or exuberances of figure. A woman may be slender yet have rounded curves, and on the contrary she may be plump and have no more figure than a box. The question of figure is largely one of the bony framework supporting the flesh, and while one may reduce or gain a certain amount of flesh, the changing of the bony supporting structure is out of the question. Broad hips and wide shoulders are chiefly matters of bone, and a full bust depends as much on a full, broad chest and goods lungs as on flesh. Bustles and pads of all sorts are poor makeshifts to supply deficiencies, and never deceive the skilled eye, and their use prevents the development of the portions of the body they cover by heating them overmuch. Draperies, trimmings, plaits, and gathers are the only artistic means of hiding defects. Physical exercises to develop the muscles will do something, but how many ever carry out the directions persistently? The best the thin, hipless, or narrow-shouldered woman can do is to have trimmings and costumes designed to give as much width and fullness as possible. There has also been much nonsense written in the past anent means of acquiring a slender figure as there is now about attaining curves, and every thin or bony woman imagined she was slender and graceful; soon every fat woman will imagine herself merely rounded and feminine. The truth is that the figure that is both slender and rounded, with decided bust and hip curves yet slender waist, and with small plump hands and feet, is rare as blackberries in Winter. It cannot be acquired any more than the narrow-shouldered woman can develop broad shoulders or the hipless woman expand; there is much more hope for the fat woman, who can almost always reduce if she cares enough about it to do so. With all the latitude offered nowadays in fashions, there is no reason for any woman to wear that which exposes her defects, and if the latest thing out does not become her, then let her stick to an older fashion that does. Penty of outdoor exercise, plenty of fresh air in the living and sleeping rooms, carrying the chest out and the shoulders back, eating nutritious food, and getting enough sleep, avoiding laced corsets and light, high-heeled shoes and gloves, are the bets methods for attaining and retaining the best figure one can hope for.

The small waist is not a matter of inches but of proportion, and if one has broad shoulders and wide hips and especially if the bust also be well developed, the waist will appear small in proportion. No hipless, bustless, narrow-shouldered figure ever is small waisted unless it is laced tightly. One of the best things for the woman to do who wishes to take on flesh is to avoid worry, to keep in an even-tempered condition, avoiding anger, eating little, but often, and drinking plenty of milk and sleeping all she can. On the other hand, if the fat woman would reduce she should confine herself to three meals a day, avoid bread and potatoes, get up early in the morning, and lead as active a life as possible. It is not necessary to starve or to suffer in order to reduce. Fat around and immediately below the waist is said to be more easily removed by walking than any other form of exercise.

Perhaps it is because of the numbers of nice American girls who have married foreigners that things American are becoming so popular on the other side of the water. When at a social function anything that is particularly amusing or entertaining is given, it is sure to be dubbed American. It is a compliment that has not been given us always. Anathemas have been pronounced on the American ice water habit and none of our ices has been generally popular. But Americans who have been abroad this Summer have found all this changed. It is particularly so in England. At all the cricket affairs and croquet parties which have been in any way social events a feature has been the little tents dotted here and there on the lawns from which iced cups and American iced drinks have been served

THE BANK STATEMENT.

New Records for Loans and Deposits—Surplus Fast Diminishing.

The bank statement made new high records for loans and deposits. The loans caused the increase in deposits, for there was a loss of $7,908,800 in cash, which is not far from the loss indicated by the reported movements of currency.

The reserve required was increased by $1,156,350, and with this addition to the loss of cash, the surplus was diminished by $0,065,150. The surplus reached the maximum for the year of $58,613,075, on Aug. 20. During the last three weeks a little over $20,000,000 has been taken from the surplus through the increase in loans and the shipment of cash to the interior for the crop movement and to Cuba and Argentina.

The feature of the statement was that forty out of the fifty-three Clearing House banks had increases in loans, seven of which were in excess of $500,000, while only one of the decreases barely passed the $500,000 mark.

There were seventeen banks with less than 25 per cent. reserve, eight National and nine State. This compares with sixteen banks below the reserve required in the preceding week, twenty-three in the week ended Sept. 12, 1903, thirty-three in the corresponding week of 1902, and twenty-nine in 1901. The total deficit of these seventeen banks was $1,351,125, which is equivalent to the reserve required upon deposits of $5,404,500 out of the total of $1,221,709,400.

Money on call loaned on the Stock Exchange last week at 2@1½ per cent., averaging 1 per cent. Time money was in light demand at 2½ per cent. for sixty days, 2¾ per cent. for ninety days, 3@3½ per cent. for four to six months. There was good inquiry for commercial paper at 4 per cent. for indorsements, 4@4½ per cent. for prime single names, and 4½@5 per cent. for good names. Demand sterling ranged from 4.87@4.8705 to 4.8715@4.8720, closing steady at 4.8705@4.8710.

In the corresponding week of 1903 money on call loaned at 2¼@3 per cent., averaging 2¾ per cent. Time money was quoted at 4 per cent. for thirty days, 4½ per cent. for sixty to ninety days, 5@5½ per cent. for four months, 5½@6 per cent. for five and six months. Commercial paper was in light request; rates were 6 per cent. for indorsement, 6@6½ per cent. for prime single names, and 6½@7 per cent. for good names. Demand sterling ranged from 4.8590@4.8610 to 4.8640@4.8650, closing weak at the lower rate, influenced by liberal offerings of cotton bills.

The items of last week's bank statement, the changes from the preceding week, and the statement of Sept. 12, 1903, follow:

COTTON IN ECUADOR.

Successful Manufacturing Being Done for the Home Trade.

Such great progress has of late been made in the production and milling of cotton in Ecuador that the republic no longer has need to import either the raw or manufactured articles. The Consul General of Ecuador in this city, Serafin E. Wilson, gave to a Times reporter the other day some facts concerning what is rapidly becoming a leading industry of the country.

"There is the customary myth of the republics," said he, "in the centre of the most extensive culture of cotton, which grows upon trees up to six feet in height and is of the Sea Island variety. There is particularly fine quality in cocoon, and successful crops are realized also at Guaranda, Alausi and Chunchi. Cotton thrives below 10 degrees latitude, up to the point where, with Ecuadorian white inspection, and the cotton is dispatched to the mills in cattle-drawn wagon trains. The growers in Southern Ecuador have an advantage in the railway, which has a complete freight equipment and affords excellent shipping facilities to as far north as Cotta, which is 135 miles from Quito, the capital, near which, at Chillo, are located the largest cotton mills. Here various cotton goods, such as pique, duck, a lining cloth resembling madras, and drills, the latter for native Indian wear, are made.

"In one of these factories—La Valle—200 Indian girls are regularly employed, whose hours are from 8 o'clock in the morning until 6 in the afternoon, with an hour for luncheon. They receive an average daily wage of 1 rial, which is equivalent to about 25 cents in United States coin. For this plant, which is the largest yet established in Ecuador, the machinery was recently imported from Philadelphia, and is of the latest and most approved design. The English, French, and German mules have heretofore been purchased, and are installed in the other mills throughout the republic.

"Linen and wool are also manufactured at Chillo and elsewhere, and dress goods of linen for ladies' wear and cheviots and woolens for men constitute an important part of the output, and these are afterward made up into dresses and suits by Ecuadorian tailors.

"It has taken some twenty-five years for the cotton industry to reach its present advanced state of development in Ecuador, and only in the last ten or twelve years have the mills been in active and constant operation, but we have no labor troubles to hamper the manufacture of cotton, the Indian women and girls being in every way model workers, and there is nothing to retard the progress that is being made. The home consumption now leaves no surplus for export, but as the facilities and capacities of our mills are improved we shall seek the foreign markets of South America in particular, as we are geographically so situated as to be able to place our products there at a minimum of freight charges."

ANNUAL RAILROAD REPORTS

Those Made Public Last Week Not So Bad After All.

ROADS NOW ON SAFE BASIS

Reasons Why Next Year Better Showing May Be Expected — Cost of the Winter.

With the beginning of September the financial community enters upon the period of annual railroad reports, and from now on these will be coming in from every section of the country. The most important reports which came out last week were those of the Norfolk and Western, the Chicago and Northwestern, and the New York, Ontario and Western, covering three important territories, namely the soft coal, the hard coal, and the wheat growing regions, and they give a pretty clear indication as to what may be expected from other railroads.

It was to have been expected that the adverse conditions of the last year should be reflected in these reports, and declines in earnings therefore cause no surprise. Rather should attention be directed to the fact that the reports are as good as they are. Such reports as have just been made public would have been hailed with delight not so many years ago. One thing they prove conclusively, and that is that the growth of the country around the established lines of transportation has been such as to preclude any idea that a period of reorganization such as prevailed during the first part of the nineties could ever recur, provided the present method of managing railroad properties should be retained and should not give way to the financial highway robbery which brought ruin to so many roads when the depression began in 1892. It is not so much the increase in gross earnings as the density of the traffic, as indicated in the reports, which would seem to guarantee the future of the great majority of American railroads.

The great increase in local traffic, both passenger and freight, is the best assurance of the changed conditions, and that the railroads recognize the importance of nursing this source of revenue which is less affected by hard times than is through traffic is demonstrated by the tendency of the work of improvements, much of these being designed to aid local traffic conditions.

That in many cases net earnings show a falling off is in the main due to increased cost of operation. The importance of keeping down the expenses is recognized by every railroad manager, and it is therefore encouraging to note that their efforts have been successful, for the increases in expenses last year were not due to wasteful methods but to large increases in wages and cost of materials. These increases could not well be avoided, and it would not be fair to debit one year with this increase. The advances were the last direct result of the period of prosperity, and the railroads must have expected them and based their operations on the knowledge that they were inevitable. But advances in wages are not made every year. Consequently it is not to be expected that the coming year will show any increases from this source. Provided, then, that the average increase in gross earnings is maintained—and according to present reports it is almost certain that it will be more than maintained—net earnings during the current year should show up very much better and increases in operating expenses should be correspondingly lighter.

Another favorable factor in reducing the cost of operation during the coming year will be the cuts in the price of steel and steel products. Almost 75 per cent. of everything needed by a railroad for maintenance of way, of equipment, and of structures is made of steel or iron. With steel prices lower, the cost to the railroads should show a substantial saving. Aside from the actual cost of materials, it must be further remembered, as pointed out recently by Mr. Harriman, that the necessities of railroads are not as large as they were, and that last year deliveries were still being made of cars, locomotives, and materials ordered at the high prices.

Taking the reports separately, they will be found to be full of hopeful and interesting information. For instance, the establishment of 128 new factories of the most varied kind along the lines of the Norfolk and Western is an indication of the excellent work which is being done to originate new business for that road. In addition there were under construction 1,517 new coke ovens. The growth of the country tapped by the Norfolk and Western is further shown by the passenger traffic statistics, which show that, although the number of passengers carried increased 13.4 per cent., the average haul showed a decrease, which means that the people of that section are making a constantly greater use of the railroad for purposes of personal communication.

That the severe Winter of last year was largely responsible for heavy increases in expenses has been stated time and again, but what the exact consequences were is shown in the report of the Ontario and Western, which says that the cost of removing the snow along its lines was $66,204, or about twice the usual amount, while the loss of traffic following the long and frequent snow blockades, both on its own lines and its Western connections, cannot be estimated. Another effect was the increased cost of locomotive fuel, due partly to higher prices but largely to the severity of the weather. In this item there was an increase of $167,764. This demonstrates that the direct cost of the Winter to the Ontario and Western, with 760 miles of main line and sidings, was over $200,000, not a small item in itself.

KILLING OLEO TRADE.

Law Taxing the Butter Substitute Cuts Output to a Third.

Statistics compiled by the National Dairy Union for the fiscal year ended June 30 show that the oleomargerine industry is being rapidly killed by the law taxing the artifical product. There is a tax of a fourth of a cent a pound on oleomargerine free from artificial color, but all colored oleomargerine must pay a tax of 10 cents a pound. A severe blow to the industry was the recent decision of the Internal Revenue Commissioner that the use of palm oil in the manufacture of the product constituted an artificial coloring.

During the year ended June 30, 1904, the total output of oleomargerine was 48,071,480 pounds, against 71,804,102 the previous year. In the year ended June 30, 1902, before the passage of the law, the output was 126,316,472 pounds.

ROOSEVELT'S LETTER DEFENDS HIS ACTS

President Takes Up Panama and Civil Pensions.

DENIES ENCROACHMENTS

"Opponents Do Not Venture to Recite Facts," He Writes—Long Pleas for Tariff and Philippines Policies.

OYSTER BAY, Sept. 11.—President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance of the Republican nomination for President is as follows:

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 12, 1904.
The Hon. J. G. Cannon, Chairman of the Notification Committee:

My Dear Sir: I accept the nomination for the Presidency tendered me by the Republican National Convention, and cordially approve the platform adopted by it. In writing this letter there are certain points upon which I desire to lay especial stress.

It is difficult to find out from the utterances of our opponents what are the real issues upon which they propose to wage this campaign. It is not unfair to say that, having abandoned most of the principles upon which they have insisted during the last eight years, they now seem at a loss, both as to what it is that they really believe, and as to how firmly they shall assert their belief in anything. In fact, it is doubtful if they venture resolutely to press a single issue; as soon as they raise one they shrink from it and seek to explain it away. Such an attitude is the probably inevitable result of the effort to improvise convictions; for when thus improvised, it is natural that they should be held in a tentative manner.

The party now in control of the Government is troubled by no such difficulties. We do not have to guess at our own convictions, and then correct the guess if it seems unpopular. The principles which we profess are those in which we believe with heart and soul and strength. Men may differ from us, but they cannot accuse us of shiftiness or insincerity. The policies we have pursued are those which we earnestly hold as essential to the National welfare and repute. Our actions speak even louder than our words for the faith that is in us. We base our appeal upon what we have done and are doing, upon our record of administration and legislation during the last seven years, in which we have had complete control of the Government. We intend in the future to carry on the Government in the same way that we have carried it on in the past.

A party whose members are radically at variance on most vital issues, and, if united at all, are only united on issues where their attitude threatens widespread disaster to the whole country, cannot be trusted to govern in any matter. A party which, with facile ease, changes all its convictions before election cannot be trusted to adhere with tenacity to any principle after election. A party fit to govern must have convictions. In 1896 the Republican Party came into power, and in 1900 it retained power on certain definite pledges, each of which was scrupulously fulfilled. But in addition to meeting and solving the problems which were issues in these campaigns, it also became necessary to meet other problems which arose after election; and it is no small part of our claim to public confidence that these were solved with the same success that had attended the solution of those concerning which the battles at the polls were fought. In other words, our governmental efficiency proved equal not only to the tasks that were anticipated, but to doing each unanticipated task as it arose.

When the contest of 1896 was decided the question of the war with Spain was not an issue. When the contest of 1900 was decided, the shape which the Isthmian canal question ultimately took could not have been foreseen. But the same qualities which enabled those responsible for making and administering the laws at Washington to deal successfully with the tariff and the currency enabled them also to deal with the Spanish war; and the same qualities which enabled them to act wisely in the Philippines and in Cuba also enabled them to do their duty as regards the problems connected with the trusts and to secure the building of the Isthmian canal. We are content to rest our case before the American people upon the fact that to adherence to a lofty ideal we have added proved governmental efficiency. Therefore our promises may surely be trusted as regards any issue that is now before the people; and we may equally be trusted to deal with any problem which may hereafter arise.

So well has the work been done that our opponents do not venture to recite the facts about our policies or acts, and then oppose them. They attack them only when they have first misrepresented them; for a truthful recital would leave no room for adverse comment.

Recognition of Panama.

Panama offers an instance in point. Our opponents can criticise what we did in Panama only on condition of misstating what was done. The Administration behaved throughout not only with good faith, but with extraordinary patience and large generosity toward those with whom it dealt. It was also mindful of American interests. It acted in strict compliance with the law passed by Congress. Had not Panama been promptly recognized and the transit across the Isthmus kept open, in accordance with our treaty rights and obligations, there would have ensued endless guerrilla warfare and possibly foreign complications, while all chance of building the canal would have been deferred, certainly for years, perhaps for a generation or more. Criticism of the action in this matter is simply criticism of the only possible action which could have secured the building of the canal, as well as the peace and

MAINE ELECTION TO-DAY.

Democrats Expect to Reduce the Republican Majority.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 11.—As in Vermont last week, the only difference of opinion regarding the election in this State to-morrow is as to the size of the plurality for Governor. The Republicans claim from 15,000 to 25,000 for William T. Cobb, while the Democrats declare that anything less than 33,384, the plurality of 1900, will be a victory for them.

The campaign has been brief, brisk, and broad. It did not begin until the last of August, both parties had the benefit of National talent, while rallies were held in every county, all the cities, and a large number of towns.

It is generally conceded that these rallies were, as a rule, poorly attended. Nevertheless, the party managers confidently believe that the voters have kept well informed of the issues raised, and with good weather a large vote is anticipated.

The candidates opposed to Mr. Cobb for Governor are: Cyrus W. Davis of Waterville, Democratic; Nahan F. Woodbury of Auburn, Prohibitionist, and Wilbur G. Hapgood of Skowhegan, Socialist.

The Republican pluralities for Governor in the past six elections were as follows: 1892, 12,503; 1894, 38,917; 1896, 48,248; 1898, 24,415; 1900, 33,384; 1902, 25,247. The low-water mark for Republican pluralities in Maine was reached in 1892.

All four of the Republican Congressmen, Amos L. Allen, Charles E. Littlefield, Edwin C. Burleigh, and Llewllyn Powers, will be re-elected, probably by pluralities falling off in proportion to the expected falling off in the pluralities for Governor.

In the present State Senate of thirty-one members thirty are Republicans. The Democrats expect to hold their single seat, and to gain three more, but at the most conservative estimate the Republicans will control twenty-seven of the thirty-one seats, while in the House the Democrats cannot hope to have more than twenty-six seats out of a total of 151. At the present time the Democrats have but twenty seats in the General Assembly.

BEATEN BY FOOTPADS.

Two Men Attacked in a Vacant Lot and Robbed.

Charles Schneider of 244 Reid Avenue, Brooklyn, and George Teeters of Chambers Street and New Bowery were on their way home from North Beach last night, when in East One Hundredth Street, between First and Second Avenues, they were attacked, robbed, and beaten. Schneider lost $33 and Teeters $27. The two men say they came from North Beach on the ferry running to East Ninety-ninth Street. They left the boat and started to walk west through One Hundredth Street.

Between First and Second Avenues is a big vacant lot, in which a number of moving vans are stored at night. At about the middle of the block the tall billboard fence has been broken open at the bottom so that there is a place big enough for three or four men to walk through upright and abreast.

Schneider and Teeters had just reached that hole in the fence, when four men stepped out from behind the boards. They grabbed Schneider and Teeters, one in front and one behind each of them. Then they were throttled and forced back through the opening in the fence and into the lot.

Once they were inside six or eight other young fellows appeared from inside the moving vans and other points of shelter and joined the four that were throttling Schneider and Teeters. The two were thrown to the ground, rolled over and over, while their pockets were rifled of everything of value. Then they were led back to the opening in the street, where they were beaten and got a parting kick.

The two victims hunted up Policeman Gordon of the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Station, who sent them to the station house. After they had told their story, Detective Sergeant Illich and twelve reserves were turned out to surround the vacant lot. The police first routed out five young fellows who were found hiding in vans. These ran to First Avenue and One Hundred and First Street, where one of their number was positively identified as one of the four who had first attacked the complainants.

He described himself as Michael Kiernan of 1,909 Second Avenue.

Half a dozen others were routed out of the vans later, and one of them, Frank McNally, of 1,640 Third Avenue, was identified by Schneider and Teeters. They could not identify positively any of the others, so they were let go. McNally started to run, but a shot from Illich's revolver fired in the air stopped him. McNally and Kiernan were locked up.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY CHARGED.

Three Accused Men Arrested After Detectives Drew Pistols.

Joseph Kane, a driver, of 409 East Twenty-second Street; Louis Malloy, a laborer, of 419 East Twenty-second Street, and Edward Riley, alias Robert Moore, of 347 East Fifteenth Street, were arrested yesterday afternoon by Detective Sergeants Sullivan and Walsh of the East Twenty-second Street Station, charged with having assaulted and robbed George Alden of 494 First Avenue in the doorway of the building at 427 East Eighteenth Street.

Alden reported to the police that as he was passing that address the three men held him up and demanded his money. Upon his refusal to give up, he asserts that the trio pulled him into the hallway and, after beating him severely, robbed him of $8 in bills and some small change.

The three men were arrested an hour later in the saloon at Eighteenth Street and Avenue A, after a show of fight, during which the detectives say they had to draw their pistols. They declare that Malloy is wanted in Brooklyn by the police, and that Riley is an old-timer whom the police of Manhattan would like to see.

WHERE OLD MAIDS ARE FEW.

West Virginia the Only Eastern State in Which Men Outnumber Women.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—The fact is brought out in recent footings of census reports that West Virginia is the only State east of the Rocky Mountains that is short of its due quota of women.

Males are largely in excess of females and old maids are almost unknown. For every 521 males in the State there are 419 females. This condition is unusual in the eastern part of the country.

The average number of persons to a family in West Virginia is 5.1.

CONVENTION, IF FREE, WOULD NAME WOODRUFF

But Odell Controls, and He Favors Higgins.

THE GOVERNOR IS PERPLEXED

Worried by Disposition to Make Him Responsible for Higgins If Latter Is Chosen.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 11. — Governor-Chairman Odell had a problem to sleep on to-night. Desiring to bring about the nomination of Lieut. Gov. Frank Wayland Higgins for Governor, the Governor-Chairman finds that the real sentiment of the Republican State Convention, which will meet here Wednesday noon, is likely to be for the nomination of ex-Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff.

Leaders from some of the principal counties of the State who are here to-night have not hesitated to say that, while their delegations would be for whichever candidate Gov. Odell decides upon, they would be for Woodruff if left free to express their preference. There have been so many expressions of that sort and from men of such commanding influence in their own sections as to leave little doubt what the convention would do if it followed its own inclination.

Gov. Odell's espousal of Mr. Higgins's cause, it is generally understood, is due more to his desire to thwart the ambition of Mr. Woodruff, whose success he fears might be dangerous to his own supremacy in the organization, than it is to any love he bears for Higgins. The chief recommendation which the candidacy of Mr. Higgins is said to have in the eyes of the Governor-Chairman is the fact that Mr. Higgins is a man who, if elected Governor, would be quite unlikely to make any attempt to secure control of the machine, however independent of it he might see fit to be.

There is an evident disposition to put the responsibility for the nomination of Mr. Higgins, if he is to be nominated, on Gov. Odell. That is a phase of the situation which the Governor-Chairman does not relish, and it is giving him concern.

If he says the word, Higgins will be nominated, in the opinion of the best-informed politicians here, and their opinion is borne out by careful inquiry.

THE GOVERNOR'S DILEMMA.

If Higgins should be made the nominee through his dictation, and then should be defeated at the polls, Mr. Odell undoubtedly would be discredited with the organization. The Governor, therefore, has the alternative of two propositions before him. They are as follows:

1. Would it be better for me to bring about the nomination of Higgins, and take chances on his election for my vindication?

2. Or would it be better for me to permit the nomination of Woodruff, and rely upon his defeat to cement my power over the organization?

Those who know Gov. Odell best are decidedly inclined to the opinion that he will prefer the former of the two propositions.

If the Governor concludes to permit the nomination of Mr. Woodruff, in the opinion of those best informed it will only be because his information is such as to raise a serious doubt in his mind whether the Republicans will be able to carry the State. Their belief is that, if the Governor feels the chances are in favor of Republican victory, he will insist upon the nomination of Higgins in order to make certain that he will be able to retain his hold on the organization.

Gov. Odell and Senator Platt had a long talk to-day. Gov. Odell afterward announced that a conference of the Republican leaders would be held Tuesday.

"I have no doubt that at our conference we will be able to agree upon a candidate for Governor," the Governor said. "I find that the sentiment of the leaders and delegates already here is divided between Woodruff and Higgins. The situation at present appears to have narrowed down to those two, but it is not improbable that some other candidate, some man whose name has not yet been mentioned, may be selected. At the conference of leaders on Tuesday we will hear from all sections of the State, and will then be better able to judge what is best to be done."

"Do you regard all other candidates thus far mentioned, with the exception of Messrs. Higgins and Woodruff, as having been eliminated?"

"No, I did not intend to convey that inference. Knight or Fish would make an admirable candidate."

"What will be the distinguishing feature of the platform?"

"Its brevity."

WOODRUFF'S PUZZLING ATTITUDE.

Mr. Woodruff's demeanor is indicative either of perfect confidence in his success or of indifference. He professes a willingness to abide by the decision of the conference Tuesday, and William Berri, who is managing his campaign, said to-day that if the conference did not agree on Mr. Woodruff, it was altogether unlikely that Mr. Woodruff's name would be presented to the convention.

In view of the fact that both Mr. Woodruff and Mr. Berri understand better perhaps than any one else on the ground that the sentiment is largely with Woodruff, the complaisance which they are manifesting in the face of the activity of the Odell workers for Higgins is exciting curiosity. The general belief has been that if Mr. Woodruff found on his arrival here that he had the sentiment of the delegates behind him he would fight to the last ditch.

There was a conference late to-night in the rooms of Gov. Odell. Among those who attended were National Committeeman Ward, William C. Warren, Congressman Littauer, and Speaker Nixon. None of them would discuss what they had talked about when seen at the conclusion of the conference.

It was learned here to-night that Gov. Odell when he had stopped off at Albany on his way to Saratoga had seen and conferred with Lieut. Gov. Higgins. Great significance was attached to this conference by the politicians here.

They firmly believe that at the conference of leaders Tuesday the Governor-Chairman will urge that Higgins be made the nominee.

Gov. Odell and Senators Depew and Platt were weighed to-night. Gov. Odell tipped the beam at 180, Senator Depew at 215, and Senator Platt at 140.

"I am the heavyweight," remarked Senator Depew, when the scales record of the three had been obtained.

"Yes," remarked Senator Platt, "but I am nearest to the correct fighting weight."

THE CEDRIC IN, LOADED.

Brings 2,694 Passengers — Record for Steerage, It Is Said.

The big steamship Cedric, of the White Star Line landed 2,694 passengers in New York yesterday morning after a trip from Liverpool that was remarkable for the gales encountered from the time she left her home port until she passed Nantucket. On one day she was able to log only 286 miles.

Of the 2,694 passengers 2,162 were in the steerage. This number establishes a new record, it is said, for steerage passengers brought on one ship from an English port.

COLLISION DROWNS EIGHT.

Steamer Cuts Down a Launch in the Delaware—Four Escape.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 11.—Six men and two women were drowned in the Delaware River, opposite Andalusia, to-night when the steamer Columbia, owned by the Delaware River Navigation Company, cut down the steam launch Cricket, with twelve souls aboard. Three men and one woman were rescued.

The accident occurred at 7:20 o'clock, the hour being fixed by a watch carried by Thomas Dunn, which stopped on the instant after the crash, when everybody went overboard. It was reported at Burlington at midnight that two of the eight bodies had been recovered, but this was not confirmed.

The police tug Visitor, with grappling irons and dynamite aboard, started for the scene immediately after the news of the disaster was received. Margaret Dunn, the woman saved, was rescued by her husband.

Capt. H. L. Brown, manager of the Delaware River Navigation Company; President Nathan Haines, Capt. David Campbell, and the mates of the boat conferred in Burlington, N. J., and then signed the following statement:

"The Columbia was steaming up the river in centre stream. The launch was on the Jersey side, where, according to naval rules, she was supposed to remain. When less than one hundred yards distant she attempted to cross the Columbia's bow.

"Everything was done to stop the steamer, and had the pilot of the launch changed his course the accident could have been averted. The Captain of the launch was surely to blame for the collision.

"From all appearances there was no one at the helm, and the launch was running wild. The launch was disabled but did not sink, and was towed to the Pennsylvania shore and tied up to a wharf."

Following is the list of the Dead:

FORTESCUE, JOSEPH H., owner of the launch.

DUFFY, THOMAS, married; 918 Snyder Avenue.

AUDRET, WADE; 1829 North Twenty-eighth Street.

The survivors are: Thomas Dunn, 918 Snyder Avenue; Margaret Dunn, 918 Snyder Avenue; George Young, 1926 South Twelfth Street, and John Heston, 1114 Snyder Avenue.

GERMANIC GOES AGROUND.

The White Star liner Germanic of the International Mercantile Marine Company's fleet, which is temporarily running in the American Line service of the combine, went ground at the junction of the South and Swash Channels, in the the lower bay, about three-quarters of a mile off Sandy Hook, at 11:30 o'clock last night. The liner was bound in at the time from Southampton, from which port she sailed on Sept. 3.

A thick haze hung over the lower bay when the Germanic went aground, and the marine observers at Sandy Hook were unable to ascertain exactly what position she was in, although from what they could see they were led to believe that she was not in a bad position, and would probably be pulled back into deep water at high tide this morning.

A fleet of tugs was sent to her rescue and the work of getting the big vessel back into navigable water will begin early this morning at high tide, and it is expected that the liner will be able to reach her dock in time to land her passengers before 10 o'clock this morning.

The apparent cause of the Germanic's grounding was that her pilot held the vessel's course over too far on the south edge of the channel. When he perceived the danger of the liner grounding he evidently backed off and tried to go through the Swash Channel, and in doing so grounded his ship hard and fast about three-quarters of a mile east of the north beacon on Sandy Hook.

The report from the Hook this morning was that the sea was smooth and that the bow of the Germanic had swung completely around. Her stern, however, remained hard and fast aground.

Among the passengers on the Germanic are the Baron and Baroness von Kleydorff, Baroness Camille von Kleydorff, Mrs. T. J. Rhinelander, Mr. and Mrs. Winton C. Garrison, the Misses Mary H. and Gertrude L. Garrison, Stuart S. Ranney, Prof. and Mrs. James A. Harrison, Miss Annie Harrison, Mrs. Ira A. Shaler, Mrs. Peter White, R. E. James, and R. E. James, Jr.

Mr. Harroun gave the following list of banks holding paper alleged to be worthless: Commercial National, Chicago, $25,000; Mercantile National, New York, $59,000; Tootle-Lemon Bank, St. Joseph, $125,000; Union Trust Company, St. Louis, $100,000; National Bank of Commerce, Kansas City, $92,000; Whitney National Bank, New Orleans, $100,000, American National Bank, Kansas City, $100,000, and other unsecured creditors $200,000.

The American National Bank of Kansas City filed a suit to replevin 8,000 bushels of wheat now in custody of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad. The value of the wheat is placed at $8,000. Mr. Harroun said:

"I have been advised by my attorney to say nothing on the failure, and will not discuss it until a thorough understanding is reached."

A meeting of the creditors is to be held here and a concerted plan of action will be decided upon. At present it is almost impossible to determine what the assets of the company will amount to. It is said that proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy will be commenced early in the week in order that the creditors may share proportionately in the assets of the company.

"BLACK HAND" THREAT FULFILLED WITH BOMB

Fire in Tenement Follows Explosion in Barber's Shop.

TWENTY FAMILIES IN PERIL

Men and Women Taken Down Ladders When Third Avenue Building Is Wrecked.

The barber's shop of Joseph Stravelli at 417 Third Avenue, near Twenty-ninth Street, was wrecked by an explosion just before 1 o'clock this morning, and twenty families living in the five-story tenement house, in the ground floor of which was the barber's shop, were thrown into such a state of panic that many of them were taken down on ladders by firemen who responded to a still alarm.

One of the tenants, Anna Blake, sixteen years old, who lived on the fourth floor, ran to the roof of the house and in her fright tried to escape by crossing to the roof of 419. This is about one story lower than the roof of 417 and the girl jumped. She fell and broke her left arm, received several bad scalp wounds, and possible internal injuries. She was removed to Bellevue Hospital.

Joseph Stravelli is the Italian who about six weeks ago received a letter signed by a crudely drawn "Black Hand," in which he was ordered to deposit $500 between two stones at First Avenue and Thirty-eighth Street. The letter closed by saying, "If you do not leave the money you take care of yourself."

Stravelli at that time reported the case to Capt. Shire of the East Thirty-fifth Street Police Station and got permission to carry a revolver. The police said they investigated, but nothing was done.

William B. Robinson and Frank Ruppo were standing at Third Avenue and Thirtieth Street when they say they heard a terrific explosion and saw a great sheet of flame leap out of the front of Stravelli's barber's shop. Policeman McGreedy of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station was near by, and he saw the explosion and heard it as well. He ran to the quarters of Engine No. 16 and Hook and Ladder No. 27 and sent in a still alarm.

By the time the firemen got to the spot the tenants in the house were in an uproar and a state of panic. They clustered on the fire-escapes and begged the firemen and police to take them down. Ladders were run up and several of them were taken down that way, while others went to the roof and out and down a short ladder to the roof of 419 and then to the street.

The entire front of the barber's shop was blown out into the street. The ceiling was blown out and the side wall, separating the barber's shop from the hallway leading into the tenement house, was blown into a heap of debris in the hallway floor, thus blocking the escape of the tenants. The chairs and furniture in the shop were smashed into kindling wood.

The Stravelli family lived up stairs over the barber's shop. They all were in bed and asleep at the time of the explosion. Stravelli has six children, the oldest being Antonio, who is seven. He jumped from his bed with a scream at the time of the explosion, and leaped out of the front window onto the fire escape and thence into the street. He has not been seen since, but it is not thought he is injured.

The explosion could be heard through the block, and the tenants of houses on both sides of the street were routed out by the sound. They were much frightened.

The letter Stravelli received ran something like this:

"Dear Friend: We beg of you to put $500 at Thirty-eighth Street and First Avenue before next Wednesday. If you do not you had better take care of yourself."

This letter went on to say that the money was to be put between two stones at a given hour after midnight. It was signed with a crudely drawn and misshapen "black hand."

The family of Philip Price, consisting of his wife and four children, living on the floor above the shop, but on the opposite side of the hallway, were thrown from their beds by the force of the explosion.

The Stravelli youngsters and Mrs. Stravelli all were thrown out of bed, but none of them was hurt. Stravelli was not at home at the time, being down town at a party with friends.

Lillian Legine, eight years old, who lives on the second floor in the rear, was thrown from her bed. Her head struck the marble top of a washstand and was cut open.

Ernest Bessinger, a caller at the Price family, said he left about 9 o'clock. He says that as he went out he saw three Italians standing together in the tenement hallway. One of them was tall, with a big black mustache, and was dressed in a light suit and light fedora hat.

PANIC IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—In the middle of the morning service at Westminster Abbey today a loud explosion came from the north transept. The kneeling congregation was startled and a dangerous rush for the doors began.

The Rev. Canon Duckworth succeeded in reassuring the people and in preventing a panic.

It was discovered that the cause of the explosion was a firecracker. A label attached to it showed the explosion was the work of a fanatical adherent of the late John Kensit, the anti-ritualistic crusader.

The culprit escaped in the confusion.

AMERICAN STUDENT A "BOXER"

Leader of Rebellion in Kuangsi, China, Where Much Anxiety Is Felt.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 11.—Roy S. Anderson, Professor of English in the Soochow University in China, has written to friends here concerning Boxer uprisings in the province of Kuangsi.

"The rebels," he says, "are being led by Sun Vun, a student who lately returned from the United States. He received the degree of M. D. while there. He was called to Kuangsi about three weeks ago and the rebels elected him their leader.

"I don't know what the outcome of it will be, but it seems now to be affecting a good many parts of China. Great uneasiness is felt by foreigners especially on account of women and children.

"The Chinese have rebelled against the Government troops and the Government troops have surrendered right along voluntarily."

LONDON, Sept. 11.—The wedding of Mr. McCalman, an official of the Egyptian Government, and Constance, daughter of Sir James T. Ritchie, Lord Mayor of London, and niece of the ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer, was fixed for to-morrow.

Everything was prepared and costly presents were on exhibition at the Mansion House when last evening a letter from Mr. McCalman arrived breaking off the engagement. The bride is prostrate with distress.

Her brother says the mystery is inscrutable, and he has not the remotest idea why the engagement was broken off.

MASKED MEN HOLD UP TRAIN.

Six-Thousand-Dollar Robbery on the Canadian Pacific.

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 11.—The Canadian Pacific west-bound trans-continental express was held up by four masked men last night at 9:30 o'clock, four and a half miles west of Mission Junction. At the point of revolvers the express messenger was compelled to hand over the valuables and the safe was blown open with dynamite. The registered mail was also ransacked.

The robbers escaped to the bush and are supposed to have crossed the boundary. They secured about $6,000 from the safe.

MAD DOG SCARE IN ITHACA.

Dogs Bitten by Rabid Animal Bite Several Persons and Council Acts.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 11.—Two weeks ago a dog that was thought to be mad ran at large in this town, and bit a number of other dogs. It was killed and some of its saliva was taken to the Cornell Veterinary College, where a number of guineapigs were inoculated with it.

Yesterday the pigs began to show signs of rabies, and at the same time a number of dogs were seized with madness. Several people have been bitten.

A special meeting of the Common Council was called, and an ordinance passed providing for the killing of all unmuzzled dogs.

JUMPED INTO NIAGARA FALLS.

Women Saw Suicide Carried Past on His Trip to Death.

Special to The New York Times.

NIAGARA FALLS, Sept. 11.—Just before 7 o'clock this evening an unknown man committed suicide by going over the American Falls. Several women who were standing at Prospect Point were witnesses of it.

They saw him come floating down stream on his side, head first toward the fall, and before they could move or cry out he had passed from sight over the brink. They say he looked to be about forty years old, had light hair and wore a dark coat.

RAT TORE CHILD'S ARTERY.

Bit Wrist in Cradle—Father Saved Boy's Life.

While asleep in a cradle at the home of his parents, at 175 Newark Avenue, Jersey City, at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, Clifford Dias, eleven months old, was severely bitten on the right wrist by a big rat. Charles Dias, the child's father, who is property man at the Bijou Theatre, was aroused by the child's cries in time to see the rat scurrying to a hole in a corner of the room.

He quickly made a tourniquet of a handkerchief, which he applied to the wounded arm, and then carried the child to the City Hospital, where the wounds were dressed. The surgeons said the child's wrist was bitten in four places and that one of the main arteries was torn. Had it not been for the prompt action of Mr. Dias, they said, the child would have died.

RUSSIAN ANTI-JEWISH RIOTS.

Many Persons Injured — Houses and Shops Pillaged—Troops Called Out.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 11.—Anti-Semitic rioting occurred at Rovno in the Government of Volhynia on Sept. 4.

Many persons were injured and shops were pillaged.

A similar outbreak occured at Smela, in the Government of Kieff, where the troops were called out.

Ninety-eight houses and 145 shops were pillaged, and several persons were seriously and many slightly wounded by the troops.

Many of the rioters were arrested. The affair lasted for two days, Sept. 4 and Sept. 5.

BIG RUSSIAN FLEET SAILS FOR ORIENT

Seven Battleships and Five Cruisers Leave Kronstadt.

CZAR OVERRULED ADVICE

Some Experts Think Baltic Ships' Departure Should be Delayed.

ALEXIEFF AGAIN RESIGNS?

Emperor Said to be Undecided as to Whether to Accept Resignation—Many More Reserves Called Out.

KRONSTADT, Sept. 11.—The Baltic fleet sailed to-day for the Far East. The vessels of the fleet are as follows:

The battleships Kniaz Souvaroff, (Vice Admiral Rojestvensky's flagship;) Navarin, Sissoi Veliky, Borodino, Alexander III., Orel, and Oslabya, (Rear Admiral Voelkersam's flagship;) the cruisers Admiral Nakhimoff, Oleg, Dmitri Donskoi, Aurora, and Almaz, (Rear Admiral Enquist's flagship,) and several torpedo boats and destroyers.

The fleet will merely touch at Libau, where it will be joined by twelve transports, colliers, and supply ships already waiting there, and will then proceed direct to the Orient.

The scene on the departure of the fleet was an imposing one, for which the town had long waited. At dawn the first anchor was hoisted on the swift cruiser Aurora, which, accompanied by two torpedo boats, slipped out of the harbor. The town was awakened by the booming of the guns of the forts as the Aurora sped toward Libau in advance of the main squadron.

Czar Bids Admirals Farewell.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the time set for the departure of the remainder of the fleet, the imperial yacht, with the Emperor, Grand Duke Alexis, (the High Admiral,) and other high naval officers on board, put out from Peterhof, on the other side of the bay, with an escort of three torpedo boats. Admirals Rojestvensky, Voelkersam, and Enquist went on board the imperial yacht and personally said farewell to the Emperor.

Then, with destroyers ahead and abeam, the Kniatz Souvaroff led the squadron down the Gulf of Finland. The water front and the piers and forts were crowded with spectators. The ensigns on the forts and yachts were dipped and the guns of each chain of forts across the bay joined in an Admiral's salute, while from the signal masts above the forts fluttered a string of colored flags reading:

"Good luck to the Baltic fleet on its long voyage."

The weather all day had been alternating from clear to cloudy, but as the fleet left port there was a burst of sunshine, followed on the southern horizon by the blurr of a rain squall across the gulf.

Only a Short Stop at Libau.

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, Sept. 12.—(2:33 A. M.)—The departure of the Baltic fleet for the Far East is officially announced.

Admiral Birileff, commander of the naval forces at Kronstadt, will accompany the fleet as far as Libau, from which port the armada of almost forty vessels will sail almost immediately for the Orient.

The Admiralty does not state how long Admiral Rojestvensky will stop at Libau, but it is understood that it will be only for a few days.

The plan of the cruise has not been divulged, but it has been carefully mapped out. Colliers accompany the fleet for the purpose of supplying the torpedo boats and destroyers, whose steaming radius is small. Other colliers have already sailed or are awaiting orders at foreign ports to meet the squadron on the way. All the vessels are equipped with apparatus for coaling at sea.

The general opinion is that the vessels will go by way of Suez, but some rumors are that the Cape route will be taken.

To Prosecute the War to a Finish.

The decision of the Admiralty to send out the fleet in the face of the existing situation in the Far East is evidence of the temper of the Government to prosecute the war to a finish.

It is understood that there was considerable divergence of expert opinion on the question of delaying the sailing of the fleet until the Spring, but the Emperor turned the scale in favor of its immediate departure.

In this connection there are other war moves. The Emperor yesterday called to the colors the reserve troops in twenty-two circuits of the Governments of Kherson, Bessarabia, Ekaterinoslaff, and Taurida, belonging to the military district of Odessa, and also one category of reserve officers throughout the empire. In addition practically all the reserve officers of the navy have been called out.

Another Army Corps to Start.

The Emperor will leave about Sept. 17 for Kishineff and Odessa to bid farewell to the Eighth Army Corps.

The First Army Corps has arrived at Mukden.

At a meeting of the Emperor's military advisers on Saturday, War Minister Sakharoff recommended the sending of an additional 350,000 men to the Far East.

Thinks Ships Will Not Go Far.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 12.—The situation at Port Arthur, especially in view of the sailing from Kronstadt of the Baltic fleet, receives renewed attention in the newspapers.

Spenser Wilkinson, in The Morning Post, says it depends entirely on how long Port Arthur can hold out whether the Baltic fleet will be of any effect. The general tendency of the London morning newspapers, however, is to the belief that Port Arthur will soon be worn down by the tenacious attacks of the Japanese, while little importance is attached to the sailing of the Baltic fleet.

The Standard declares that the fleet will never get beyond Suez, but says that if, by any inconceivable chance, it should reach Chinese waters it would "only give Togo fresh opportunities for adding to his category of successes." The Standard says it cannot credit the Russian Government with any intention of "sending its last maritime reserve to destruction."

MOSTLY MODERN VESSELS.

Some of the Ships of the Baltic Fleet Only Just Completed.

The Baltic Squadron left Kronstadt on Aug. 23 for a trial cruise, and it was then said that the warships were not likely to return unless in the case of a serious breakdown, but that they would put into Libau, where they would be joined by auxiliary cruisers, colliers, and destroyers built at Libau and Reval. The fleet, however, returned to Kronstadt on Aug. 30. Reports that some of the vessels had been strained by the discharge of their heavy artillery were denied.

With the exception of the Oslabya, Navarin, and Sissoi Veliki, the battleships are of the most modern type. They are as follows:

Kniaz Souvaroff, launched in 1902, of 13,516 tons displacement, with an armament of four twelve-inch, twelve six-inch, and twenty three-inch guns, together with twenty three-pounders and six one-pounders.

Navarin, launched in 1891, of 10,206 tons displacement, carrying 4 twelve-inch, 8 six-inch, and 14 quick-firing guns and 4 one-pounders.

Sissoi Veliki, launched in 1894, of 10,400 tons displacement, carrying 4 twelve-inch, 6 six-inch, 12 1.8-inch, and 4 1.4-inch guns.

Boredino, launched in 1901, displacement 13,600 tons, with 4 twelve-inch, 12 six-inch, and 20 three-inch guns, 20 three-pounders, and 6 one-pounders.

Alexander III., launched in 1901, displacement 13,516 tons, with 4 twelve-inch, 12 six inch and 20 three-inch guns, together with 20 three-pounders and 6 one-pounders.

Oslebya, launched in 1898, of 12,674 tons displacement, with 4 ten-inch, 11 six-inch, 16 three-inch, 10 1.8-inch, and 17 1.4-inch guns, and 2 one pounders.

Orel, launched in 1902, of 13,600 tons displacement, with 4 twelve-inch, 12 six-inch, and 20 three-inch guns, 20 three-pounders, and 6 one-pounders.

Most of the cruisers are also new, the Almaz and Oleg having only just been completed. The Almaz is luxuriously fitted, and was at first intended as a yacht for Viceroy Alexieff. The cruisers are as follows:

Admiral Nakhimoff, launched in 1885, of 8,524 tons displacement, with eight 8-inch, ten 6-inch, and ten quick-firing guns, together with four three-pounders.

Dmitri Donskoi, launched in 1883, of 5,682 tons, with six 6-inch, ten 4.7-inch, and sixteen quick-firing guns and four one-pounders.

Oleg, launched in 1903, of 6,675 tons displacement, carrying twelve 6-inch, twelve 3-inch, and six 1.8-inch guns.

Aurora, launched in 1900, of 6,630 tons displacement, with eight 6-inch, twenty 3-inch, and eight 1.4-inch guns.

Almaz, launched in 1903, of 3,285 tons displacement, with six 4.7-inch, eight 1.8-inch, and two 1.4-inch guns.

ALEXIEFF MAY GO HOME.

Reported That the Czar Has Received the Viceroy's Resignation.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 12.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from St. Petersburg says it is understood that Viceroy Alexieff, in view of the paramount military exigencies in the Far East, has placed his resignation in the hands of the Emperor.

It is added that no decision in regard to the matter has yet been taken.

It was reported from St. Petersburg in the middle of April that Viceroy Alexieff had applied by telegraph to the Emperor to be relieved of his position. The manner in which he had been treated by Gen. Kuropatkin and Admiral Skrydleff, added to some snubs he had received from the Czar, were stated to be the causes of his resignation.

Later it was said that, to save appearances, the Viceroy might be allowed to remain in the Far East.

If Alexieff offered to resign at that time the Czar's decision not to accept the resignation would appear to have increased the tension between the Russian authorities in the Far East. Recent reports have been to the effect that the Viceroy had overruled various orders of Gen. Kuropatkin and that he has even prevented reinforcements from going to the south, sending them instead to Vladivostok because he expected the Japanese to make an attack there.

Alexieff left Vladivostok last week for Harbin. Afterward it was reported that he had started for Mukden. If he went there he may have had another dispute with Kuropatkin at the Russian headquarters.

KUROPATKIN'S ARMY IS STILL RETREATING

But Czar Is Said to Have Ordered Recapture of Liao-Yang.

Japanese Say Pen-Tai Mines Report That Gen. Mistchenko Was Killed Sept. 5—Oyama's Losses Around Liao-Yang 17,539.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 11.—The following dispatch from Field Marshal Oyama was received in Tokio on Friday:

"The enemy continues to retreat. His cavalry are now on a line from Hsili-Ho to Lia-san Kitse and Hung-ling-Pay, but there are no signs of the enemy southward of Menhu-Lutum.

"All the highlands eastward of Pan-kiao-Pau are dotted with rifle pits and also with objects resembling parapets, and scouts are posted.

"The main body of the enemy seems to have retreated north of the Hun River, but forces of uncertain magnitude are still at Ku-kia-Tse, Pa-kia-Tse, and the vicinity. The enemy destroyed the Sha-Ho bridge at Tatung-shan-Pau, and a force of his cavalry still holds Sande-Pu.

Russians Left 8,000 Dead.

"The Intelligence Department reports that the enemy transported over 10,000 wounded north of Mukden on Sept. 5, but there are as yet no means of estimating his total losses. There are evidences that during the fight he continued to carry off the dead. Nevertheless he left over 3,000 in the vicinity of Liao-Yang.

"When retreating from Liao-Yang he burned nearly all the warehouses and the railway station, but we took great quantities of provisions and other things. He barely succeeded in saving his guns, but was obliged to collect all the wagons with the ammunition near the warehouses, where he blew them up.

"Nevertheless in the entrenchments and forts he left quantities of ammunition so great that we have had no time to count it. We found a store for 15-centimeter Cahet guns, whence we infer that he possessed heavy artillery, but was unable to use it."

A further telegram from Marquis Oyama says:

"According to statements of prisoners and others, the enemy's force concentrated in the Liao-Yang region consisted of the Second, Fourth, Fifth, Tenth, and Seventeenth Army Corps, with portions of other armies. These were disposed as follows: One army northwest of Liao-Yang, two to the south, one opposing our right army, and one on the right bank of the Tai-Tse to the northeast.

"Gen. Stakelberg commanded in the Shu-shan-Pao quarter. Gen. Mistchenko at first commanded in the southwest, but was afterward transferred to the east when our right army crossed the Tai-Tse, after which the army originally posted on the right bank of the Tai-Tse was added to Gen. Mistchenko's forces.

"The Russian casualties from the battle of An-shan-Chan to the fall of Liao-Yang were certainly over 25,000.

"It is stated that Gen. Mistchenko was killed in a fight east of Liao-Yang on Sept. 3.

Dum-Dum Bullets Captured.

"The day preceding the battle of Liao-Yang the Russians prepared a number of cars at the railway station, whence, foreseeing disaster, they transported northward during three or four days the killed and wounded. They also sent weapons and military stores, burning quantities which they were unable to remove, but leaving large quantities of wagons and ammunition for guns and small arms, which fell into our hands together with some dum-dum bullets.

"Our troops have captured the Yen-Tai coal mine."

Reports from the field hospitals show that the Japanese casualties in the vicinity of Liao-Yang since Aug. 26 number 17,539, divided as follows: In the right army, (Kuroki's,) 4,886; in the centre army, (Nodzu's,) 4,992, and in the left army, (Oku's,) 7,681.

Fortifying Tie Pass.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 12.—A correspondent of The Daily Mail at Sin-min-Tin, cabling under date of Sept. 11, says:

"Gen. Kuropatkin has returned to Mukden after inspecting the fortifications at Tie Pass, which are not well advanced, but are being hurried on.

"At the same time dangerous and costly efforts to delay the Japanese advance are being made. I learn from a Russian source that this is the outcome of the Emperor's orders, and that the Emperor even peremptorily commanded Kuropatkin to retake Liao-Yang.

"There is no abatement in the retreat of the Russian troops northward.

"The noise of a fierce artillery engagement was heard south of Mukden Friday night.

The whole line of retreating Russians, when within five miles southeast of Mukden, was attacked by Japanese marksmen, who were invisible amid the millet. The Russian troops sent to Taping-Shen retreated with heavy loss.

"Chinese bandits are swarming in the district and have stopped traffic between Sin-min-Tin and Mukden, shooting and torturing to death Russian patrols."

ST. PETERSBURG, Monday, Sept. 12.—In a telegram to Emperor Nicholas, dated Sept. 10, Gen. Kuropatkin says:

"There were no hostilities to-day (Saturday) except insignificant patrol encounters, in which we sustained no casualties."

This very brief report constitutes the latest news from the front. The place at which the dispatch was filed is not indicated, but the report seems to show an almost entire suspension of active operations on both sides.

The few news dispatches drifting in all refer to phases of the last week's fighting which are already known.

TOKIO, Sept. 11.—Telegraphic reports received here from the headquarters of the Manchurian army state that the Japanese are in full possession of the Yen-Tai coal mines. The date upon which the Japanese occupied the mines is not given.

Gen. Kuroki, advancing to the northwest last Sunday and Monday, forced the Russians to retreat to Mukden.

Last Sunday night at 10 o'clock Gen. Kuroki's central column attacked a strong Russian force at Taitsako, east of Yen-Tai. After a night's fierce fighting the Russians were driven westward. Gen. Kuroki's left column, working west, occupied Lang-Pu on Sunday afternoon, the artillery shelling the retreating Russians for thirty or forty minutes.

MUKDEN, Sept. 11.—All is quiet in this region. It is understood that the main force of Japanese has retired to Yen-Tai.

A solemn service was held here to-day for the repose of the souls of those killed in action. It was attended by the entire staff and garrison.

A few distant shots were heard during the ceremony, but this did not disturb the solemnity of the service.

The weather is threatening, and more rain is expected.

JAPANESE USING AN AIRSHIP.

Chinese from Port Arthur Says a Foreigner Is Running the Balloon.

CHE-FOO, Sept. 11, (11 P. M.)—A Chinese who left Port Arthur the night of Sept. 6 arrived here to-day and reports that Japanese troops to the number of 5,000 control Louisa Bay, to the northwest of Port Arthur, and that the Japanese are in control also of Pigeon Bay, to the west of Port Arthur.

This Chinese wanted to leave from Pigeon Bay, but the Japanese would not allow him to do so. He was taken to Dalny, and on the way passed through five villages where detachments of Japanese troops numbering from 2,000 to 5,000 each were quartered.

He says the Japanese are making use of a balloon, which he describes as a cigar-shaped affair with a car suspended. He says that "a fat foreigner wearing a mustache" runs the balloon.

The Japanese intrenchments line the hills in every direction, and reinforcements are constantly arriving from Dalny. The Japanese hospitals at Dalny are filled with wounded, and transports are engaged in removing the wounded men to Japan as fast as possible.

According to the latest news received here the Russians on Sept. 4 shelled the Japanese covered trenches in front of Pali-Chwang and destroyed them. Everything was quiet along the entire line during the night of Sept. 4, but in the morning it was seen that the Japanese outposts had crept closer to the Russian lines.

One incident of the recent bombardment of Port Arthur was the striking of the roof of a hospital by a Japanese shell.

One small Russian scouting party succeeded in creeping close to the Japanese intrenchments on Corner Mountain, but the barking of dogs gave the alarm and prevented a further advance. Japanese reserves poured into the intrenchments and opened fire on the Russians, but a shell from a Russian battery landed in a trench and killed many of the Japanese and the remainder retired. This enabled the Russians to occupy the trench until dawn.

The trench evidently was unimportant, for the Japanese made no attempt to retake it and the Russian scouts withdrew shortly after daybreak.

The Port Arthur Novy Krai in a recent issue declared that a Japanese Colonel had been executed because he failed to occupy a certain position on Corner Hill within a specified time.

In its issue of Sept. 2 the same paper said that a Japanese torpedo boat struck a mine fourteen miles southeast of the harbor and sank, and that on the day after this occurrence the Japanese cruiser Itsukushima was damaged by a floating mine.

Copies of the Novy Krai, dated Sept. 5, 6, and 7, were received here to-day. Russian activity on the northeast front, which includes Rih-lung-Shan and Kik-wah-Shan, is noted by the paper, and the inference is drawn that an attack in that quarter is expected.

On Sept. 1 a fire partially destroyed the village of Pali-Chwang. Later the Russian artillery leveled a stone house and walls which the Japanese had been using for cover. The Japanese outposts thereupon were strengthened, and wires hung with bells were strung to sound an alarm in the case of a sudden attack.

The village of Chalitsets, which was in front of the parade ground, has also been destroyed, presumably by the Russians, although it is not so stated by the Novy Krai.

The Novy Krai relates a heroic sacrifice of life by a Japanese, who, it is believed, attempted to blow up a wall behind which Russians waited. The Japanese soldier calmly left a redoubt, carrying two boxes, and deliberately marched toward the Russians, who suffered him to approach. When he was quite near sharpshooters killed him. On investigation it was found that the boxes he carried contained lyddite with fuses carefully affixed.

CZAR ORDERS SPECIAL PRAYER.

God Implored to Touch the Hearts of the Enemy, Also to Confound Them.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 11.—The Official Messenger to-day publishes the following resolution, which was adopted by the Holy Synod:

"By virtue of an imperial ukase to the effect that during the present trials of our dear country, more ardent prayers should be offered for the victory of the Russian troops, who are worshippers of Christ, over a cruel enemy full of guile, the Holy Synod pronounces the time ripe for special prayers to be offered in all of the churches in the empire on Sundays and holidays after mass, beseeching that heavenly aid should be sent to the Russian Army, which is sacrificing its life for its faith, its Emperor, and its country, and praying for long life for the victorious troops and for the repose of the souls of the warriors who fall."

The following prayer has been specially ordained:

"Although unworthy, we implore Thee, Who art strong in battle, for aid, and humbly beseech Thee to accent our weapons in Thy cause, to give Thy Christ-loving army victory, and to permit it to subdue the enemy.

"Send from on high Thy hand and touch the hearts of the enemy so that they shall make supplication to Thee, the God of peace, who loves His creatures.

"Strengthen us with Thy might. Defender of the orthodox faith, and Thy arrows to confound the enemy. Strike them as with lightning and give them into the hands of Thy faithful troops.

"Thou who hearkened to Moses, bless the Emperor's doings, multiply his glory, and confirm his empire. By Thy almighty hand preserve his army. Send Thy angel to fortify his troops and give them salvation.

"Send peace upon us. May Thy invisible finger defend Thy servants, show them the right path, forgive them their sins, and bestow upon them the crown of glory.

"Grant the Emperor peaceful life and well-being, the fulfillment of his desires, and a conquest over his enemies."

The prayer also appeals to the Virgin and concludes by beseeching eternal rest for the dead and for all those who have laid down their lives for their faith and their country.

RUSSIAN WAR VESSEL IN 'FRISCO HARBOR

Transport Lena Put Into Port Ostensibly for Repairs.

AFTER RICH JAPANESE LINERS

American Fleet Under Admiral Goodrich Ordered to Remain at Golden Gate Until Further Notice.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 11.—The Russian transport Lena, Capt. Berlinsky, put into this port to-day for repairs.

The Lena is thirty-one days from Vladivostok, via Bayaiwa, Sakhalin Islands. She made the run from Bayaiwa in nineteen days, which is considered fast time. The Lena has a crew of 497 men and 21 officers and carries 23 guns. She has three funnels and three masts.

Capt. Berlinsky, who officially declares the Lena to be a transport, states that its engines and boilers are in need of repairs. After passing Quarantine the Lena anchored off the Union Iron Works, where she now lies.

An officer of the cruiser, however, stated that the Lena left Vladivostok on a cruising expedition, hoping to capture some of the trans-Pacific vessels carrying contraband of war. It was admitted that the vessel most eagerly sought for was the steamship America of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha, which company sent her from this port several weeks ago for the Orient. The America arrived safely at Hongkong Sept. 2.

Admiral Goodrich of the Pacific Squadron notified Washington of the Lena's arrival, and he received prompt orders to hold the squadron here until the departure of the Russian vessel. His squadron comprises the New York, Boston, Marblehead, and Bennington. They were ready to leave for Punta Arenas in the morning.

Manager B. A. Harnett of the Japanese steamship line, who was promptly warned of the arrival of the Russian vessel, cabled to his company in Yokohama to hold the America Maru until the Lena departs. The America Maru is now between Shanghai and Nagasaki on her way to this city.

Mr. Harnett's theory is that the Russian vessel was sent out from Vladivostok on a roving commission, to see if she could capture any Japanese vessels. He regards the story about trouble with the boilers as a ruse.

This is borne out by the fact that she ordinarily makes nineteen knots, but at a pinch can steam twenty-three knots, which would allow her to overhaul any vessels of the Japanese Line as well as most of the Pacific Mail and Occidental and Oriental steamers. She was formerly in the passenger traffic between Odessa and Kronstadt.

The Japanese quarter is buzzing like a hive of bees to-night. The Japanese are intensely excited over the arrival of this representative of their enemy's navy.

The Lena formerly was the Kherson of the Russian Volunteer Fleet. She has a speed of 18½ knots. Her hull is of steel and her displacement is of 10,223 tons.

She is 493 feet long, 54 feet 3 inches wide, and has a draught of 24 feet. She has two propellers. Her indicated horse power is 12,500. She was built at Hebburn, England, in 1895, and carries three 4.7-inch quick-firers and twenty smaller calibre guns.

Pilot McCulloch, who brought the Lena into port, says that chains were wrapped around her hull, indicating that some of her plates were loose.

MORE DETAILS OF BATTLE.

LONDON, Monday, Sept. 12.—The Morning Post's correspondent in the field with Gen. Kuroki describes the operations against Liao-Yang as twelve days of the hardest possible fighting and marching on short rations, with a temperature of 100 degrees in the shade, and frequent falls of rain. All of this, he says, was borne splendidly, though the men were worn out after the struggle. Recounting the general lines of fighting, the correspondent says:

"On Sept. 2, while the other armies were pressing Liao-Yang from the south, the turning force continued stubbornly fighting the stubborn foe, but slow advance was made, and step by step was the only advantage gained.

"On Sept. 3 the attack of the Japanese First Army had been checked. The enemy were much stronger than we, they having five divisions holding the northeastern heights. Our position for the time was critical, in view of the possibility that the enemy might have attacked us in force. But a mixed brigade and later the left column reinforced us, making our position safer.

"On Sept. 4 the enemy were in full retreat, and the First Army was ordered to pursue. Gen. Kuropatkin's retreat was masterly. He held the northeastern heights to the last possible moment and secured a safe retirement for his army and his guns."

Bennet Burleigh sends to The Daily Telegraph from the Japanese headquarters a long description of the fighting. He says:

"Gen. Kuroki, who was hotly attacked by Kuropatkin and was for a time in jeopardy, was unable to get astride the railway, otherwise Liao-Yang would have been a Sedan for the Russians.

"What surprised me more than anything else was the wonderful manner in which the Japanese continued for a whole week their awful bombardment of the Russian positions. It was the fiercest artillery attack, perhaps, in history. Tens of thousands of shells were thrown daily, but the supplies of them seemed inexhaustible. The Russians only replied spasmodically, but their rifle fire was often the heavier.

"It must be said for the Japanese that, although they fight with the utmost fierceness, daring, and courage, they battle, not like madmen, but with their heads, and they obey their officers in all straits."

Mr. Burleigh testifies, as other correspondents have done, that the Japanese are continually drafting fresh men into the fighting ranks, and remarks how marvelously they took fortifications when capture appeared to be impossible. He asserts that it was Kuroki's dangerous position that compelled the other Japanese armies to force the fighting, and says that it was partly the shell fire and partly, also, Russian incendiarism that produced the conflagration in the Russian quarter of Liao-Yang, the incendiarism probably being the act of drunken soldiers.

"The Muscovites presented a most dejected appearance in the retreat," continues Mr. Burleigh. "The men are of good material, but the officers lack many necessary qualities. The war is most unpopular with all the Russian soldiers. In Japan it is just the reverse. I learn that the Russians have heavily fortified their lines forty miles north of Mukden, where they intend making a desperate stand.

"Undoubtedly the Japanese intend taking Mukden, probably within three weeks. They already are half way through the mountains with a temporary narrow-gauge railway.

"The dread Cossack cavalry are a myth which the Japanese infantry despise. The Russians made absolutely no use of their masses of horsemen."

Mr. Burleigh ascribes to the Japanese dislike of all foreigners, among other reasons, the hindrance placed on many correspondents, who are precluded from doing their duty or honest work. Neither correspondents nor attachés are permitted to approach nearer than six miles to the fighting, and only those who break away are able to join the firing lines. The correspondents, he says, would like to return on account of these restrictions, and the attachés privately express the deepest disappointment.

"Kuroki had to withstand a fierce assault by half the Russian troops," says Mr. Burleigh, "and for two days it was nip and tuck to keep his ground. That I saw, and also repeated Russian attempts to cut in between Kuroki and Nodzu.

"In truth, matters were serious all around for twenty-four hours, and only Oku's magnificent assaults saved the situation and prevented Kuroki from having to make a retrograde movement. And more lies behind this. It was not the headquarters staff, whose operations appear slow, particularly in pursuits, but the wonderful soldiers and young officers of Japan, who freely drenched plain and hills with their life's blood.

"I fear that the losses to both the Russians and the Japanese are near thirty thousand men each."

Another Correspondent Captured.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—A Daily Telegraph correspondent, Mr. Simpson, who was with the Russians at Liao-Yang, reports that he has been captured by the Japanese.

"POLICEMAN" LOCKED UP.

Took Two Women to Headquarters—Asked Bribe, They Say.

A man who said he was Ignatz Nuka, twenty-nine years old, a jeweler at 108 Allen Street, was locked up at Police Headquarters last night, charged with disorderly conduct. The complainants against him are Sadie Goldman of 289 East Thirteenth Street, and Netchie Diamond of 348 East Fifteenth Street. The women say that as they were leaving Huber's Museum in Fourteenth Street last night they were approached by Nuka, who told them they were under arrest and that he would have to bring them to Police Headquarters.

They started with him and declare that when they reached University Place Nuka offered to release them if they would pay him $5. They refused and continued on their way to Mulberry Street.

Arriving at Police Headquarters, Nuka pushed the girls up the steps, and was making his way along the corridor with them when Detective Sergeant Downing came along and asked what was the matter. Nuka said that he was a policeman and that the girls were under arrest. Downing asked him to produce his shield. This Nuka refused to do and Downing locked him up.

MISSES MOTHER, SHOOTS SELF.

Eighteen-Year-Old Boy Angry When Scolded—Wound Said to be Fatal.

William La Dier, eighteen years old, of New Springville, Richmond Borough, shot at his mother late last night, and then shot himself. The mother was not hurt, but the young man is said to be fatally hurt.

La Dier is a son of William La Dier, a butcher. He was away from home all of yesterday. When he returned last night his mother scolded him. There were a few hot words, and the boy ran to his room and got a shotgun. He fired twice into the parlor, where his mother was, but she escaped injury. He then turned the gun on himself, and the charge carried away a portion of his forehead. At midnight an ambulance was started from New Dorp to take him to the nearest hospital at New Brighton, a drive of twelve miles.

After Whisky, Got Fatal Poison Dose.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 11.—After eating supper this evening, Anton Spies, sixty-three years of age, went to a closet to get a drink of whiskey. In the darkness he got hold of the wrong bottle and swallowed a dose of a solution of cyanide of potassium. He died in a few hours.

SHOT MAN IN HER ROOM AT A BROADWAY HOTEL

W. L. Ferguson, Theatrical Agent, Wounded, and May Die.

AN ACCIDENT, SAYS WOMAN

Bellboy Heard Mrs. Roberts Order Victim Out and Saw Struggle—Separated from Husband, She Says.

Warren J. Ferguson, thirty-eight years old, advance agent for Spencer & Aborn's production of "M'liss," was shot and probably fatally wounded yesterday morning by a young woman who said she was Mrs. Gertrude Roberts. The shooting was done in the woman's room on the third floor of the Metropolitan Hotel, Broadway and Twenty-seventh Street, with a weapon that was a present from the man. A quarrel had first taken place.

Ferguson was business manager for "The Fortune Teller" last year, and this Summer was ticket taker at a Coney Island park. About a week ago he left that employment to become advance agent for Nellie McHenry.

He met Mrs. Roberts three years ago at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. Mrs. Roberts was then with her husband, but they have since separated. Mr. Roberts is now living in Detroit.

The revolver used by Mrs. Roberts was 22-calibre. If Ferguson recovers it will be because of the diminutive size of the pistol, for its muzzle was against his right breast when the shot was fired, and the bullet cut through his lung. He was taken to the New York Hospital.

Coroner Scholer saw Ferguson at the hospital and obtained an ante-mortem statement. The man declined to accuse Mrs. Roberts of having shot him, and would say nothing as to the cause of the quarrel.

Charles Hill, a negro bellboy, was the only one in the hotel who knew anything of the actual circumstances of the shooting. He was on duty at 9:20 o'clock yesterday morning when Mrs. Roberts rang the bell violently. He hurried up stairs, and when he reached the hall in front of her room he heard angry voices within.

"The door opened just as I got there," he said. "Mrs. Roberts was pushing Mr. Ferguson toward the door when I looked in, using her right hand. In her left hand she had a revolver.

"'Leave this room,' I heard her tell him. 'You've got no business in here, and if don't get out I'll shoot you.'"

Instead of leaving, Ferguson, according to Hill, tried to seize the pistol. He forced the woman back, and the bellboy jumped behind the door just as she fired. Ferguson sank forward, falling upon her. Hill grabbed the revolver from the woman, and then rushed to the office of Dr. Phillips of 39 West Twenty-seventh Street. Dr. Phillips saw that Ferguson's wound was serious, and an ambulance call was sent to the New York Hospital.

Before Ferguson was removed Policeman Callagy reached the hotel. He found Mrs. Roberts in the down-stairs office, and took her back to the room, where the doctor was working over the wounded man. At first Ferguson declared that he had shot himself. The next moment, however, he turned reproachfully to the woman and asked:

"Why did you shoot me, Gertie?"

"I had to," the woman replied. "It was my life or yours."

To Capt. Cottrell of the Tenderloin Station the woman said that she and Ferguson had been out Saturday night together and that she returned to the hotel first about 5 o'clock. When he came in a little later he came to her room. They had several drinks, and then he began to abuse her, she said. She ordered him out, and he went to his own apartment, two doors away, but returned in a few minutes.

"I warned him to leave the room," the woman said, "and told him that I would shoot if he didn't go. I rang for a bellboy to make him leave. Then he grabbed me, and my pistol went off. He attacked me, and I meant to frighten him. I was acting in self-defense, but I did not mean to shoot him."

Mrs. Roberts was asked if the fact that Ferguson was to have left the city to-day had precipitated the quarrel. This she denied. Admitting that she had known Ferguson for several years, she said that they had not seen each other for a considerable time until very recently, when she happened to meet him on Broadway, and he went to the hotel where she was staying and took a room.

"He never did anything for me," she said. "I've paid a lot of bills for him."

She repeated her statement later to Assistant District Attorney Garvan.

At the hotel it was said that both Ferguson and Mrs. Roberts had been drinking, and the police said the woman showed signs of drink when she was locked up in the West Thirtieth Street Station. The charge was felonious assault.

In a second talk Capt. Cottrell had with her, she told him that she was twenty-four years of age, and came of an excellent family in Rochester, but refused to give the name of her parents. She was married in Rochester, she said, in June, 1898, and lived with her husband until August of that year, when they separated. She met Ferguson at the Pan-American Exposition and they were frequently together, but she lost sight of him when he left the city. She admitted that the name of "Gertrude Roberts" was fictitious, but refused to tell her real name.

FAIRBANKS AT OCEAN GROVE.

Criticism Follows First Sunday Political Reception Held in Auditorium.

Special to The New York Times.

OCEAN GROVE, N. J., Sept. 11.—Senator Fairbanks, Republican candidate for Vice President, spent the night last night with Gov. Franklin Murphy at the latter's country seat at Elberon. Senator Scott of West Virginia and Senator Dryden of New Jersey accompanied Mr. Fairbanks to Elberon. This morning the four drove to Asbury Park and later appeared at the Auditorium, where the closing exercises of the Summer were being held.

Gov. Murphy was dressed in white flannel, and his attire attracted the attention of an usher, who, discovering the identity of the party, escorted them to seats on the platform. The service was in progress when they arrived.

At its close Bishop James N. FitzGerald, who presided, declared that the Methodist Episcopal Church was loyal to the Government, and delighted in honoring those in authority in Church and Nation. He then announced the presence of the Governor's party and called each up in turn and introduced them to the audience. The Governor and the three Senators received the handkerchief salute. After the benediction Senator Fairbanks held a reception on the platform and later stood within the chancel and shook hands with the congregation as they passed before him.

It is the first time in the history of Ocean Grove that a reception of this sort has been held in the Auditorium on Sunday, and adverse criticism of the management for permitting it to-day is general. Senator Fairbanks and his party returned to Elberon this afternoon and will remain there as Gov. Murphy's guests until to-morrow.

Novel Paris Fabrics For Autumn Gowns

Paris is not going to send the elaborate novelties this year for which she has been famed in the past. Her dressmakers have decided that the plain fabrics shall have highest favor. But not all women can be dictated to even by fashion; and for this reason designers have produced some charming fabrics of unique character without being eccentric or elaborate. So we have these materials which while conservative and refined are distinctly novelties.

One fabric is in Shepherd's plaids of pronounced black and white checks, on which have been thrown woven raised buttons of mohair in black and navy blue.

The cloth is 47 inches wide, and $3.50 a yard. A similar idea has been carried out in cloths of other grounds having polka-dots in various fancy colors, at $2 a yard and upwards.

Another novelty effect is produced with Venetians and other cloths which are perforated in fancy designs, and the perforations decorated by a border in a velvet effect.

These cloths are in shades of pigeon gray, gazelle, tan and a light pink; 47 in. wide, $2.50 a yard. These are the most pronounced effects in the new fabrics, and are most interesting, as they may be made up in practically any design that the weaver desires.

Rotunda.

Women's Tourist Coats

A variety of styles are grouped, for easier description, under this general head. Some of the coats at once suggest motoring—they're of leather, trimmed with leather in a contrasting color. $40.

Others are of tan covert cloth—loose, with inverted plaits in back; belt, and patch pockets with buttons. $18. These may be used for street wear as well as for traveling.

Still another group consists of coats of rough tweed, and other stylish mixtures, built along the same general lines as the preceding coats; but hardly suitable for city wear. These are $25, $28, and so on.

The coats range from hip to three-quarter lengths, and form a very interesting showing.

Blankets and Down Quilts Winter Warmth and September Economies

This great annual event is announced to our public this morning. For almost a generation the WANAMAKER Store has been working with the manufacturers for the betterment of blankets and other bed-coverings. The best blanket mills from California to Massachusetts vie in producing the splendid stocks now ready.

Many years ago we realized the impossibility of getting Down Quilts properly made in the general market, and we became our own manufacturers with results that make the WANAMAKER Down Quilts simply unmatchable anywhere. The down is carefully selected and thoroughly sterilized. Our Quilts are not only the maximum of comfort and luxury, but absolutely fresh and hygienic.

quiet which we were by treaty bound to preserve along the line of transit across the Isthmus. The service rendered this country in securing the perpetual right to construct, maintain, operate, and defend the canal was so great that our opponents do not venture to raise the issue in straightforward fashion; for if so raised there would be no issue. The decisive action which brought about this beneficent result was the exercise by the President of the powers vested in him, and in him alone, by the Constitution—the power to recognize foreign Governments by entering into diplomatic relations with them and the power to make treaties which, when ratified by the Senate, become under the Constitution part of the supreme law of the land. Neither in this nor in any other matter has there been the slightest failure to live up to the Constitution in letter and in spirit. But the Constitution must be observed positively as well as negatively. The President's duty is to serve the country in accordance with the Constitution; and I should be derelict in my duty if I used a false construction of the Constitution as a shield for weakness and timidity or as an excuse for governmental impotence.

Foreign Policy.

Similar misrepresentation is the one weapon of our opponents in regard to our foreign policy, and the way the navy has been made useful is carrying out this policy. Here, again, all that we ask is that they truthfully state what has been done, and then say whether or not they object to it; for if continued in power we shall continue our foreign policy and our handling of the navy on exactly the same lines in the future as in the past. To what phase of our foreign policy, and to what use of the navy, do our opponents object? Do they object to the way in which the Monroe Doctrine has been strengthened and upheld? Never before has this doctrine been acquiesced in abroad as it is now, and yet, while upholding the rights of the weaker American republics against foreign aggression, the Administration has lost no opportunity to point out to these republics that those who seek equity should come with clean hands, and that whoever claims liberty as a right must accept responsibilities that go with the exercise of rights. Do our opponents object to what was done in reference to the petition of American citizens against the Kishineff massacre, or to the protest against the treatment of the Jews in Roumania, or to the efforts that have been made in behalf of the Armenians in Turkey? No other Administration in our history, no other Government in the world, has more consistently stood for the broadest spirit of brotherhood in our common humanity, or has held a more resolute attitude of protest against every wrong that outraged the civilization of this age; at home or abroad. Do our opponents object to the fact that the international tribunal at The Hague was rescued from impotence, and turned into a potent instrument for peace among the nations? Germany constantly has used that tribunal, and advocated its use by others, in pursuance of its policy to promote the cause of international peace and good-will by all honorable methods. In carrying out this policy, it has settled disputes after dispute by arbitration or by friendly agreement. It has behaved toward all nations, strong or weak, with courtesy, dignity, and justice, and it is now on excellent terms with all.

The Use of the Navy.

Do our opponents object to the settlement of the Alaska boundary line? Do they object to the fact that after freeing Cuba we gave her reciprocal trade advantages with the United States, while at the same time keeping naval stations in the island and providing against its sinking into chaos, or being conquered by any foreign power? Do they object to the fact that our flag now flies over Porto Rico? Do they object to the acquisition of Hawaii? Once they "hauled down" our flag there; we have hoisted it again; do they intend once more to haul it down? Do they object to the part we played in China? Do they not know that the voice of the United States would now count for nothing in the Far East if we had abandoned the Philippines and refused to do what we have done in China? Do they object to the fact that this Government secured a peaceful settlement of the troubles in Venezuela two years ago? Do they object to the presence of the ship-railway on the Isthmus, when the work broke out in Panama, and when only the presence of this ship saved the lives of American citizens, and prevented insult to the flag? Do they object to the fact that the American warships appeared promptly at the Port of Beirut when an effort had been made to assassinate an American official, and in the Port of Tangier when an American citizen had been abducted, and that in each case the wrong complained of was righted and expiated, and that within the last few days the visit of an American squadron to Smyrna was followed by the long-delayed concession of their just rights to those Americans concerned in educational work in Turkey? Do they object to the trade treaty with China, so full of advantage for the American people in the future? Do they object to the fact that the ships carrying the National flag now have a higher standard than ever before in marksmanship, and in seamanship, as individual units and as component parts of squadrons and fleets? If they object to any or all of these things, we join issue with them. Our foreign policy has been not only highly advantageous to the United States, but hardly less advantageous to the world as a whole. Peace and good-will have followed its footsteps. The Government has shown itself no less anxious to respect the rights of others than insistent that the rights of Americans be respected in return. As for the navy, it has been and is now the most potent guarantee of peace, and it is such chiefly because it is formidable, and ready for use.

The Pension Order.

When our opponents speak of "encroachments" by the Executive upon the authority of Congress or the Judiciary, apparently the act they ordinarily have in view is Pension Order No. 78, issued under the authority of existing law. This order directed that hereafter any veteran of the civil war who had reached the age of sixty-two should be presumptively entitled to the pension of $6 a month, given under the department pension law to those whose capacity to earn their livelihood by manual labor has been decreased 50 per cent., and that by the time the age of seventy was reached the presumption should be that the physical disability was complete; the age being treated as an evidential fact in each case. This order was made in the performance of a duty imposed upon the President by an Act of Congress, which requires the Executive to make regulations to govern the subordinates of the Pension Office in determining who are entitled to pensions.

Congress has already exercised this power by a regulation which declared that seventy-five should be set as the age at which total disability should be conclusively assumed. Similarly President McKinley established sixty-five as the age at which half disability should be conclusively presumed. The regulation now in question, in the exercise of the same power, supplemented these regulations made under Presidents Cleveland and McKinley.

The men who fought for union and for liberty in the years from 1861 to 1865 not only saved this Nation from ruin, but rendered an inestimable service to all mankind. We of the United States owe the fact that to-day we have a country to what they did, and the Nation has decreed by law that no one of them, if disabled from earning his own living, shall lack the pension to which he is entitled, not only as a matter of gratitude, but as a matter of justice. It is the policy of the Republican Party, steadily continued through many years, to treat the veterans of the civil war in a spirit of broad liberality. The order in question carried out this policy, and is justified not merely on legal grounds, but also on grounds of public morality. It is a matter of common knowledge that when the average man who depends for his wages upon bodily labor has reached the age of sixty-two his earning ability is in all probability not half what it was when he was in his prime; and that by the time he has reached the age of seventy he has probably lost all earning ability. If there is doubt upon this point let the doubter examine the employes doing manual labor in any great manufactory or on any great railroad, and find out how large is the proportion of men between the ages of sixty-two and seventy, and whether these men are still employed at the highly paid tasks which they did in their prime. As a matter of fact, many railroads pension their employes when they have reached these ages, and in nations where old age pensions prevail they always begin somewhere between the two limits set. It is easy to test our opponents' sincerity in this matter. The order in question has been in force for more than two years. Let our opponents point out a single case in which it has been improperly applied, and we will promptly have it corrected.

In addition to those acts of the Administration which they venture to assail only after misrepresenting them, there are others which they dare not overtly or officially attack, and yet which they covertly bring forward as reasons for the overthrow of the party. In certain great centres and with certain great interests our opponents make every effort to show that the settlement of the anthracite coal strike by the individual act of the President and the successful suit against the Northern Securities Company—the merger suit—undertaken by the Department of Justice, were acts because of which the present Administration should be thrown from power. Yet they dare not openly condemn either act. They dare not in any authoritative or formal manner say that in either case wrong was done or error committed in the method of action or in the choice of instruments for putting that action into effect. But what they dare not manfully assert in open day they seek to use furtively and through special agents. It is perhaps natural that an attack so conducted should be made sometimes on the ground that too much, sometimes on the ground that too little, has been done. Some of our opponents complain because under the anti-trust and inter-State commerce laws suits were undertaken which have been successful; others because suits were not undertaken which would have been unsuccessful. The Democratic State Convention in New York dealt with the anthracite coal strike by demanding in deliberate and formal fashion that the National Government should take possession of the coal fields; yet champions of that convention's cause now condemn the fact that there was any action by the President at all—though they must know that it was only this action by the President which prevented the movement for National ownership of the coal fields from gaining what might well have been an irresistible impetus. Such mutually destructive criticisms furnish an adequate measure of the chance for coherent action or constructive legislation if our opponents should be given power.

The Gold Standard.

So much for what our opponents openly or covertly advance in the way of an attack on the acts of the Administration. When we come to consider the policies for which they profess to stand we are met with the difficulty always arising when statements of policy are so made that they can be interpreted in different ways. On some of the vital questions that have confronted the American people in the last decade our opponents take the position that silence is the best possible way to convey their views. They contend that their future action in regard to questions of which what others have accomplished entitles them to be made the custodians of the financial honor and commercial interests which they have but recently sought to ruin. Being unable to agree among themselves as to whether the gold standard is a curse or a blessing, and as to whether we ought or ought not to have free and unlimited coinage of silver, they have apparently thought it expedient to avoid any committal on these subjects, and individually each to follow his particular bent. Their nearest approach to a majority judgment seems to be that it is now inexpedient to assert their convictions one way or the other, and that the establishment of the gold standard by the Republican Party should not be disturbed unless there is an extension of the relative quantity of production of silver and gold. Men who hold sincere convictions on vital questions can respect equally sincere men with whose views they radically differ; and men may confess a change of view without compromising their honor or their self-respect. But it is difficult to respect an attitude of mind such as has been fairly described above; and where there is no respect there can be no trust. A policy with so slender a basis of principle would not stand the strain of a single year of business adversity.

We, on the contrary, believe in the gold standard as fixed by the usage and verdict of the business world, and in a sound monetary system as matters of principle; as matters not of momentary political expediency, but of permanent public policy. In 1896 and again in 1900 far-sighted men, without regard to their party fealty in the past, joined to work against what they regarded as a debased monetary system. The policies which they championed have been steadfastly adhered to by the Administration; and by the act of March 14, 1900, Congress established the single gold standard as the measure of our monetary value. That act received the support of every Republican in the House and of every Republican except one in the Senate. Of our opponents, eleven supported it in the House and two in the Senate, and one hundred and fifty-one voted in the House and twenty-eight in the Senate. The record of the last seven years proves that the party now in power can be trusted to take the additional action necessary to improve and strengthen our monetary system, and that our opponents cannot be so trusted. The fundamental fact is that in a popular government such as ours no policy is irrevocably settled by law unless the people keep in control the Government by which the law is to be enforced. That is the reason why I believe in that policy as a matter of deep-rooted conviction. Laws can always be revoked; it is the spirit and the purpose of those responsible for their enactment and administration which give long continued and unchangeable. It is idle to say that the monetary standard of the Nation is irrevocably fixed so long as the party which at the last election cast approximately 46 per cent. of the total vote refuses to put in its platform any statement that the question is settled. A determination to remain silent cannot be accepted as equivalent to a recantation. Until our opponents as a party explicitly adopt the views which we hold and upon which we have acted and are acting in the matter of a sound currency the only real way to keep the question from becoming unsettled is to keep the Republican Party in power.

Capital and Labor.

As for what our opponents say in reference to capital and labor, individual or corporate, here again all we need by way of answer is to point to what we have actually done, and to say that if continued in power we shall continue to carry out the policy we have been pursuing and to execute the laws as resolutely and fearlessly in the future as we have executed them in the past. In my speech of acceptance I said:

"We recognize the organization of capital and the organization of labor as natural outcomes of our industrial system. Each kind of organization is to be favored so long as it acts in a spirit of justice and of regard for the rights of others. Each is to be granted the full protection of the law, and each in turn is to be held to a strict obedience to the law; for no man is above it and no man below it. The humblest individual is to have his rights safeguarded as scrupulously as those of the strongest organization, for each is to receive justice, no more and no less. The problems with which we have to deal in our modern industrial and social life are manifold, but the spirit in which it is necessary to approach their solution is simply the spirit of honesty, of courage, and of common sense."

The action of the Attorney General in enforcing the anti-trust and inter-State commerce laws, and the action of the last Congress in enlarging the scope of the Interstate commerce law, and in creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, with a Bureau of Corporations, have for the first time opened a chance for the National Government as regards these matters adequately with the questions affecting society, whether for good or for evil, because of the accumulation of capital in great corporations, and because of the new relations caused thereby. These laws are now being administered with entire efficiency; and as in their working, need is shown for amendment or addition to them—whether better to secure the proper publicity, or better to guarantee the rights of shippers, or in any other direction—this need will be met. It is now asserted, that the common law, as developed, affords a complete legal remedy against monopolies. There is the common law of the United States. Its rules can be enforced only by the State courts and officers. No Federal court or officer could take any action whatever under them. It was this fact, coupled with the inability of the States to control trusts and monopolies, which led to the passage of the Federal statutes known as the Sherman Anti-Trust act and the Inter-State Commerce act; and it is only through the exercise of the powers conferred by these acts, and by the statutes of the last Congress supplementing them, that the National Government acquires any jurisdiction over the subject. To say that no action against trusts and monopolies should be limited to the application of the common law is equivalent to saying that the National Government should take no action whatever to regulate them.

Undoubtedly, the multiplication of trusts and their increase in power has been largely due to the "failure of officials charged with the duty of enforcing the law to take the necessary procedure." Such stricture upon the failure of the officials of the National Government to do their duty in this matter is certainly not wholly undeserved as far as the Administration preceding President McKinley's is concerned; but it has no application at all to Republican Administration. It is also undoubtedly true that what is most needed is officials having both the disposition and the courage to enforce the law when the facts warrant it, and yet not to enforce it in such a way as to do more harm than good. Whether the Administration has been so clear that there is no excuse for misrepresenting it, and no ground for opposing it unless misrepresented. Within the limits defined by the National Constitution the National Administration has sought to secure to each man the full enjoyment of his right to live his life and dispose of his property and his labor as he deems best, so long as he wrongs no one else. It has shown in effective fashion that in endeavoring to make good this guarantee it treats all men, rich or poor, whatever their creed, their color, or their birthplace, as standing alike before the law. Under our form of government the sphere in which the Nation as distinguished from the State can act is narrowly circumscribed; but within that sphere all that could be done has been done. All thinking men are aware of the restrictions upon the power of action of the National Government in such matters. Being ourselves mindful of them, we have been scrupulously careful on the one hand to be moderate in our promises, and on the other hand to keep these promises in letter and in spirit. Our opponents have been hampered by no such considerations. They have promised, and many of them now promise, action which they could by no possibility take in the exercise of constitutional power, and which, if attempted, would bring business to a standstill; they have used, and often now use, language of wild invective and appeal to all the baser passions which tend to excite one set of Americans against their fellow-Americans; and yet whenever they have had power they have fittingly supplemented this extravagance of promise by absolute nullity in performance.

Equal Treatment for Americans.

This Government is based upon the fundamental idea that each man, no matter what his occupation, his race, or his religious belief, is entitled to be treated on his worth as a man, and neither favored nor discriminated against because of any accident in his position. Even here at home there is painful difficulty in the effort to realize this ideal; and the attempt to secure from other nations acknowledgment of it sometimes encounters obstacles that are well nigh insuperable; for there are many peoples in every possession of the ages have not yet reached that point where the principles which Americans regard as axiomatic obtain any recognition whatever. One of the chief difficulties in connection with certain American citizens of foreign birth, or of particular creed, who desire to travel abroad, Russia, for instance, refuses to admit and protect Jews. Turkey refuses to admit and protect certain classes of Christians. This Government has consistently demanded equal protection abroad for all American citizens, whether native or naturalized. On March 27, 1899, Secretary Hay sent a letter of instruction to all the diplomatic and consular officers of the United States, in which he said: "This Department does not discriminate between native-born and naturalized citizens in according them protection. They are abroad, equality of treatment being required by the laws of the United States." These orders to our agents abroad have been repeated again and again, and are treated as the fundamental rule of conduct laid down for them, proceeding upon the theory "that all naturalized citizens of the United States while in foreign countries, are entitled to and must receive from this Government the same protection of persons and property which is accorded to native-born citizens." In issuing passports the State Department never discriminates, on account of race, color, or religion, in granting to every American citizen, native or naturalized, Christian or Jew, the same passport, so far as it has power it insists that all foreign Governments shall accept the passport as conferring no privilege on the person therein described is a citizen of the United States and entitled to protection as such. It is a standing order to every American diplomatic and consular officer to protect to the uttermost every American citizen, whatever faith, from unjust molestation; and our officers abroad have been stringently required to comply with this order. Under such circumstances, the demand of our opponents that negotiations be begun to secure equal treatment of all Americans from those Governments which do not now accord it, shows either ignorance of the facts or unwillingness to change policy in the method or manner of negotiations would aid effectiveness to what the State Department has done and is doing. The steady pressure which the Department has been keeping up in the past will be continued in the future. This Administration has on all proper occasions given clear expression to the belief of the American people that discrimination and oppression because of religious views, wherever practiced, are acts of injustice before God and man; and in making evident to the world the depth of American convictions in this regard we have gone to the very limit of diplomatic usage.

It is a striking evidence of our opponents' insincerity in this matter that with their demand for radical action by the State Department coupled with a demand for reduction in our small military establishment. Yet they must know that the heed paid to our protests against ill-treatment of our citizens will be exactly proportionate to the belief in our ability to make these protests effective should the need arise.

Civil Service.

Our opponents have now declared themselves in favor of the civil service law, the repeal of which they demanded in 1900 and in 1896. If consistent, they should have gone one step further and congratulated the country upon the way in which the civil service law is now administered and the way in which the classified service has been extended. The exceptions from examinations are fewer by far than ever before, and are confined to individual cases where the application of rules would be impracticable, unwise, unjust, or unnecessary. The administration of the great body of the classified civil service is free from politics, and appointments and removals have been put upon a business basis. Statistics show that there is little difference between the tenure of the Federal classified employes and that of the employes of private business corporations. Less than 1 per cent. of the classified employes are over seventy years of age, and in the main the service rendered is vigorous and efficient. Where the merit system was, of course, most needed was in the Philippine Islands; and the civil service of our more advanced type has there been put into operation and scrupulously observed. Without one exception, every appointment in the Philippines has been made in accordance with the principles which obtain in the States, and where, if they are sincere, their triumph would mean disaster to the country. But exactly as it is impossible to call attention to the present promises and past record of our opponents without seeming offensive, so it is impossible to compare their platform with their other and later official utterances and not create doubt as to their sincerity. In their private or unofficial addresses many of them frankly advance this insincerity as a merit, taking the position that as regards the points on which I am about to speak they have been false to their own promises or of departing from the policies now established, and that therefore they can be trusted not to abuse the power they seek.

The Tariff.

When we take up the great question of the tariff we are at once confronted by the doubt as to whether our opponents do or do not mean what they say. They say that "protection is robbery" and promise to carry themselves accordingly if they are given power. Yet prominent persons among them assert that they do not really mean this and that if they come into power they will adopt our policy as regards the tariff, with the modification that they consider that it is safe to give them partial power, because the power would be only partial, and therefore they would not be able to do mischief. The last is certainly a curious plea to advance on behalf of a party seeking to obtain control of the Government.

At the outset it is worth while to say a word as to the attempt to identify the question of tariff revision or tariff reduction with a solution of the trust question. This is always a sign of desire to avoid any real effort to deal adequately with the trust question. In speaking on this point at Minneapolis, on April 4, 1903, I said:

"The question of tariff revision, speaking broadly, stands wholly apart from the question of dealing with the trusts. No change in tariff duties can have any substantial effect in solving the anti-trust problem. Certain great trusts or great corporations are wholly unaffected by the tariff. Almost all the others that are of any importance have as a matter of fact numerous smaller American competitors, and of course a change in the tariff which would work injury to the large corporation would work not merely injury but destruction to its smaller competitors, and equally of course such a change would mean disaster to all the wageworkers connected with either the large or small corporations. From the standpoint of those interested in the solution of the trust problem such a change would therefore merely mean that the trust was relieved of the competition of its weaker American competitors, and thrown only into competition with foreign competitors, and that the first effect would be to foster the trust at the expense of the wageworker. Finally, we come to certain matters upon which our opponents do in their platform of principles definitely take issue with us

HURRIED NIGHT CONFAB OF LEADERS AT ESOPUS

SECRECY OBSERVED BY ALL

Democratic Candidate Still Determined to Make Only Occasional Visits to New York.

Special to The New York Times.

ROSLYN MOUNT, Esopus, N. Y., Sept. 12, (Monday.)—August Belmont arrived here on a late train last night, and a conference began at once between himself, William F. Sheehan, and Judge Parker. That affairs of import to the Democratic cause are being discussed is certain.

Mr. Sheehan departed from the house on the hill at 1 o'clock, going to his home, Atwood, two miles south of here, on the road to Highland. The Scout, Mr. Belmont's yacht, has just steamed up the river, and is now at this hour (1:30 A. M.) anchored off Rosemount Landing.

Mr. Belmont is still in conference with the candidate.

What problems are being discussed none of the trio will say. After the conference had gone on for some time ex-Lieut. Gov. Sheehan was seen and questioned as to what was going on. "There is nothing to be said," was his answer.

When asked if the question of the Judge's going to New York was being thrashed again, Mr. Sheehan said:

"Whatever Judge Parker said this afternoon about that is the situation. Whatever he told you will have to be sufficient. The situation is not changed to my knowledge."

According to the latest information obtainable, the best that any of the supporters of the plan can expect just now is the presence of the candidate in New York for two or three days. That period of two or three days may come this week, or perhaps not for a month yet.

The coming of Mr. Belmont was as carefully guarded as precautions by masters of that art could make it. He was met at the depot by the candidate's carriage and driven to the house on the hill with all the secrecy possible.

As the carriage passed the lodge, where the darkness is so intense that one's hand cannot be seen at arm's length, inquiry was made if it was Mr. Sheehan, as his return to his home just south of here was expected any minute. From the lodge door if could not at first be determined which direction the carriage faced. The answer came that it was not Mr. Sheehan.

The carriage proceeded on up the hill. When inquiry was made at the residence as to who had arrived there was a fine array of evasive answers and a clever display of sidestepping.

"Why, some local politicians have been here," was the answer. "Then Mr. Rodie and Mr. Meyer were here also, you know."

Only after several minutes was it admitted that Mr. Belmont was at Rosemount. He was then conferring with Judge Parker and Mr. Sheehan.

The condition of the campaign machinery was again declared to be excellent here to-day. It was reiterated that the most valiant and valuable work was being done by all the Democratic forces, and not one complaint could be lodged against anybody for laxness or failure to take advantage of opportunities.

There have been reports that Messrs. Rodie and Meyer made their all-night stay at Rosemount in order to point out that relations were not altogether cordial between the State and National Committees. It was impossible to find any responsible leader who would concede that such reports had an iota of truth in them.

There is every expectation here that ex-Senator Henry G. Davis will visit his running mate before the end of the week.

The Eighth Massachusetts, en route for Albany from the bloodless battle of Bull Run, passed through Esopus shortly after 9 o'clock this morning. Their train of a half dozen cars was at the station when Judge Parker drove up to take the train for Kingston.

The candidate was caught sight of in his carriage with Mrs. Parker before he had come under the large campaign banner in front of the Valley House. Desultory cheering began. As the occupants of the vehicle came alongside the platform the boys recently engaged in the struggles of the Blue and Brown tumbled out of the cars and at company front saluted the nominee.

Judge Parker was surrounded by a half dozen officers, and then discipline was thrown to the winds and the Bay State soldiers crowded about for a handshake. They were gratified in the main, only the arrival of the train which was to bear the candidate to church breaking up the demonstration.

COCKRAN CHIEF ORATOR.

Wigwam Plans Its Big Parker Rally at Tammany Hall.

Tammany has arranged for its big Parker and Davis ratification meeting to be held at the Wigwam on Wednesday evening of this week. James W. Gerard, Chairman of the Tammany Campaign Committee, will preside at the meeting in the hall, while elaborate arrangements have been completed for the overflow meetings.

The plans provide for a meeting with only Tammany men for orators. Tickets of admission will not be required, and all will be welcome. Congressman W. Bourke Cockran is announced as the orator of the evening, the other speakers to include Senator Thomas F. Grady, Justice George F. Roesch, M. Warley Platzek, Congressmen Sulzer, Harrison, and Goldfogle, John J. Delany, James Lindsay Gordon, Alfred J. Talley, Wauhope Lynn, Thomas C. T. Crain, ex-Senator T. C. O'Sullivan, Charles L. Guy, John M. Quinn, Water Register Savage, Dr. William J. O'Sullivan, Maurice B. Blumenthal, F. O. Dottmann, Carl P. Hangi, Henry W. Wolf, William M. Klein, Justice Zeller, Gotthardt A. Litthauer, and Maurice Ellinger.

There will be four outdoor meetings, including a German meeting at Fourteenth Street and Irving Place and an Italian meeting at Irving Place and Fifteenth Street. Antonio Zucca will preside at the Italian meeting, and Charles G. F. Wahle at the German meeting. Stands will be erected on each side of the entrance to Tammany Hall, where Daniel F. Cohalan and Ferdinand Levy will speak. The Sixty-ninth Regiment Band will furnish the music for the indoor meeting, and each outdoor meeting also will have a band. There will be fireworks also for the outdoor meetings. Each of the meetings will open at 7:30 o'clock.

TWO YOUNG OCTOGENARIANS.

Mr. Davis, Aged 81, and Mr. Whyte, Aged 80, to Stump Together.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—West Virginia will have a unique and interesting experience in listening to the stump speeches of two of the oldest men in public life when ex-Gov. William Pinckney Whyte of Maryland and ex-Senator H. G. Davis together make the tour of the State. Mr. Davis has arranged with Mr. Whyte in the last few days to stump the New Dominion.

The two are old and warm friends. Mr. Whyte is eighty and Mr. Davis eighty-one. They will travel together in Mr. Davis's private car, and will speak from the same platform, making twenty appointments for set speeches in various parts of the State.

POSTAL OFFICIAL A SUICIDE.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—The dead body of David P. Leibhardt, the Superintendent of the Dead-Letter Office of the Post Office Department, was found to-night by one of the watchmen who was making his rounds just after midnight. Evidently it was a case of suicide. There was a bullet hole in the right temple, while a pistol with one or more barrels discharged lay on the floor beside him.

Mr. Leibhardt was about sixty years old. He was a native of Indiana.

PEACE SERMON FOR PRESIDENT.

Little Less Arbitration and More Testament, Preacher Suggests.

OYSTER BAY, Sept. 11.—No official visitors were received by President Roosevelt to-day. Accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt and several of the children, the President attended the morning service at Christ Episcopal Church, where he listened to a sermon on "The Peace of the World," delivered by the rector, the Rev. H. H. Washburn.

Dr. Washburn maintained that the peace of the world could be insured only by the universal adoption of the principles underlying the precepts of righteousness. International arbitration, he indicated, was a long step in the right direction, but it had been proved that it does not overcome the powers of nature as exemplified in men. Of itself it would not prevent internecine strife or abolish the horrors of war.

"Not that efforts should be lessened," he said, "to accomplish if possible by arbitration the settlement of international differences, but, more than this in every civilized nation, legislation must regard the principles underlying all precepts of righteousness as contained in the Old and New Testaments."

President Roosevelt expects a visit tomorrow evening from Senator Charles W. Fairbanks, his running mate on the National ticket. He and Senator Fairbanks will receive returns from the Maine election at Sagamore Hill.

REPUBLICANS READY NOW.

State Openings to Follow on Heels of President's Letter.

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—A number of State Chairmen are being called in to see Chairman Cortelyou, who has been in Chicago for the past week.

State openings will follow rapidly on the issuance of the President's letter. Michigan, Washington, and Montana will begin on Sept. 15, Nebraska and West Virginia on Sept. 17, Indiana and Iowa on Sept. 20, Pennsylvania on Sept. 21, Minnesota on Sept. 24, and Ohio on Oct. 1. In Missouri and Kansas work already has begun.

KEARNS ABANDONS FIGHT.

Utah Senator Gives Up Re-election to Fight Mormonism.

SALT LAKE, Sept. 11.—Senator Kearns has abandoned the contest for re-election to the United States Senate. This morning the Tribune, which he owns, contained the following announcement:

"The Tribune is authorized by Senator Kearns to state for him unequivocally that he is not now nor will he be during the session of the forthcoming Utah Legislature, under any circumstances a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate.

"This statement he hopes will be taken as evidence of his intention to personally, persistently and unselfishly advocate and advance by all honorable means the movement now on foot in Utah to purify the politics of the State from apostolic domination and to secure to the people of Utah the political freedom which of right should be theirs."

If a Republican Legislature is elected Senator Kearns will probably be succeeded by ex-Congressman George Sutherland, who was born a Mormon, but left the Church. He was for a time an uncompromising opponent of Smoot, but became his supporter coincidently with his own candidacy for the Senate.

ANARCHISTS' BIG RALLY.

Most and Emma Goldman Speak for Movement in Russia.

The Anarchists held a rally last night at the Grand Irving Hall, in Broome Street, in support of the Anarchistic movement in Russia. The hall was packed. Emma Goldman, Herr Most, and others made speches. About a hundred policemen and detectives were scattered throughout the hall. It was the biggest Anarchistic meeting, it is said, that was ever held in this city.

It was strenuously denied that it had any reference to the assassination of President McKinley, although it was held at a time marking the anniversary of the days the stricken President hovered between life and death as the result of the assassin's bullet.

The meeting was opened by Isaac Isaacs, editor of "Free Society." The first speaker introduced was "Comrade" Kelly of London, an "International anarchist" who, in slipping into this country, escaped the fate of Turner, the other London "Red," who was arrested while at a meeting at the Murray Hill Lyceum, and later deported.

"Comrade" Kelly said that the time was ripe for an extension of the Anarchistic propaganda in Russia.

Emma Goldman spoke next.

"We will not be much better off in America," she said, "than the people are in Russia, as long as a spark of Government remains. Freedom has been dead in America for a hundred years, and capitalism swings the knout here as bravely as that weapon ever was wielded in Darkest Russia. I tell you we will need more heroes and greater heroes than in Russia to make this country free."

Herr Most was the last speaker.

"It is not probable," he said, "that there will be a social revolution in Russia for a long time, because the army is too big and they have too many policemen; but as a matter of revenge it is highly satisfactory to know that we can chuck a bomb at a Romanoff or a de Plehve. If we cannot do the army, we can strike at the personification of the whole rotten system—the Czar."

DEFIED CROWD WITH AN AXE.

He Had Attacked His Father's Housekeeper—Now He May Die.

Special to The New York Times.

VINELAND, N. J., Sept. 11.—Five hundred persons were called to Boulevard and Pear Street this afternoon to dislodge Charles Dawson, so that he could receive medical aid. He and his brother Edward went to the home of their father, William Dawson, and, tearing the clothing from the housekeeper's back, threw the garments out of the window, together with the crockery and furniture.

The housekeeper's son ran screaming from the house, and broke thirteen window lights before he succeeded in felling Charles Dawson with a brickbat. Dawson rushed across the street to his own residence, barricaded the door, and threatened all comers with an axe. After a time he fell exhausted from his wounds. Dr. Cunningham was admitted and is now trying to save his life. It is said the Dawson boys were jealous of the housekeeper because of a report that the father had willed to her all his property.

MOB AROUND FIGHTERS.

Police Reserves Called for Row Started by Italians.

Partisans of two Italians who had slashed each other in a quarrel yesterday afternoon attempted to mob the men and the ambulance surgeon who was dressing their wounds outside the drug store at One Hundred and Thirteenth Street and First Avenue. Police reserves quelled the disorder.

One of the men, Michael Pasadino, was sent to the Harlem Hospital under arrest, and the other, Antonio Ambrosa, was locked up in the East One Hundred and Fourth Street Police Station, charged with felonious assault.

The fight began on the first floor of the tenement at 336 East One Hundred and Thirteenth Street. Pasadino is alleged to have attacked Amorosa with an axe. Amorosa then slashed his opponent with a knife.

At one time, the police say, there were 1,500 men in front of the drugstore.

Grand Army Veteran Drowned.

Harvey Ross, sixty-two years of age, a laborer and a Grand Army veteran, fell overboard from the pier at West Ninety-sixth Street yesterday afternoon and was drowned. The police have been unable to learn where he lived or whether he left any relatives.

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS TO MEET IN CONFERENCE

Remaining Two Months' Campaign to be Planned.

JUDGE PARKER TO COME, MAYBE

Senator Gorman Expected To-day—Henry G. Davis Has a Quiet Sunday.

Beginning to-day there will be a general conference of the Democratic campaign managers to canvass the National situation and lay out a general plan of action to be followed in the two months of campaigning that are ahead before the election. Ex-Senator Davis, the Vice Presidential candidate, already is in this city. Senator Gorman of Maryland is expected, and there is a strong probability that Judge Parker himself may be here to-morrow or Wednesday for a day or two in order to go over matters with his managers.

Senator Gorman may arrive here this afternoon and join ex-Senator Davis. They will spend their time at National headquarters with Chairman Taggart, Vice Chairman Nicoll, Executive Chairman Sheehan, and August Belmont. It has not yet been determined how long Senator Gorman will stay in town, but the presumption is that he will remain three or four weeks, if not until election.

At National headquarters it is the expectation that Senator Gorman will take a desk there and make it his headquarters until the campaign is closed. Both Chairman Taggart and Executive Chairman Sheehan look to Senator Gorman to aid them greatly in the task of systematizing the work of the National Committee, because of his experience in the first Cleveland campaign of 1884, when he was Chairman of the National Committee.

Mr. Davis will remain until Thursday or Friday of this week. The Senator spent a quiet day yesterday at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. He arose at 7:30 o'clock, as is his custom, and after breakfast with Secretary Hendley, he read the papers, and then received Chairman Taggart of the National Committee, with whom he was closeted for some time. The Senator remained at the hotel practically all day, going out for a short walk in the evening with his secretary. He saw his grandson, Stephen B. Elkins, Jr., son of Senator Elkins of West Virginia, during the day, and also Thomas Davis, a nephew.

The Senator said that he would be at National Headquarters during the day today, and would receive party men there for several days, as well as going over the campaign work in general. He was not sure last night whether Judge Parker would be down this week or not, but if the Judge does not appear in New York before it comes time for Senator Davis to return to West Virginia, the Vice Presidential candidate will probably make a second pilgrimage to Esopus.

TEXAS GAMBLERS DEFY POLICE.

Withstand Siege Behind Barred Doors and Dictate Terms of Surrender.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Sept. 11.—Police Commissioner Blaylock and Chief of Police Knight declared war on public gambling houses months ago, and the gambling house managers defied them. Knight says there are seventeen big gambling houses and scores of minor "joints" in operation in Dallas.

Last night some of his secret service men, after months of effort, succeeded in gaining entrance into several rooms, among the number the Coney Island, Dan Stuart's old place. Thirty-four men were arrested there.

At midnight Billy Strong's place, "The Branch," was attacked, but the doors were barred against the police. Chief Knight and twenty of his men surrounded the place and held it in siege until 5 o'clock this morning, when the chief threatened to break in, and eighty-three beleaguered men agreed to surrender if permitted to plead guilty, deposit money to pay fines, and promise to obey the law.

The offer of compromise was accepted rather than continue the siege scene throughout the Sabbath.

WOMEN SAW PISTOL DUEL.

Men Blazed Away at Each Other Near Crowded Brooklyn Park.

An impromptu pistol duel between two men caused intense excitement in a crowd of women and children in City Park, Brooklyn, late yesterday afternoon. The shooting ended after four shots, when one of the men received a bullet in the left arm.

The men were Leonard Infranz, twenty-three years old, who lives in Leonard Street, and Peter Adams, thirty-two years old, of 105 Navy Street. Infranz is a baker and Adams a mechanic. The two met yesterday afternoon at Park Avenue and Navy Street and stood talking together for some time. A quarrel arose between them and in an instant the pair started to blaze away at each other.

The park, which is in a tenement district, was filled with women and children enjoying a Sunday airing. Some one telephoned to the police, and several men were sent around from the Adams Street Station in the patrol wagon. They arrested Infranz and had Adams removed to the Brooklyn Hospital.

KILLED IN BOXING BOUT.

Death Ends Friendly Match in Atlantic City Boardwalk Cafe.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept. 11.—In a friendly boxing bout in a Boardwalk café to-day Alexander Tilghman, a waiter, was killed by a body blow. His opponent was Robert Glenn, a fellow waiter, who had challenged him to a friendly match. They had been boxing but a few minutes before Glenn feinted with his left and landed a light blow on Tilghman's heart. Friends who surrounded the party thought Tilghman was shamming, and urged him to get up and box.

While they waited for him to rise, Tilghman gasped and rolled over dead. Then physicians were sent for. At the post-mortem examination a large break was found in the ventricle directly under the place where the blow had landed. Glenn was half crazy with grief, as both men were on the best of terms. Tilghman was the sole support of his aged mother. After investigation the authorities declined to hold Glenn, as the affair was accidental.

SOLDIER'S DRAM WAS POISON.

Fort Slocum Sergeant Killed by What He Thought Was Whisky.

NEW ROCHELLE, Sept. 11.—Frank Doyle, a Sergeant at Fort Slocum, returned from a furlough the other day and said he felt "shaky." A soldier told him where he could find a bottle of whisky. Doyle went to the hiding place and, finding a flask, took a long drink. The flask contained a mixture of kerosene and carbolic acid that had been prepared for vermin, and which had been left near the whisky flask.

Doyle became ill at once. He died in the fort hospital yesterday. His body was sent to his home in Ontario to-day.

His term of enlistment would have expired soon. He and his "bunkie" had selected a gold claim while serving in Alaska, and Doyle was going there in the Spring.

SUBWAY TAVERN IS NON-UNION.

Labor Leader Shocked When He Found Barkeeper Didn't Belong.

The Subway Tavern, which Bishop Potter dedicated, has non-union bartenders and sells non-union cigars, according to James Ryan, delegate to the Central Federated Union from the Photo Engravers' Union.

"I went to the Subway Tavern to have a drink," he told the Central Federated Union yesterday, "and what do you think I saw first?"

"I give it up," said a delegate.

"The first thing I saw was a non-union bartender."

Ryan said he ordered a glass of beer which tasted like union beer. Then he bought a cigar and saw that it was taken from a box which did not bear the union label. He asked the bartender what all this meant, and the bartender referred him to the manager. When he asked the manager why he did not sell union cigars, the reply was that the union label did not guarantee the cigars to be of the first quality. The manager said, however, that he had no objection to buying union cigars, and asked Ryan to see that a supply was sent to the Tavern.

Chicago Pastor Uses Sharp Language About the Subway Saloon.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—"Bishop Potter's Holy Gin Mill" was the subject of a sermon by the Rev. Frederick E. Hopkins in the Pilgrim Congregational Church to-day. He said, in part:

"The plea that because the upper class indulges an evil appetite the lower class is entitled to the same enjoyment is a logical absurdity. The lower class represents the capacity of public sentiment. Instead of imitating, it can and ought to reach the upper class and correct its errors.

"The Bishop knows that Jesus began with fishermen, and by them converted Kings. As long as villainy in disguise is more dangerous than shameless vice, so long will no one but a fool argue that if a man is going to drink he had better use pure liquor than cheap liquor.

"If Bishop Potter knows 'Cobweb Hall,' in Duane Street, he can find there the men who, ten years ago, started at the marble bar in the Fifth Avenue Hotel. To argue that the saloon is here, and we must make the best of it is a wonderful exhibition of cowardice."

LAST RITES SAID IN STREET.

Priest Prayed While Policeman Worked Over Car Victim.

An unidentified man of middle age, apparently a laborer, was run over by a south-bound Ninth Avenue surface car about 12:15 o'clock this morning at Thirty-first Street. His left leg was cut off just above the knee.

While Policeman Goldman of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station made a tourniquet with the leather thong of his night stick and lessened the flow of blood, the Rev. Father Gleason of St. Michael's Roman Catholic Church, in front of which the accident happened, administered the last rites. The man was taken to Roosevelt Hospital, where it was said he probably will die.

Policeman Goldman said that Motorman Donohue, after running over the man, did not bring his car to a stop for some distance. Goldman pulled Donohue off the platform, and then sent in a hurry call to Roosevelt Hospital. Five minutes after a second hurry call was sent in. The police say that it was nearly half an hour before the ambulance came.

In the man's clothing was found an envelope, soiled and frayed, on which was the address "John Dineen, 523 East One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street."

JAILED FOR KILLING NEGRO.

Mississippi Whitecaps Tell of Plans to Murder and Run Out Black Men.

Special to The New York Times.

BROOKHAVEN, Miss., Sept. 11.—Will Franklin, Oscar Franklin, and Will Porter, charged with having murdered Henry List, a negro, were remanded to jail without bail by Justice Daughtry. This was the first of the Whitecap cases, and there was much suppressed excitement.

Gov. Vardaman placed the local militia company under the orders of the Executive Committee of citizens in order to prevent any attempt at rescue. The militia remained under arms at the Court House until after the trial, when prisoners were returned to their quarters in the jail.

Luella List, wife of the murdered negro, told how her husband was killed. Several members of the Whitecap organization turned State's evidence. Jeff Wills, a special detective, said he was a member of the Whitecap organization.

"Before I attended any meetings this year," he said, "Gov. Vardaman appointed me special detective to work up evidence against Whitecaps. I had conversations with Oscar Franklin, who said he was at the last killing. Will Franklin said he held the horses. The first meeting I attended was in John Lard's field. Will Franklin was there. It was resolved that night to kill Pink Adams and Tom Brady and to run off all the negroes west of the Illinois Central Railroad this Fall and burn the negroes' houses."

GAVE A DOLLAR FOR 75 CENTS.

Then Young Farmer Was Arrested and Locked Up for Counterfeiting.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 11.—Because he was willing to give four quarters for three, Herman Knapp, a young farmer residing near here, was arrested to-day by Secret Service men from Buffalo and charged with counterfeiting. The Federal officials have been after Knapp for some time, but it was only his boldness in passing the spurious quarters that gave him away.

Knapp's residence is at Etna, a village seven miles from here, and the detectives believe that his counterfeiting plant may be located there. It is thought that evidence is withheld in the hope of discovering Knapp's confederates. Knapp is in jail here in default of $1,000 bail.

PANIC ON WHITE PLAINS CAR.

Passengers Leap When Short Circuit Causes Flames to Spout Up.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Sept. 11.—A trolley car was descending the Lake Street hill shortly after 4 o'clock to-night, when the feed wire parted, and, in falling, short-circuited the rails. Every revolution of the wheels caused sheets of flame to shoot up, and men and women began jumping from the car.

All were more or less bruised and cut. Those who stuck to the car escaped injury. Mrs. Michael Duffy of 3 Depot Square, Tarrytown; Mary Duffy of the same address, and Miss Annie Dean, also of Tarrytown, were taken to the hospital.

SAYS HE OWNS THE ISLAND.

Threatened by Germany, American Missionary Appeals to Hay.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 11.—A letter to Secretary Hay has been sent here by J. Schnelling, American missionary, of the Island of Ruk in the Caroline group. It was brought by the schooner Vine.

Schnelling claims to own Ruk, which he secured from the natives, but says that a German trading company, which controls the remainder of the group, covets this island and the German Government has ordered Schnelling to vacate. He declares he will resist any attempt to evict him before he hears from the Secretary of State.

AUTOS IN WHITE MOUNTAINS.

Plans for Final Run and Meet There on Oct. 1—Motor Carnival for Cuba.

Automobiling has been more active in the White Mountains this season than in any previous year, occasioned, possibly, by the impetus received early in the year, when the Mount Washington climbing contest was held. That novel event brought together some of the best machines in America, and an unusually large number of automobilists for a hill-climbing contest. To mark the close of the season a reunion of the automobilists who took part in the former event and their friends has been planned for Oct. 1 at Bretton Woods. Arrangements are being made to hold automobile runs to the White Mountains, starting two or three days before the closing meet, leaving New York, Boston, Springfield, Hartford, and other places.

Invitations have been extended to Gov. Nahum J. Bachelder of New Hampshire; ex-Gov. Jordon, Winthrop E. Scarritt, President of the Automobile Club of America; Col. Albert A. Pope, James B. Dill of New Jersey; Harlan W. Whipple, President of the American Automobile Association, and James L. Breese. Medals of gold, silver, and bronze will be awarded to thirty machines, the awards not to be based upon speed, but upon all-around reliability.

On Oct. 2 an easy run will be made from Bretton Woods to The Balsams, Dixville Notch, the distance being seventy-two miles. The return will be made to Bretton Woods, but those of the party who wish to leave for home will be at liberty to do so. On Oct. 4 a run will be made to the Profile House and the Old Man of the Mountain. Other runs to Intervale and other places will be made.

Regarding the coming automobile events in the South, Mr. Morgan said:

"A record-breaking trial will be held on Ormond Beach during the second week of November, during which many prominent autoists will attempt to lower the records which have already been established there.

"The Cuban people want an automobile tournament. Last week I had an interview in New York with the President of the Havana Automobile Club, Enrique J. Conill. The Cuban Government has donated to the club the free and exclusive use of the famous sixty-mile palm tree lined road running from Havana to the village of San Cristobel for a Cuban road race. I am to go to Cuba to look over the ground for the three days' carnival, and we may include in the programme motor boats for fast races in Havana Harbor. We are now looking about with a view to chartering a special steamer to carry our automobile party to Cuba and Florida."

To-Measure Suits
FOR MEN
At Revised Prices.
For the tailoring of to-measure garments for men—critical and discerning men—we maintain an organization of master tailors. Until now, our energy has been devoted to its perfection. We believe our craftsmen to be as clever and well-versed in the finer phases of tailoring as any of whom we know. So that their sphere of influence may be broader we have introduced certain economics in the conduct of our shops and revised the system. It has revolutionized and evolutionized things. Suits for which our charges heretofore were $35.00 to $65.00 we can now afford to make to your measure at $25.00 to $50.00, and make them a little better than ever. Will you let us demonstrate this to you in a practical manner?

Eight Years Old To-Day and We Propose to Celebrate

SIEGEL COOPER CO.
NEW YORK.

The eight years represent continued growth. As to the physical growth:—When the Store was opened it was said to be too big and it was by far the largest building then used by any mercantile firm. But we had some little belief in our abilities, the strongest determination and an abiding faith in the people whom the Store was intended to serve. How well this has been worked out may be seen in the fact that three times in eight years we have been forced, by reason of increased business, to enlarge the plant, first in 1898 a seven story addition 50x100 ft.; again in 1901 a seven story warehouse 100x200 ft., and again this Summer an additional story over about half the main building.

SIEGEL COOPER CO.
NEW YORK.

As to the volume of business transacted, each year has shown a substantial increase, and in the eight years the volume has been practically doubled, and all this without disturbance to then existing houses in our line of business which houses apparently continued to enjoy the same conditions.

The eight years have witnessed the building of many new houses for storekeeping by old established firms, as well as the opening of new stores to an extent never before equalled.

For as much as our example has forced or encouraged others to build we are glad. It all adds to the trade and commercial supremacy of our grand old city, and furnishes accommodations to the shopping public not enjoyed in any other city.

All of this to express our thanks and appreciation on your part in loyally and faithfully sustaining our efforts by your continued patronage. A word as to the preparation for the celebration of our Eighth Birthday.

You will find the old motto, "The same goods for less money or better goods for the same money" still carried out. It never takes a vacation. "Your money back if you want it"—always so long as we are in business.

These, together with a stock of merchandise gathered for this Fall's selling, more than doubly large as when the Store was opened, and half a million dollars in excess of one year ago, when we did the largest business ever done at retail in any store in New York city.

Our thanks and a cordial invitation to help us celebrate by participation in the bargain feast.

The whole Store is brilliantly attractive. The decorations are particularly appropriate and beautiful. The Main Aisle represents a gorgeous shower of vividly colored Autumn leaves fluttering from the ceiling. 60,000 leaves are used to produce this unique effect. Suspended from the ceiling are large gilded plaster medallions with the figure "8" thereon. Around the Golden Fountain are artistic groups of palms, ferns, Autumnal foliage and golden rod.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S LETTER.

Mr. ROOSEVELT has not wasted the long time he has taken to prepare his letter of acceptance. He has turned out a document of portentous volume in which he has carefully and ingeniously traversed every point as to which he thought that his Administration could make a favorable showing. Thanks in part to the deliberation with which he has prepared his address to the country, and, in part, probably, to the sobering influence of the discussion which followed his nomination, his tone is not what is usually accepted in his productions as "characteristic," but is notably more moderate and—we say it with all respect—rather more modest than many of his utterances. He still manifests, however, his ordinary faith in the providential nature of the mission he and his party have to perform and is enthusiastically blind to the facts that do not confirm the impression of that mission.

Mr. ROOSEVELT shows more adroitness than is usual with him in the treatment of the alleged inconsistencies of his opponents, and it is not unreasonable to infer the aid of a more skillful pen than his in this part of his letter. There is not lacking a certain foundation for his criticism. That is the penalty the Democratic Party has to pay for the errors it has committed in the past. Naturally Mr. ROOSEVELT does not acknowledge, and possibly he does not realize, the fact that the Republican record as to the currency is one of something far worse than vacillation or mistake. But it is not easy to see how he could manage to ignore that fact if he had taken the pains to inform himself of the doings of his party before he became prominent in its councils. He iterates, though in a slightly more temperate form, his claim for fidelity by his party to sound financial ideas and purposes. "We believe," he says, "in the gold standard as fixed by the usage and verdict of the business world, and in a sound monetary system as matters of principle; as matters not of momentary political expediency, but of permanent organic policy."

This is far from being the truth. From 1878 until 1900 the Republican Party treated the gold standard as a "matter of momentary political expediency," and decided that expediency required that it should not be established. As late as 1890 it passed the mischievous Sherman Silver Purchase act as part of the bargain by which the McKinley protective tariff was secured. The silver dollars with which the Treasury was filled under that act were worth at first about 73 cents each; the Republicans refused to come to the rescue of the business of the country and repeal the law, even when these dollars had fallen to less than 50 cents each, and equally refused to give President CLEVELAND the authority to borrow money to maintain gold payments and prevent National repudiation. It is true, and Mr. ROOSEVELT has a right to call attention to the fact, that the Democrats went wrong in 1896 and in 1900, but he would be seriously embarrassed in the long and loud boasting he indulges in for his party if he went to the trouble of studying the record. He would find that even Mr. MCKINLEY became a consistent advocate of the gold standard only after he had become convinced that his former views were utterly condemned by the country, and he would find that while that estimable statesman thought it necessary to call an extraordinary session of Congress immediately on his inauguration to attend to the demands of the protected interests, three years were allowed to pass before the mandate of the people in the election of 1896 as to the gold standard was obeyed. Even then distinguished Republicans were insisting that no action should be taken, and the party acted only under the strong pressure of the business leaders of the country.

Possibly Mr. ROOSEVELT is in some degree to be excused for his ignoring, and his apparent ignorance, of what took place before the commencement of his own conspicuous connection with the National Government, the commencement of what may with some pertinency be called the Rooseveltian Era. But we cannot quite comprehend the complacency with which he treats the protective tax system as the source of most of the prosperity and good fortune that the country has encountered in the last forty years, and closes his keen eyes to the evidence of the demoralizing, the corrupting, influence of that system as to which he has himself had humiliating experience. It is true that he is now on the defensive because he is the candidate of a party on the defensive, and it is not the custom of political aspirants to point out to the voters unpleasant features of their own relations to the powerful interests of their party. But Mr. ROOSEVELT cannot have forgotten the attitude of his party as to his own generous policy toward Cuba and the Philippines in the matter of the tariff barriers, or the cruel and selfish manner in which Congress, under the influence of the monopoly lobby, cut the terms of that policy down to such meagre proportions. He may not really understand the economic operation of the tariff—apparently he does not when he infers that labor cost is lower among our competitors than with us—and he may not be aware of the actual effect of the tariff in not merely aiding but in practically building up monopolies in the United States, but he knows the face of corruption when he sees it, and he has seen it very disagreeably in the tariff legislation at Washington. It is one of the proofs of the dangerous power of the favorites of the tariff that they have subdued the sinewy hand of Mr. ROOSEVELT to the politics he has to work in. He makes a good deal of what he seems to think the error of the Democrats in making a "moral" issue of the tariff. It is a strange confusion of the mind, if not of the conscience, of so acute and brave a man as he has shown himself in other matters, that blinds him to the pervading, tyrannical, cynical, and insolent immorality of the vast and unscrupulous interests to whom the tariff is absolutely indispensable.

NOT A FACTIONAL CANDIDATE.

The announcement by Mr. EDWARD M. SHEPARD that he does not wish and will not consent that his name shall be presented for the nomination for Governor by any faction of his party and that nothing but a substantially united demand for his nomination would induce him to accept it, is quite characteristic of the man.

Certainly it is within the limits of honorable ambition for a man of Mr. SHEPARD'S standing and experience to desire to lead his party in such a contest as could be and should be made in this State this year. He represents, and it would be foolish for him to ignore the fact himself, the highest purposes and the best tendencies of the Democratic Party. In his own home city he has labored patiently, courageously, and with tireless energy to hold the party to its best standards. In matters of State and National concern he has the not too common equipment of clear and well-reasoned convictions. He has blameless character and a wide reputation based on it, and he enjoys the confidence of all who know him or know of him. He would be practically and in reality an ideal candidate for the Democratic Party at this time, and he would embody the sentiment of disgust with the policy of the present Republican machine. There are the best reasons why he cannot take part in any factional politics, in which selfish interests alone are involved. They are precisely the reasons why he would make a most satisfactory exponent of his party as a whole. It would be an immense advantage to the party and to the State if he should be named.

RUSSIA'S NEXT NAVAL MOVE.

Russia's ships are reported to have left the Baltic for the Far East. Last week they hoisted the "blue peter"—or whatever in the Czar's navy answers to that flag of hasty departure—and undertook a cruise for the purpose of testing their guns and "shaking down" their crews before starting for Asiatic waters. We now know, therefore, the strength of this squadron, as definitely made up, and it is possible to compare it with the Japanese fleet, which it will have to defeat if it is to wrest the control of the sea from the Mikado's navy. Most of the Russian vessels are new, and it may be assumed that they contain all the latest improvements in machinery, armor, guns, and ammunition; but this fact does not necessarily convey great encouragement to the Russian hopes of an early victory over the enemy. Work on the new ships has been greatly hurried, and it is highly probable that defects due to haste will make themselves felt long before these ponderous and complicated structures reach the China Sea. Already it is rumored that the firing of their heaviest guns has resulted in serious damage, and, while this report may be an exaggerated one, it is entirely reasonable to expect the discovery of some defects in the working of the guns and turrets. These difficulties may be overcome en route; but an absolute immunity from the necessity for considerable changes in the equipment would be surprising; and thus too great newness in the Russian vessels may offset somewhat the hard usage to which the Japanese have been subjected.

The battleships of the fleet are reported as the Souvaroff, (flagship,) the Borodino, the Alexander III., the Orel, and the Osliabia; and the armored cruisers comprise the Dmitri Donskoi, the Aurora, the Zemtschug, the Izumond, and the Almuz. The Sissoi Veliky and the Navarin make up the seven battleships intended to form the front line of this fleet. The four first named are sister ships, having a tonnage of 13,566, a speed of eighteen knots, and main batteries of four 12-inch and twelve 6-inch guns. The Osliabia, completed in 1898, has a tonnage of 12,674, a speed of sixteen knots, and a main battery of four 10-inch and eleven 6-inch guns. The Sissoi Veliky, (1894,) and the Navarin, (1891,) are of 9,000 and 10,000 tons respectively; speed, sixteen knots; batteries, four 12-inch and eight 6-inch guns.

Comparing the foregoing with the Japanese battleships the latter are found to be individually superior, the Mikasa and the Asahi having a tonnage of 15,200, a speed of eighteen knots, and batteries of four 12-inch and fourteen 6-inch guns; the Shikishima, tonnage, 14,850; speed, eighteen knots; battery, four 12-inch and fourteen 6-inch guns; the Fuji and the Yashima, 12,500 tons; speed, eighteen knots; batteries, four 12-inch and ten 6-inch guns.

The armored cruisers on both sides are about equally matched, but as they would play only a secondary part in a fleet action, they need not be specifically compared.

Russia's seven battleships, therefore, would have the advantage of two in point of numbers, which would count for considerable. The Czar's vessels carry twenty-four 12-inch and four 10-inch guns, while the Mikado's heavy ordnance foots up only ten 12-inch guns. Of the 6-inch quick-firers the Russians have seventy-five and the Japanese only fifty-two.

But against these advantages in the number of guns aboard the Baltic ships must be put the superiority of the Japanese ordnance. The latter not only throw heavier projectiles, but they give them a much higher velocity. The Russian Admiral, having three slow ships, cannot choose his time, place, or distance for a fight. Inevitably he will have to wait till his enemy is willing to engage, and the latter can fix the distance. Thus the higher-powered wire-wound guns of the Japanese battleships, firing at a distance beyond the effective range of the comparatively old-style Obuchoff guns, may be able so to smash the Russian ships in the early part of the action as to even up the chances of victory. Also, the success heretofore gained by the Japanese will be of material help to them in their future fighting. Hence, while the Russian fleet at present is the stronger, there is a fair chance for their foes, and the outcome—in case the Russians reach the China Sea—will depend upon the men behind the guns, the material features being practically evenly balanced.

THE EXAMPLE OF BOSTON.

To readers of THE TIMES the need of some organization directly concerned for the cause of education in the arts and crafts has been presented so often that further argument seems superfluous. Boston is now about to carry out what New York has long discussed and as usual failed to achieve, and we may look confidently for a very intelligent and thorough treatment of this important problem from her.

The classes at the Cooper Union, the Pratt Institute, and other schools of less prominence show how general is the demand for schools midway between trade school and technological institute where young men and women can learn at nominal cost the decorative side of trades like cabinet work, for instance, and fit themselves to supply the growing taste for household articles of an artistic sort. Great prices are paid abroad and in this country for furniture, wood carvings, tapestries, tableware, produced in past centuries by artists of the Orient and of Europe who made useful objects beautiful and in many cases signed them, as a painter signs his canvas. The palaces and residences of Italy and France contain pieces of furniture thus signed which run to fabulous prices when they reach the auction room, and often those who pay these surprising sums are Americans who might be willing to contribute to a fund that would encourage the arts and crafts here. Indirectly, of course, and after a long while, these importations may reach the worker and may stimulate him; but what we need is a direct placing of education in industrial art in the way of the beginner. This is the aim of the movement in Boston.

There is a great and growing demand for useful objects that have the distinction of being the handicraft of an individual artist and single of their kind. Signed articles are less apt to be duplicated; ways can be found to prevent their seizure by manufacturers and the flooding of the market with machine-made copies. The manufacturers themselves need trained designers, foremen, and workpeople who have been taught the meaning of styles and will avoid the meaningless and ugly jumble of disconnected motives which are so often seen in the work from the fashionable shops during the last half century, the ignorance of beauty in line and beauty in mass, the helpless profusion of ornament where simplicity is needed, and the dull use of simplicity where the article requires just the opposite treatment.

The exhibit made at St. Louis by the German Empire contains lessons for the instructors in arts and crafts, some results being excellent, others in the nature of warnings how not to proceed. Neither in the German nor in the French section is all admirable; but that would be foolish to expect. What must challenge our respect is the way in which the European nations are training their workmen in schools and with working museums to meet the demands of a century that is beginning to see the commercial value of art applied to industries.

PEACE DELEGATES AT A WAR SCHOOL.

The spectacle of the delegates on their way to the International Peace Congress at St. Louis so fired with enthusiasm at West Point that they broke into spontaneous cheers for the navy and the army, if not exactly amusing, was certainly instructive. It shows that even when on a pacific errand the sights and sounds of martial display, the noise of the Captains and the shouting, and all that sort of thing, appeal to the man who deprecates war as the worst of calamities which can befall a nation, and set his blood coursing more rapidly through his veins. That our great war college interested the peace delegates very much is not to be wondered at. They are men with a clear conception of the duties of a State in connection with all that pertains to the protection of its borders and the defense of its rights as a member of the family of nations.

Whether as delegates to discuss schemes of universal pacification they take their function quite seriously is a question which it would perhaps be rude to press too closely. It caused a broad smile to overspread the faces of those who heard of it that one of the American officers sent to the Peace Congress at The Hague was instructed by the Secretary of War to take advantage of his opportunity while in Europe critically to examine and test a new army rifle said to be extremely efficient, with a view to its adoption for the United States Army. This also was perfectly natural, and quite proper; but the officer charged with this double duty must have realized that his missions were somewhat incongruous, and if he took his rifle tests more seriously than the amiable propaganda of disarmament, the fact is not to be wondered at in the present state of civilization.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Those impulsive Panamanian frogs that had such an extremely good time for the first few months after they called in the American King Stork to make them independent of rulers of their own race have already come to realize that the Nature of Things has not materially changed since the days of Aesop, and that the teachings of his fables are of perpetual and universal application, not momentary and local. Their past state was bad enough, no doubt, but while it lasted they knew the Ateness of the Where, and at moments of really hot impatience they had the—to them—so precious privilege of playing the game of revolution under rules and conditions with which they were perfectly familiar. How different is their present situation—how sadly, cruelly different! They have discovered that independence of Colombia was bought at a price of utter subordination to the United States and that the amiability of King Stork has a close connection with obedience to all his orders and with giving him such of their possessions as he needs in his business. So the Panamanian frogs are again as hotly impatient as ever they were, but resort to the old remedy, the only remedy they know, is now out of the question. They talk of it, indeed, but even they must feel in their hearts that the talk is too ludicrous even for Central America, and that their threat to restore the "status quo ante" by submitting themselves again to the uncovenanted mercies of the country they so gayly deserted is considerably more impracticable than it is desperate. Formerly they could fight to keep what they had or to get what they wanted, and in case of improbable necessity they could die amid scenes of thoroughly enjoyable excitement; now fighting is out of the question, and the dying, if it came to that, would be in dismal quiet and to no measurable purpose. For them matters are in a dreadfully immutable arrangement. Whether they like it or not there is nothing imaginable to do except to acquiesce, and their little interests have been completely submerged in those of such incomparably greater magnitude that even the most generous and benevolent of observers cannot give them anything more valuable than a gently humorous commiseration. Poor little fellows! They have lost nothing except a dream, and nobody is going to hurt them a bit, and yet their unhappiness is very easily comprehensible.

—Nobody will even whisper a doubt as to the unreality of the hardships and fatigues suffered by the militiamen at Manassas, or hint a question as to their ability in the conditions of actual war to give an honorable account of themselves against any foe the world could bring against them, but for all that, the stories of what the Japanese and Russians did at Liao-Yang do make it seem just a little amusing that four days of manoeuvring under genial skies, among friends and in a friendly country should have put a full half of the men engaged in such a state of exhaustion that they were physically incapable of participating in the review at Wellington. These were "losses" vastly greater than those suffered by the armies whose work in the East was the deadliest of earnest, much more prolonged and in weather that made our approximation to war a Sunday school picnic in comparison. There are, however, a good many things to be taken into consideration before approaching the conclusion that the militiamen are weaklings in body and spirit. In the first place they undertook, or had imposed upon them, something like the fatigues of real war without any preliminary training in the case of many of them and with very little for any. Almost as explanatory, perhaps, is the fact that they lacked the inspiration of a momentous cause. It is one thing to be on the winning side in the solution of a prearranged military problem and quite another to be identified with the glory and fate of one's own country in desperate conflict with another country seeking its destruction. The very tiredest of those boys who were physically incapable of taking part in the review would undoubtedly have discovered that he had not a little strength in reserve had he been aroused by such demands as are made upon the Japanese, or even upon the Russian, troops. They did as much as the circumstances, judged by the subliminal self, seemed to require. That they gave out will be held by some the fault, not of the men, but of the officers, who did not take sufficiently into account the points in which the men differed from hardened troops and demanded of them more endurance than was reasonably to be expected. The same fault, displayed in real battle, would have been fatal, and it might well be made the subject of more serious criticism than this.

—Dogfish, it seems, have been making so much trouble for the fishermen off the North Atlantic Coast of late that the Canadian Ministry of Marine has been seriously considering the problem of exterminating them, or at least of reducing their numbers. The first suggestion, of course, was to offer a bounty for every dogfish the destruction of which could be proved in one of the usual ways, but experience with that plan has almost always been painful, owing to the opportunities for fraud it always provides and the frequency with which it accomplishes nothing except the subtraction of large sums from the public treasury, and the Commissioners wisely rejected it. Instead they determined to establish three big plants for the reduction of dogfish to glue and fertilizer, and to pay the fishermen a good price for all the dogfish they will bring to these factories. At first thought this seems to be an excellent scheme, and certainly if the Canadian Government makes the catching of dogfish a profitable industry the day of that creature will not be long in the waters where he is now an expensive nuisance. On analysis, however, if is revealed that the two plans are much the same. If it paid to catch dogfish for any purpose whatever, people would have engaged in the industry so long ago that by this time there probably would be no dogfish to carry to reduction works, public or private. It can safely be assumed, therefore, that the Government

—One of our readers is puzzled, or would have us think so, because Sir WILLIAM RAMSAY, at the chemists' dinner, said: "I do not see why Britain and America cannot always buck together in peace and harmony—not, indeed, under one Government, for that is impossible, but ever united against all comers." Regarding this our correspondent impressively asks: "Did he include in his invitation to 'buck together against all comers' the many millions of citizens of the United States who have not the privilege of being 'Anglo-Saxons,' or does he wish to advance science by having the chemists of America and Britain unite against the chemists of other nations?" These rather snippy questions, we think, answer themselves. Whatever may have been the exact meaning of this bit of after-dinner oratory, it was well meant, and anybody who searches in it for ill meaning does much worse than waste his time. The chances that Sir WILLIAM RAMSAY draws racial lines in science are infinitely small—as small as the chances that he thought of America as inhabited by men of this blood or that.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your special from Washington under date of Sept. 7, 1904, headed, "Author Seeks Redress," contains so much misinformation that I am sure you will be glad to have me set you right.

No "proceedings to vindicate my mental soundness" have been begun, none is needed. The latter has never been called in question, except by the police of Washington.

No "request for an investigation" was made by my counsel. He simply wrote to the Commissioners for a copy of my commitment, and added that the statutes of the District of Columbia prescribed certain legal formalities and judicial proceedings for the commitment of the insane, which the police did not observe in my case, and asked if they acted under any special law or authority. Your correspondent ignores this part of the letter. It was sent, I am informed, on or about Aug. 24. No reply had been received up to Sept. 8.

Of the outrages and despotic acts of the Washington police in seizing my person, confining me for twenty-three hours in a police cell, committing me to St. Elizabeth's after the merest farce of an examination by two police surgeons, paid servants of the department, breaking into my lodgings, seizing my private papers, manuscripts, and personal property and carrying them to the police station, all in violation of my constitutional rights and of the statutes of the District of Columbia regarding the commitment of the insane—I may in due time have something to say to the American people. Publicity is the best remedy for such abuses.

OLD CAPT ACKERMAN TO QUIT.

With His Cats and Chickens He Kept Tarrytown Light Twenty-one Years.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., Sept. 11.—Capt. Jacob Ackerman has resigned his position as keeper of the Tarrytown Lighthouse, and will retire on Oct. 1, when he will have completed twenty-one years of service. He holds the record for length of service along the Hudson. He says the duties have become too heavy for him, and as he will be seventy-eight on Nov. 1, and as his wife is over seventy, he thinks he will retire and live ashore for the rest of his life. During his service he has rescued nineteen persons from drowning.

The Captain was very fond of pets, and he had a family consisting of three cats, a dog, and two dozen chickens. The Captain has managed to keep his chickens with him Winter and Summer. Sometimes they fell overboard, but he managed to rescue them. In the Winter time while it was terribly cold at the lighthouse he had them cared for, and he said they were good layers. One of his cats is thirteen years old, and has spent her lifetime in the lighthouse.

The Captain was keeper of the Croton Aqueduct at one time, and is an ex-President of the village of North Hempstead.

CHURCH DAY FOR OLD FOLKS.

Preacher of 82 Read a Poem and Singer of 83 Gave a Solo.

VINELAND, N. J., Sept. 11.—The fifteenth annual observance of the second Sunday in September as Old Folks' Day, took place in the First Presbyterian Church to-day.

There were over 100 present who had passed the half-century mark, 60 over seventy, 20 over eighty, and 3 over ninety. The oldest was James Samuels, ninety-two, with S. B. Clough a close second, only two months behind. Mr. Samuels still works daily at the shoemaker's bench. The Rev. O. O. Campbell, eighty-two years of age, who has been a church member seventy-six years, read an original poem, and Thomas Street, eighty-three, sang a solo committed to memory when he was five years of age. Souvenirs were presented to all septuagenarians by six little girls in white, and bouquets to the octogenarians, while the nonogenarians received special presents.

DEFENDS SUNDAY AT SAYVILLE.

Methodist Preacher Replies to Seventh Day Adventist Attacks.

SAYVILLE, N. Y., Sept. 11.—The Rev. Henry S. Sstill of the local Methodist church preached a sermon this evening in defense of the Christian Sabbath, because Seventh Day Adventists have for some time past been preaching their doctrine in the village. They have a large tent, and have been attracting large audiences, and have made several conversions.

The Rev. Mr. Still was expected to make an attack upon the Adventist preachers, but he contented himself with preaching a sermon defending the observance of Sunday rather than Saturday as the Sabbath. He predicted that some of those who had been led astray by false teachings would be glad to get back to their old faiths.

It is reported that there is dissension in one of the families which have been influenced by the Adventist preaching. The dissension is attributed to the restrictions on the use of meat.

MEDALS FOR EXPLORERS.

King Edward Congratulates Officers of the Discovery.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—King Edward has telegraphed his congratulations to the officers of the British Antarctic expedition steamer Discovery, which arrived at Plymouth yesterday. His Majesty has ordered that a new medal be instituted for polar service, and granted to all the officers and members of the crew.

Capt. R. S. Scott, commander of the Discovery, has been promoted to the rank of a Captain in the Royal Navy.

McLAURIN ON RACE PROBLEM.

South Carolina ex-Senator Says Crisis Is Near—Crum Case.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I send you an open letter in reply to an inquiry about the "Crum case." I take occasion to present a few observations on the race question, which, if you think worthy, you can publish.

JOHN L. McLAURIN.

Mr. William R. Luke, Nashville, Tenn.:

Yours of Aug. 29 to hand and contents noted. Your inquiry is legitimate and one to which you have a right to expect a reply.

The nomination of Dr. Crum for Collector of the Port of Charleston was not referred to me by the President, nor do I recall that I made any recommendation as to filling this office.

My recollection is that the President withdrew the appointment when he found there was opposition, and as the matter at that time was purely local in its character, I am satisfied that had the contest been limited to the fitness, &c., of the applicant, Dr. Crum would not have received the appointment, in the face of the almost unanimous objection of the business interest in the City of Charleston. The color question, however, was squarely presented, and the President found himself in the position where to decline the appointment was to admit that the color of the applicant constituted an insuperable bar. What a striking illustration of the case with which every trivial matter is converted into a race question! The office and Dr. Crum dwindle into insignificance beside the other issues involved. It seems to me that before long a crisis will be reached where the subterfuges and expedients which have served in the past will be ineffective, and this race question will have to be met and settled squarely on its merits. The sooner the better, each day only adds to the complications and dangers. Patience, courage, and self-control are the cardinal virtues of a Christian civilization, and when these are cast aside, the social structure itself will fall. Yet we all know that so long as one crime is committed lynching will occur, this to be followed it seems by, "Before the Day Club," indiscriminate slaughter, the overturning of courts and military. Lynching does not lessen the crime nor does the crime limit lynching. The great underlying questions belong to the realm of the spiritual, where moral principles have their birthplace and home. Ex-Gov. Chamberlain, in a very able paper, says in effect that the first step is for the negro leaders to begin a stern crusade against this crime and stamp it out and that lynch law will disappear; he may be right, but there is work for both races to do, and there must be some common starting point and concerted action. Gov. Chamberlain is a striking example of how certainly every intelligent and honorable Northerner who takes his South changes his views and becomes, if possible, more extreme than those to the "manor born."

The danger is in just what I refer to in the Crum case; no matter what happens the issue is made one of race. A division on race or religion is the most cruel, deadly, and dangerous that can divide men. The honest and high are held responsible for the crimes of the ignorant and degraded. An average citizen, speaking to me last week of the Statesborough affair, where an entire white family were murdered without provocation, and then burned by "A Before the Day Club," said: "If one of my family were a victim, I wouldn't care who, I would simply go out and kill niggers." When this sentiment is fully crystallized in both races, you have all the material to make the records of the Sepoy insurrection and Indian warfare pale into insignificance. I cannot believe that all this fever of race hatred, suspicion, and distrust can be laid at the door of any single crime, it is too deep and widespread, nor can I think that the race question would be settled if such a crime were never again committed.

The crime is an aggravation and only one of the dire effects of a third of a century's false doctrines and teachings. These disorders are the symptoms, not the disease, just as flushed cheek and quickened pulse only point to the inward fever that is consuming the patient. The roots of the disease lie amid the passions and errors of the reconstruction epoch, when full citizenship was suddenly thrust upon a race of slaves totally unprepared for such great moral and political responsibility. We are only gathering the second harvest from the seed then sown.

The first harvest was in that sad day when the South, to maintain its civilization, had to ignore and defy the Constitution of the United States. We are still struggling with the near-by effects of our civil war, and the heavy burden put upon both races is beyond their strength, for new consequences are continually cropping up in National life. I read with great interest a very thoughtful article by a Mr. Thomas of Ohio, published in The North American, in which he advocates the repeal of certain portions of the reconstruction amendments to the Constitution. I do not know, but it is possible that we may yet have to go back to this question where Lincoln left it and McKinley took it up, and as nearly as possible right every wrong. The constitutional restrictions of suffrage in the States must be in harmony with the spirit and letter of the Constitution of the United States; so long as they are not it gives the entire machinery a sinister twitch. Then we can safely rest upon the only enduring foundation by making the true test of citizenship moral and intellectual worth, applying every restriction fairly and honestly without regard "to race or color." The race question would disappear from politics, and when it disappears there it will elsewhere, and not before. The standard of citizenship would be so high that instead of the ballot box being regarded as a danger it would become the true safeguard of property and liberty.

For thirty years, forced by these conditions in the South to vote as a unit, there has been no room for the discussion and settlement of honest differences of opinion. The ballot box at a general election has merely been a machine registering the color of the voter, not his political opinions. When you take into consideration the mighty forces at work and the inevitable trend of events I cannot see how any thinker who believes in God and recognizes that uplifting evolutionary force, ever at work, pushing nations from one epoch into another, can have confidence in the makeshifts which surround us or believe that they can long endure. I know not what the immediate future may have in store, but I believe in our country and I know that the democratic ideas upon which it is founded are surely working us toward that condition where liberty and justice will be the birthright of each unit composing what we call government. I know that the race, labor, or any other of the great issues of the day can never be settled except in harmony with the catholic spirit of the age, and that in time every false doctrine and flimsy pretext which impede this onward march will be crushed out of existence.

Conditions are likely to grow much worse before they get better, on the principle that out of chaos comes disorder. If some power could bar out the politicians of the North who traffic with the negro vote in National convention and those of the South who "holler nigger" every time there is an honest difference of opinion, and then call into a great convention the wisest and safest men of the Nation without regard to race or party, these great issues might be considered upon their merits and a way be found out of the wilderness which would save much sorrow and suffering. I know too much, however, of public life to expect anything to be done until conditions become unendurable; then the good sense and awakened conscience of the American people will find a solution for this and other problems affecting National life which now seem well-nigh hopeless.

INDIANS DRAW COLOR LINE.

Threaten to Boycott Government Schools If Negroes Attend.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—The Government may have to deal with the mixed school problem in the Indian Territory. Reports have reached the Interior Department that some of the Indians of the Five Tribes are threatening to boycott the new schools which will be established in the territory this Fall, if negro children are permitted to attend.

It is said that protests from influential men in the territory will be filed with the Secretary of the Interor against the mixed schools, and that much feeling exists.

The objections to the mixed schools first came from the Chickasaws, who are said to take the position that Congress, when it passed the bill, intended that the appropriation should be expended on the education of Indian children alone.

The officials here believe the chief objection to the mixed schools is due to prejudice against the negro, and that there would be no special objection to the white children if the negroes were excluded. As construed by Indian Commissioner Jones, the law under which the schools are being established includes all children, and, therefore, it is not likely that any discrimination will be permitted. An effort will be made to conciliate the Indians who are protesting, so that the Interior Department will not be compelled to take formal action.

Officials of the Indian Bureau say that a strong prejudice against the negroes has always prevailed among the Cherokees and that this feeling has existed to some extent among the Chickasaws, but that the other tribes have not indicated such prejudice. The Creeks are well disposed toward the negroes, as some of the members of that tribe have married negroes.

The Osages in Oklahoma are hostile to negroes, and it is said that they will not let a negro set foot on their reservation. Their hostility was brought to the attention of the Indian Bureau about a year ago in a way which threatened to involve the Government in the race question.

An appointment as cook at one of the Osage schools was offered a negro woman. Agent O. A. Mitscher informed the Indian Bureau that the presence of a negro on the reservation would be resented by the Indians, and he urged that a white cook be appointed instead.

The appointment had been made and could not be revoked. Fortunately for the officials here the woman decided not to accept, and the place was given to a white cook.

KAISER LAUDS CECILIA.

Expresses Great Pleasure at Betrothal of His Son to the Duchess.

SCHWERIN, Sept. 11.—Emperor William and Empress Augusta Victoria arrived here this evening, accompanied by Crown Prince Frederick William and his betrothed, the Duchess Cecilia of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. The city was lavishly decorated, and the royal party received an enthusiastic reception by the populace.

At a State dinner the Emperor expressed great joy at the betrothal of the Crown Prince and the Duchess. Her character, his Majesty said, would insure the happiness of his son, and with it the happiness of his house and of the fatherland.

BATTLE IN URUGUAY.

Government Defeated—Temporary Quiet in Paraguay.

BUENOS AYRES, Sept. 11.— A further heavy engagement between the insurgents and the troops of the Goverment, in which the latter are reported to have been defeated, is said to have occurred in Uruguay. Negotiations between the Paraguayan Government and the revolutionists there are still proceeding.

FOUNDLING WON BABY PRIZE.

ITHACA, N. Y., Sept. 11.—A foundling won first prize in the Baby Show of the Tompkins County Fair, which closed here yesterday.

There were more than fifty competitors, but the outcast, who was left on the doorstep of the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Jewell last Winter, was pronounced the prettiest, and received a big steel range.

COMPLAIN AGAINST WOODBURY.

Street Cleaners Say They Work Fourteen and Fifteen Hours.

The delegates of the Street Cleaners made a kick at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union about an alleged order of Commissioner Woodbury withdrawing the scrapers at noon in the asphalted streets. The delegate said that when the scrapers were in use the street cleaners got through sooner, but when they were withdrawn it lengthened out their work to something like fourteen or fifteen hours a day.

He said that Commissioner Woodbury had asked for an additional appropriation of $1,106,000, and proposed that the Board of Estimate should be asked to refuse this additional appropriation until there was a change in the scraper rule. The matter was referred to a special committee.

Fatal Explosion on Italian Cruiser.

SEOUL, Sept. 11.—Four of the crew of the Italian third-class cruiser Puglia were killed last Thursday in the harbor of Che-mul-Pho, and sixteen others were rendered ill by the fumes of bursting shells. The actual explosion of the shells did little damage.

Undertaker's Signs on Churches.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Allow me to express my complete agreement with your correspondent who criticises the churches for their bad taste in advertising the business of the undertakers of New York. Shall we not have "carriages from ——," "organ furnished by ——"? Why not? It is really less a shock to our sensibilities. Does the church exist, then, to bury us? Let us advertise the wedding caterers, at least as an offset!

I have repeatedly been unable to learn the name of a church without finding the corner stone, and have not always found it there. But I have found a sign board each side of the door with the undertaker's name and address, and no sign with the church name or the rector or minister.

Let us have done with this disgusting practice!

THE WINDS.

I have tracked the South-Wind to her den
(Far the hills where the Summer lies!)
And the wild-folk will not follow me—
The dawn of fear is in their eyes.

I have left them timorous on the trail
(Far the hills where the Summer lies!)
For street and mart are beyond their pale—
The wild-folk are not city-wise.

But ever they call in the well-loved voice,
(Far the hills where the Summer lies!)
And it's O for the path and the vagrant choice
Of a westward look when the red day dies.

Shall I track the North-Wind to his lair?
(Far the hills where the Summer lies!)
I'll find 'tis the old, old trail I fare,
With the wild-folk keen with a new surprise.

I'll relearn the lore of the chosen things
In the hills where the Summer lies,
While the dim trees pray and the river sings
And the lights of a new day slowly rise.

TROOPS, TIRED BUT HAPPY, RETURN FROM BULL RUN

Cheering Crowds Greet Twelfth and Fourteenth Regiments.

ONLY A FEW ON THE SICK LIST

The Twelfth New York Regiment, Col. Dyer commanding, arrived home last night over the Pennsylvania from the scene of the recent army manoeuvres on the battlefields of Bull Run with some of the men suffering from the effects of malarial fever, but the majority in excellent condition. Two privates were sent to New York Hospital to be treated for malaria, while Lieut. Fisher had to be removed to his home in a carriage suffering in like manner. Ten of the men had their feet blistered in the long marches of the last days of the sham fights.

The regiment paraded to the armory at Sixty-first Street and Columbus Avenue, with 796 men and forty officers. Before dismissing the regiment, Col. Dyer complimented the men in most eulogistic words, declaring that he could best express his admiration for their conduct in the words of Gen. Bell, their commanding officer, who said:

"When the country needs men, there will be no better found than the New York State troops."

Twenty-third Street and Eighth Avenue, along the line of march, and about the armory, were thronged with a crowd of friends and relatives to welcome the boys home. All along the line they were received with cheers, and if they were fatigued, their marching showed no effect.

"The boys marched fifteen miles a day on the average," said Col. Dyer later, "over roads covered with cobblestones which cut into the soles of the shoes and induced many cases of blistering. Oftentimes they were without sufficient water, and other supplies were lax at times. Besides, many of the men were bothered by new shoes. But taking all things into consideration, they performed their duties as well as the United States regulars, if they did not do better.

"Thursday, after a march of twenty-eight miles, the men were all a little bit tired, but they, as well as their commander, Gen. Bell, were satisfied that their forces had won and that if the movements had been continued this would have been established beyond peradventure. The men, in spite of the hardships, are well pleased with the experience.

"They are every bit the equal of the American regular, and show what can be done with men who are drilled only at times, even although this be continued."

Cornelius Vanderbilt, First Lieutenant of Company D, who was reported to have been overcome by the heat on the first day of the manoeuvres and ordered to retire by the regimental surgeon, admitted that on that first day he felt rather tired. He laughed at this experience, thinking it a good joke.

"Later," he declared, "I enjoyed every bit of the manoeuvres. The company did splendid work, and I believe that it did us all a lot of good."

Some of the men told of a rather brisk encounter not on the plans of the War Department between the Fourteenth, the Brooklyn regiment who were with the "Blues," and the Twelfth, who were with the "Browns." This occurred just after the manoeuvres had been called off and the Twelfth were cheering for the victory they thought had been theirs. This aroused the fighting ardor of the Fourteenth; rifles were dropped for the minute, and at once there was a brisk fist fight going on all along the line. The officers quelled the disturbance and harmony once more reigned.

Others of the men told of the annoyance some of them had been put to at night by the birds of some of the Southern regiments parading past their quarters playing "Dixie" with full lung power, while their escorts gave the rebel yell. It got to such a pass that they were requested to stop the demonstration.

Officers of the regiment are wondering whether they get the extra allowance of $5 a day for duty outside the limits of the State.

Two mascots returned with the regiment, both under the protection of Company D. One is a mongrel pup which was picked up in some manner not told of on the first day. The other is a woe-begone, rat-tailed cat, which wandered into the same company's quarters last Tuesday.

The "Fighting Fourteenth" Regiment reached its armory, in Brooklyn, at 6 o'clock last night, every man worn out and hungry, but all enthusiastic over the experience and none with a complaint to make about the hardship he had endured. The regiment arrived in Jersey City from Manassas late in the afternoon, and crossed from there by boat to the foot of Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn. From there the command marched to the armory, at Eighth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, as the men were met at the ferry and the armory by crowds of their friends, and were cheered all along the line.

When the regiment had been drawn up in the main drill hall Col. Adolph L. Kline, the commanding officer, made a brief speech, in which he thanked his men for the willing and cheerful way in which they had done their work. The regiment, he said, had proved itself still worthy to be called the "Fighting Fourteenth." While admitting that they were played out, the men declared that they would be ready for another war game at any time. Speaking of the manoeuvres, Col. Kline said:

"I think they have been of the greatest benefit alike to the National Guard and the regulars. The chief trouble this year was that it was all new. The duty was on a very large scale, and it may have been that the organizations were worked too hard. The regulars had been on the ground a week or more and had become acclimated and hardened.

"The Guardsmen, for the most part, went from their desks and counters to keep up with the hardened regulars, and they did it. We returned without a sick man. Our regiment was highly complimented by Gen. Tasker Bliss, our brigade commander, and by Gen. Grant, our division commander."

While waiting to start for home on Saturday night three men of the Fourteenth were slightly wounded by the explosion of a cartridge, which some "joker" dropped into a campfire. The men were Corp. A. F. Magnusson, Private August J. Borgquist, and Private John St. Clair.

Troop C, the other Brooklyn command which took part in the manoeuvres, reached home at 10:45 o'clock last night. The troop left Manassas at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, and arrived in Jersey City shortly after 8 o'clock. They crossed to the foot of Fulton Street, Brooklyn, and marched from there to the armory, on North Portland Avenue. Capt. C. I. De Bevoise was in command of the sixty-seven troopers, all of whom, although tired out, expressed themselves as pleased with their experience.

The First Provisional Troop of State Cavalry, composed of details from Squadron A of Manhattan and Troop C of Brooklyn, arrived home from the manoeuvres at Manassas at 12:30 o'clock this morning under the command of Major Oliver B. Bridgeman. There were seventy-three men and officers. Capt. H. G. Badgley said that the men had stood the test splendidly.

MAINE SOLDIERS STOLE GOAT.

Cut Off Milk Supply of Two Jersey City Infants.

Several trainloads of troops from Manassas passed through Jersey City early yesterday on their way home. One train carrying the Maine militia was halted near Second Street for a short time on account of a hot journal, and a number of soldiers left their car for a foraging expedition. It was not supposed that they had carried off anything of importance until some time after noon, when Giovanni Colandiselle of 439 Second Street reported to the police that the soldiers had stolen a nannygoat from the yard of his house. He said the goat was a good milker, and that her milk was the chief food of his two young children.

He valued the goat at first at $10, but later raised the price to $20. A detective was sent to the Pennsylvania Railroad station to see if the men had abandoned the goat, but the railroad officials said that the animal had been shipped to New York with the men, and by that time was probably more than half way to Boston.

THAT CROP REPORT LEAK.

J. S. Bache & Co. Say They Happened to Strike Government Figures by Chance.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Sept. 11.—Chairman Hunter of the Cotton Exchange Information Committee received a letter yesterday from Secretary of Agriculture Wilson asking for the name of the "prominent wire house" in this city that bulletined the Government's crop figures recently thirty minutes before the report was officially released. Chairman Hunter wrote to the Secretary in reply as follows:

I am directed by the Committee on Information and Statistics of the Savannah Cotton Exchange to say that at 12:45 P. M. on Sept. 2 Messrs. Heyward, Vick & Co., who have an office in this city, received the following telegram, "Government looks like 84.1," signed Bache, which was posted in their office for the information of the public generally. I am informed by Messrs. Heyward, Vick & Co. that Messrs. J. S. Bache & Co. of New York are their correspondents and authors of the above telegram. The writer, together with several others, saw the telegram in question.

Secretary Wilson has made no statement, so far as known here, as to what line his investigation will take.

William J. Wollman of the firm of J. S. Bache & Co., when seen at the Hotel Majestic late last night, said:

"It is quite true that we sent that dispatch. There is no denying that fact. We do that right along. We estimate on what the Government's figures will be and send it out. We were putting ourselves on the back because we struck the figures so accurately in this instance.

"We deny absolutely, however, that we received any information from the Government, directly or indirectly."

"BEAUTY AND THE BARGE" A HIT

Comedy by W. W. Jacobs and Louis Parker Scores in London.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Not since "The Duke of Killicrankie" started months ago on the triumphant career which is not yet over, has any first night at a London theatre been so successful as that at the New Theatre when "Beauty and the Barge" was produced for the first time. The new comedy is the work of W. W. Jacobs, the famous humorist, and Louis N. Parker, and is acted by the Haymarket Theatre Company temporarily exiled to the New Theatre.

The episode which forms the plot, such as it is, of "Beauty and the Barge," is an escapade of Ethel Smedley, who runs away from home aboard the barge Heart in Hand, navigated by that notorious buccaneer of the tidewater, Capt. James Bailey.

The part of Captain Bailey, played by Cyril Maude, the head of the Haymarket company, was the feature of the piece, and surpassed all the previous efforts of that capital character actor.

It was not so much the plot of the play which made it go with such success as the irresponsible gayety and good spirits of the whole thing. The dialogue was bright, many lines really clever, the characters were of the farcically exaggerated type that provoke laughter, and the acting was admirable all through. Indeed, The Times says, "one must refer the reader to the cast, with the remark 'Excellent' against every member," and The Telegraph says that a play has rarely been better played all through.

ENGAGES MISS LA FOLLETTE.

Shubert Gets Wisconsin Governor's Daughter for Miss Rehan.

Sam S. Shubert announced yesterday the engagement of Fola La Follette, daughter of Gov. La Follette of Wisconsin, for the support of Miss Ada Rehan. Miss La Follette will assume small rôles in "The School for Scandal," "The Taming of the Shrew," and "The Country Girl," Miss Rehan's répertoire for the coming season. Miss Rehan is to arrive in America next Saturday, and will begin rehearsals almost at once.

Miss La Follette was graduated from the University of Wisconsin four years ago. She has spent much time abroad, and it was while studying German in Munich that she made her first appearance on the stage. Miss La Follette denies that her father opposed her entering the profession, or that he considers the stage demoralizing.

JUMPED UPON RUNAWAY.

Monahan's Feat Saved Two Women Who Were Out Driving.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST ORANGE, Sept. 11.—Hugh Monahan of Glen Ridge yesterday afternoon stopped a runaway horse which was drawing a light carriage in which were Mrs. Henry Wagner of Orange and a woman friend.

Monahan heard the clatter of the approaching runaway and ran out into the middle of the road just as the animal got abreast of him, and, springing forward, succeeded in catching the collar, and after an effort climbed on the animal's back. Monahan, who is very strong, succeeded in wrenching the bit out of the teeth of the horse, and in a few moments brought the animal to a standstill.

RESPECTS SUICIDE'S WISH.

Coroner Decides Autopsy on Body of Old Church Sexton Unnecessary.

Despondent from suffering, and fearing that an operation which he had been told was necessary would be fatal, Charles Weesling, sixty-three years old, drank some unknown poison, in the parlor of his apartment at 210 East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street yesterday morning, and died before a doctor reached him. Near the body was a letter addressed to the Coroner and stating that suicide was intended.

Weesling was formerly sexton of St. Paul's German Lutheran Church, in One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, near Lenox Avenue, but he had to give up work, and he told his wife yesterday morning that he couldn't stand the pain much longer. She suggested that he undergo the operation that his physician had told him would be necessary.

"Why, that would kill me anyway," he replied.

A little later he went into the parlor alone, and in a few minutes after his wife and three daughters heard him groan. They rushed into the parlor and found him unconscious.

Coroner Scholer, after reading the letter left by Weesling, decided that an autopsy was unnecessary to determine the cause of the death. The letter, written in German and addressed to the Coroner, read as follows:

"Dear Sir: This is to notify you that I am killing myself by means of poison. I hope thereby to obviate the necessity of an autopsy. Please be good enough to manage for a respectable funeral and console my wife and children."

BOATING PARTY MISSING.

Left Bridgeport in Launch on Thursday and Have Not Been Heard From.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Sept. 11.—Grave fears are entertained for the safety of William F. Robertson and his wife, their daughter, Mrs. R. F. Kolb, and her husband, who left this city Thursday afternoon in a thirty-eight foot naphtha launch, intending to go to Oyster Bay, L. I.

A few hours after the launch sailed out of the harbor a furious thunderstorm swept over the Sound, and as no trace of the boat has been reported or no word from any member of the party has been received, it is supposed that they were all lost in the storm.

Mr. Robertson told his son, T. H. Robertson, just before he left that he expected to return with the party Friday noon at the latest, and if they decided to stay away longer the son would receive word to that effect.

JABEZ JACKSON SPOKE FOR LAW AND ORDER

"Bring Them Outlaws Back," He Yelled—Maplewood Obeyed.

HOT HORSE THIEF CHASE

And Would You Believe It Was All One of Those "Movin' Picter" Rehearsals?

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH ORANGE, Sept. 11.—Maplewood was enjoying its Sabbath quiet when the air was shattered by strange sounds. There was the clatter of hoofs on Jefferson Avenue, and a shot rang out. The inhabitants rushed to their windows, and the sight which greeted them was so astounding that for the nonce they were unable to do more than gaze, wide-eyed, at the stirring panorama spread before them.

Down the thoroughfare, lashing their steeds to highest speed, three men were racing. Behind them thundered a pursuing party, pistols drawn, and bending low with the excitement of the chase.

"Halt!" shouted the foremost, but the only reply of the fugitives was to dig spurs the deeper into the flanks of their foam-flecked mounts.

A fusillade of shots broke the spell. The braves of Maplewood threw off their lethargy.

"It's bandits," yelled Jabez Jackson, "an' I'm for law an' order. Mandy, whar's my gun?"

Mrs. Jackson, with trembling hands, took down a muzzle loader of the vintage of 1853 and passed it to Jabez. In other homes similar scenes were being enacted.

Before the volunteer reinforcements mustered themselves on the village street, however, pursued and pursuers were far ahead. Toward the Lackawanna tracks the hue and cry went on. The railroad reached, the fugitives discovered an engine which was untended. In a trice they had abandoned their horses and clambered into its cab. Their pursuers were almost upon them.

One of the men opened the throttle. The engine moved ahead, slowly at first, and then faster and faster. The pursuers opened fire. Volley after volley smote the outraged atmosphere. The fire was returned by the men on the locomotive.

The men of Maplewood, panting but eager, appeared. They were in the zone of battle, almost, when they came to a halt. The engine rounded a curve before they had the chance to pull a trigger. Jabez Jackson spoke up.

"Bring them outlaws back!" he shouted. "We'll show 'em."

A man came out of the bushes, lugging a strange machine. He approached the baffled pursuers.

"That ought to make a swell pictur', Cap'n," he said to their leader.

Jabez Jackson lent attentive ear. "What's that about a pictur'?" he demanded. "Be this a game?"

"Movin' pictures," said the leader, mopping his brow. "We begun back in an old barn and got the whole thing on the films. It'll go great. What are you fellers buttin' in for! Don't you know you might hurt somebody with those middeevle fowlin' pieces?"

"W-a-a-l I'll be older-snizzled," snorted Jabez Jackson. "The whole kit an' bilin' on you ought to be treated. Movin' pictures! It's a outrage!"

The men of Maplewood snorted in unison. They shouldered their weapons and began their homeward march. There was but one approving face in the line.

"I guess I don't care," said Solomon Johnson, who is a mere tot of sixty-two. "It was some excitement, by Jerushy!"

NEW ZEALAND'S PROSPERITY.

Report of the Treasurer Shows Colony's Flourishing Condition.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 11.—United States Consul General Dillingham writes from Auckland, New Zealand, as follows:

The financial statement of the Colony of New Zealand, for the year ending June 30, 1904, was recently issued by the colonial Treasurer, Mr. Sheddon, it being his ninth annual budget. The surplus was $3,750,000, which is claimed to be a record one for the colony.

Recommendations to purchase twenty-five estates were made by the Board of Land Purchase Commissioners, and transactions were completed affecting ten properties containing 97,139 acres, the total cost being $2,343,075.

The gross debt of the colony on March 31, 1903, was $279,495,095, and the net debt $267,928,900. On March 31, 1904, the gross debt was $287,611,075 and the net debt $275,321,640. These figures show an increase of $8,115,980 in the gross debt and $7,392,740 in the net debt. The Treasurer admitted that the increase of the colony's debt was large, but he thought an intelligent analysis of the purposes for which these loan moneys were obtained would prevent any inclination to find fault with himself and colleagues.

He also said that he did not advocate or even defend a large borrowing policy, but that he looked back with pride to the immense amount of good which had been done to New Zealand's hard-working and often struggling settlers by the colony's judicious borrowing, which had enabled large areas of land to be purchased at a fair price and to be cut up for close settlement.

As a result of the introduction of the new system of investigation, which has been made to apply to all pensioners already on the books, in addition to new claimants, there has been a decided drop in the number of new pensions granted, as well as a marked decrease in the total number of pensions on the rolls, and consequently in the expenditure under the act. The actual amount paid in pensions during the year was $1,015,820, or $34,880 less than last year. The Treasurer thinks the present system results in greater care being exercised in granting pensions, and that it has reduced fraud to a minimum.

According to the Treasurer's statement a lesser number of men applied for work in 1903 than formerly, and the difficulty of meeting the applications was less. Notwithstanding the steady and continued influx of workers from Australia, labor was sometimes scarce and expensive in the country districts, while those in the skilled trades in town received unusually high wages.

Speaking of the large extension of business which has taken place and the increased values of property throughout the colony, the Treasurer called attention to the fact that in Wellington City alone the capital values have risen from £29,328,890 in 1891 to £54,678,445 in 1903, and that £15,000,000 of this have been added in the last five years. The rating value of the four chief cities in New Zealand is now £139,868,735.

These facts, taken together with the advance in the price of commodities, fully justify, in the Treasurer's opinion, any advance in the wages of workers caused by the carefully considered awards of the arbitration court.

It is stated that the past year has been an unusually prosperous one for all classes of farmers and stock owners, and that general prosperity is apparent throughout the colony. The total value of the exports of the principal items of farm produce, although slightly less than the phenomenal amount for the year 1902-3, is more than $12,500,000 in excess of the value for the year 1901-2. The export of wool was less in quantity, but owing to the improved prices the value increased $2,991,210. The output of New Zealand hemp continues to grow, both in quantity and value.

HURT IN SCRAMBLE FROM CAR.

Explosion Causes Lively Panic on Williamsburg Car.

In a panic, resulting from an explosion in the controller box, several passengers on a Hamburg Avenue car, Williamsburg, were injured last night. The explosion occurred just as the car was at the corner of Rodney and South Fifth Streets, and the passengers fell over one another to reach the street.

IN THE SHOPS.

A tael in China is the monetary unit, and it is also a weight. Just what the odd little things are that they are selling under the name in an up-town shop the would-be purchaser will have to determine for himself or herself. The tael is rather dark in color, but it is silver, heavy, small, looking more than anything else like the metal top of a bottle with turn-down ears. In the centre are Chinese characters. It is a curiosity, a trinket for the writing desk, and may be used for a small paper weight, or the pen may be laid across it temporarily. It is quite different from the ordinary run of trinkets, and costs $1.

***

Medicine glasses are always useful. One of them has a cover which is a regular watch face with hands to mark the hour for the dose. Glass and top cost $5.

There is a separate medicine glass cover of silver, with the hours marked, which costs $3.75.

***

Medicine spoons have been mentioned here before, but they are worth reconsidering. There are two spoons, one a table and one a tea spoon, at the opposite ends of a short handle. Underneath this handle are small rests, and the bowl of the spoon is held up away from the dust. This is a heavy piece of silver, and costs $6.

***

Those green salts bottles come with silver cases reaching half the height of the bottle. With a raised decoration, one of these costs $2.25. The plain costs $1.75.

***

An odd little trinket, in the shape of a flask for the handbag, is in silver, with a glass bottle inside for holding the salts. One silver side of the flask opens to show a receptacle for powder and little powder puff. It costs $12.

***

A queer round piece of silver, which looks like a couple of saucers set one over the other, is to hold candlesticks. The saucers are for candlestick supports. The small candlesticks are inside, and when the saucers are separated, and the candlesticks screwed into the middle of each, there is a pair of traveling candlesticks. They are made in this form for convenience in carrying.

***

Pretty short stemmed flower holders are to be found in green glass at low prices, varying according to the size, from 30 cents to $4.50. These vases have round bowls, narrow necks, and flaring tops.

***

Very low and shallow flower holders also come in green glass, and range in price from 65 cents up.

***

New things in cut glass dishes are those with a plain edge. The lower parts of the bowls and sides are heavily cut, but the top for an inch or more down shows only the plain glass, the upper edge being sometimes straight around, but more often in waved lines. This plain edge is supposed to strengthen the dish. A spoon falling with a little force upon it is not so likely to cause damage as when it is cut. The dishes come at the same average price as in the ordinary cut glass.

***

There is always Colonial cut glass to be considered for its good lines and dignified simplicity. There is nothing that cannot be found in it now. There are ice bowls, as they say, and sherbet sticks, which are pretty for many purposes. A large pair of these costs $12, and a smaller size $9.

***

A celery dish in old-fashioned cutting, as well as Colonial shape, the high round dish with a foot, costs $9.75. A jam dish, with a cover and foot, costs $7.50; little old-fashioned salts, small round dishes, also having a standard, are $2.25 each, and pretty little olive dishes cost the same. A small comport costs $4.50.

***

Glass comports in other styles of cutting come in all sizes, and are very attractive with their high stems.

***

Cut glass bowls, with a design in silver deposit around the edge, are quite different from the bowls with the silver edge that is made separately and set on. They are newer and prettier.

***

A cut glass vinegar or oil jug, with a handle and silver stopper, is a bargain at the reduced price of $1.75.

UNION RULES SMASHED IN LABOR DAY PARADE

Musicians Kick Because Non-Union Band Was Hired.

NON-UNION BADGES ALSO WORN

Musical Delegate Tells Central Federated Body He Had Right to Call Strike, but Refrained.

It was charged at the meeting of the Central Federated Union yesterday that union rules had been shattered even in the holding of the Labor Day parade on Monday last, and some of the members wanted to know what unionism was coming to.

The first shock came when President Smith of the Musical Protective Union announced that the Teamsters had fractured trade union principles by employing the Catholic Protectory Band to play in the parade.

"This band is composed of forty children," he said as the other delegates moved uneasily in their seats, "and some of them carried instruments that weigh twenty-six pounds."

The matter was referred to the Grievance Committee, and then an attempt was made to take it to the Factory Inspection Department as a violation of the child labor law. This was finally tabled.

Here Delegate Morton of the Amalgamated Wood Workers got up to complain that the delegates in the parade did not wear union badges on their canes.

"The badges some of the men wore were non-union badges," he said. "Why, even the badge of the tip printers' union was not on the hats of the people who paraded in uniform."

"Sometimes it's cheaper to hire union men," put in a musician delegate. "Here is a case where $350 was paid for a band of forty boys. You could have had members of the union at $8 per man."

Smith said that he had a perfect right to order a strike of the musicians during the parade, owing to the employment of non-union players. This he refrained from doing, as he wanted the parade to be a success.

On top of this James McCabe, the Grand Marshal, reported that the parade was the most successful that had taken place for many years. Then he added:

"The only drawback was the knocking of the newspapers. However, that did not do us much harm."

ARBITRATION AVERTS STRIKE.

Employes of Republic Company Submit to Cut in Wages.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—Victory for employers was the outcome of the conciliation plan of adjusting wage differences, given its first great trial in Chicago by the Republic Iron and Steel Company and its 20,000 skilled union employes as Ashtabula, and elsewhere. Both sides accepted the decision announced to-day, thus making the second notable settlement by direct arbitration within the last year.

The members of the Amalgamated Association of Steel and Iron Workers employed by the Republic Company submitted to a reduction in wages. The decrease in pay will be from 2 to 13 per cent. The award was made after an all-night session at the Sherman House, following a two days' argument by conference committees from the company and the union.

The skilled workers will suffer the greatest reduction; the finishers, who have been paid $8.50 a ton, will receive next year only $7.15, or nearly 13 per cent. less. The "rollers," the least skilled, will be paid $4.90 a ton, which is 2 per cent. less than the scale last year.

JERSEY CITY MEN ARE SHAVED.

Barber Shops Stay Open Till 1 P. M. Sunday as Usual.

Contrary to expectation Jersey City men had no trouble getting shaved yesterday. All the barber's shops were open until 1 P. M., and the only interference by the police was to compel the barbers to pull down the blinds at noon.

Chief of Police Murphy said he had not issued any order requiring the shops to close, and had no intention of doing so.

"All there is to it," said the Chief, "is that before I went on my vacation a committee of the Journeymen Barbers' Association asked me to close the barbers' shops all day on Sunday. I declined to comply and told them that if they did not wish to work on Sunday they could refuse."

CHICAGO, Sept. 11.—By the closing down of three of the Chicago plants of the International Harvester Company Saturday evening 9,000 men were thrown out of work. Representatives of the company said manufacturing would be resumed in a few weeks, when the taking of inventories had been completed.

WHICH CAR KILLED AMMERMAN?

East New York Police Have Arrested the Crews of Two.

The police of the Liberty Avenue Station, East New York, are in a quandary as to whom they should hold responsible for the death of Erastus Ammerman, sixty-eight years old, a builder of 1,018 Myrtle Avenue, whose body was found Saturday night on the Jamaica Avenue trolley tracks.

Unable to determine whether Ammerman had been struck by an east or west bound car, the police arrested the crews of two cars which were going in opposite directions about the time the accident occurred. They are Motorman Matthew Reed and Conductor Gustav Winkleman of Car No. 658, going west, and Motorman Michael Flynn and Conductor Charles Mabin of Car No. 2,683, going east. Reed and Flynn were held to await the action of the Coroner. They denied that they were in any way responsible for Ammerman's death.

LEO STERN DEAD.

The Noted Violoncellist Expires in London.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—Leo Stern, the violoncellist, husband of Suzanne Adams, the singer, is dead.

Leo Stern began his professional career in 1888, when he made his first concert tour with Mme. Adelina Patti. Mr. Stern came of a musical family, and received his musical education from the great 'cellist Piatti and from Klengel and Davidoff at Leipsic. He was a favorite of Queen Victoria, and frequently played at Windsor, Balmoral, and Osborne.

He was the first 'cellist to play Dvorak's concerto for 'cello, and so delighted was Dvorak with the young musician's work that he went to London to lead the Philharmonic Society's orchestra when Mr. Stern introduced this piece to the artistic world.

At the London concert Mr. Stern's success was so emphatic that he was selected to interpret the concerto at the Leipsic Gewandhaus, where the audiences are conceded to be the most critical in all Europe. He was the first Englishman ever invited to play there, and his triumph was so complete that he was summoned by Emperor William to play at Potsdam. In Paris he played with Massenet, Goddard, and Thome.

The 'cello used by Mr. Stern is the largest Stradivarius in existence, and was presented to him by a number of admirers of which Lord Amherst of Hackney was the leading spirit. The instrument is known as the "General Kyd" and is valued at $6,000.

In this country Mr. Stern appeared with Theodore Thomas's orchestra in Chicago, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and with the Philharmonic Society of this city.

Cincinnati and St. Louis Quit Even in a Double-Header.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 11.—Nichols was compelled to pitch both games to-day. He won the first by superior work. In the second, however, he weakened perceptibly and was hit hard. St. Louis secured three hits and a base on balls in the second inning of the first game, but failed to score, a frustrated steal and an out at the plate preventing runs. Kelley retired on account of illness. Scores:

FOOTBALL SEASON OPENS ON SATURDAY

Schedule of Games to be Played by Leading Teams.

COLUMBIA'S IMPORTANT DATES

Games with Yale, Michigan, and Cornell Will Be Played at American League Park.

With the football game between the Carlisle Indians and Lebanon at Carlisle next Saturday the gridiron season of 1904 will have begun, and from that time there will be matches a-plenty until the final contests that determine intercollegiate honors toward the end of November.

New York lovers of football will receive the opportunity of seeing three big local games—Columbia against Yale on Oct. 29 and Columbia against Cornell on Nov. 12 and Columbia and Michigan at American League Park on Thanksgiving Day. Besides these important contests Columbia will play Amherst and Williams, two of the strongest of the minor teams, in this city.

The annual Yale-Princeton game will take place on Nov. 12 at Princeton.

Columbia's Fall season of practice is scheduled to begin at South Field this afternoon, but William R. Morley, head graduate coach, may postpone it for a day or two. Indications are that the team will be pretty nearly as good as that of last season, which was believed to have been the best that ever represented the blue and white. Columbia will suffer most in the loss of R. S. Smith, full back, and E. D. Bruce, centre. Smith was considered one of the best Captains a Columbia eleven ever had and was strong in defensive playing and in line plunging. Bruce, too, was a veteran and always was counted on as a valuable man to strengthen the centre part of the line. There is a possibility that Jones, the speedy quarter back, who showed such promise last season, may not play again. This will be his last year in college, and possibly he may not be able to find time to devote to the gridiron.

The games to be played by the leading teams during the season follow:

Details of the Best Week's Boom of the Year.

A Clean Score of Advances Among Representative Stocks—Cheerfulness in the Bond Market Also.

The dozen most active and representative stocks of the week made a clean score of advances, the smallest being ⅞ for Southern Pacific. The most active property was naturally the strongest, Reading advancing 3⅞, upon sales of 529,560 shares. Steel preferred was a good second, with an advance of 3¼. And yet the steel and coal trades are making exceptionally poor reports just now. They also make the most rapid recoveries when they start, and there are signs that they are about to do so. The week was a half day shorter than its predecessor, and the sales were a million and a quarter shares larger, or nearly four and a quarter millions—more than threefold the corresponding week last year. For similar volume of business it is necessary to go back to 1902. Outside the active dozen there were larger advances than within it, ranging up to 10 to 15 points for inactive specialties whose price is matter of limited concern. For industrials the average price rose from the previous week's close, 55.15, to about 57. Railways rose from 106.31 to over 108. Of course this is the year's top. Including all shares which moved a point or more, 103 rose and 15 fell.

Forty bonds also moved a point or more, and but four fell. The shortened week resulted in a diminished volume of bond business, sales reaching but little past $25,000,000. That, however, surpasses 1902, and is double a good week's business. Analysis of it puts it into the same class with the more speculative department, and does not point to much improvement in strict investment business, that certainly is somewhat larger, and more notably so in over-the-counter business done by good houses than in Exchange transactions. For example, over $8,000,000 of the week's business was in Consolidated Tobacco 4s, which fell 2¼ upon announcement of a scheme to retire them for a mixture of new bonds and stock. The fall does not necessarily imply any adverse judgment of the market upon the plan, for it was not known long enough for the plan to have been digested, or to have any legitimate effect. The maxim to sell upon the good news is more likely to have been effective. Nearly 4,000 of the Steel 5s were sold, and they participated in the remarkable strength of the concern's stocks. Over 2,000 of the Rock Island 4s and 5s and over 1,200 of the Wabash 8s were negotiated. Distilling Security 5s made the maximum advance of 8⅝, upon sales of 564. It is difficult to draw any depressing inference from an almost universal rise in the bond market, but even boomers will admit that the class of securities instanced above are not a clue to what conservative investors are thinking.

BUSINESS IN ENGLAND

Prosperous Conditions Expected in Lancashire—Iron and Steel Trade Improves—Good Crop News.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sept. 11.—The Times's Financial Supplement to-morrow will say:

"The general tenor of this week's trade reports confirms the recent hopes of improvement in industrial conditions. The grain trade has been quieter, but prices are not much different from a week ago.

"The best news is that furnished by mail and cable from America exposing the unreasonableness of the recent wild speculation. Moreover, the crop news from India, Australia, and Argentina is good, and these latter are, with Russia, the countries which recently have been our principal food purveyors. The United States as the bread provider for Europe has lost much of its former importance.

"In the cotton trade the week has been somewhat tedious, but not discouraging—tedious on account of the momentary scarcity of raw material, which mulcts the spinner in heavy fines in his efforts to secure the needed qualities.

"But this is of passing interest only in view of the rapidly increasing supplies of American cotton, and the arrangements made for bringing cotton promptly within reach of Lancashire spindles.

"Of more permanent interest are the Board of Trade figures showing that the August exports of yarns increased 21 per cent. and the exports of cloth 10 per cent.

"It would seem that Lancashire will have one of the most prosperous Autumns and Winters for years. The wool and woolen trade likewise is maintaining its promise of a fairly good Autumn season, although the pronounced scarcity of raw material cannot be relieved quickly.

"Cable advices from Australia report that the auctions at Sydney and elsewhere have gone off with spirit, especially for good qualities, while faulty goods were neglected.

"It is stated that this year's clip is finer and lighter in grease than last year's, of strong staple, but burry. The next Sydney sale will be held Sept. 20. Brisbane will offer 7,000 bales on Oct. 5.

"Iron and steel manufacturers report improving conditions, although in some cases, as in Barrow and South Wales, foreign steel is spoiling home business.

"The shipbuilding trade seems among the poorest at present, and even here experience is uneven."

RATTLER WAS A CLOCK.

Buzzing in the Grass Was Not Made by a Snake.

Nobody has offered a reward for the return of an alarm clock that was found yesterday morning in a vacant lot not far from the corner of Cromwell Avenue and One Hundred and Sixty-second Street in the Bronx.

The finder of the clock was Jimmy Maher, a small boy. He was playing with some of his fellows in the vacant lot when a suspicious noise was heard in the grass.

"Gee! A rattle snake," shouted one of his little playmates, who had just returned from a vacation in the Catskills.

Everybody ran except Jimmy, who is of an inquisitive turn of mind. He investigated and found a clock. It was busily at work running off the minutes and hours. It showed the correct time. The alarm had run down.

APACHE ART MODEL ILL.

Son of Geronimo Chieftain in Bellevue with Consumption.

Joseph Ezhuna, a full-blooded Apache, son of the chieftain Victorio, who, with Geronimo, led the uprising of the braves on the San Carlos Reservation in New Mexico years ago, entered Bellevue Hospital as a patient last night. He has tuberculosis. He is twenty-five years old, and has been for some time an artist's model in this city, notably for E. W. Deming.

Accompanying him to the hospital was his friend from boyhood, Vincent Natalisch, who is a "level man" in the employ of the elevated road. They were classmates at Carlisle. The doctors did not give Natalisch much hope for his friend's recovery.

Accidentally Shot by Locksmith, Dies.

Edmund Schwinck, forty-four years of age, of 503 Franklin Avenue, Brooklyn, who was accidently shot on Saturday afternoon by his friend Louis Lipert, a gunsmith, died yesterday afternoon in St. John's Hospital, Long Island City. Lipert was unloading a revolver in his shop at 103 Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, when it went off, and the bullet struck Schwink. Lipert is under arrest.

ESTIMATE OF DR. LORIMER.

He of the World's Greatest Preachers, Dr. MacArthur Says.

The Rev. Dr. MacArthur, at the Calvary Baptist Church yesterday, preached a memorial sermon on the life and work of the Rev. Dr. George C. Lorimer, who died in France last week. Dr. MacArthur said that Dr. Lorimer was a man whom "no Church, no country, and no denomination could claim. In his sympathies he belonged to all English-speaking peoples."

"Without doubt," he also said, "he was one of the greatest preachers of the world. The late Dr. John Hall said that Dr. Lorimer's sermon on the persecution of the Armenians, delivered in London, was the most powerful appeal ever heard from human lips."

The order of the services at the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, of which Dr. Lorimer was the pastor, were not changed yesterday. The Trustees will meet on Wednesday, and it is expected that they will take action as to a memorial service. It is believed that Dr. Lorimer's body will arrive here in about a week.

AT AUCTION.

In the Adirondacks

A most desirable property in the Adirondacks will be sold under a foreclosure decree at public auction in Johnstown, Fulton county, N. Y., on SEPTEMBER 29, 1904, at 2 P. M., at the Court House there.
This property comprises what is known as the Canada Lakes, a group of five lakes located about 10 miles northwest from Gloversville, in Fulton county, New York.
The property consists of about 4100 acres, of which about 2500 acres are woodlands and about 1600 acres are lakes. All the lakes, with the exception of East Canada Lake, are surrounded by the land to be sold, and only a small part of the land bordering on East Canada Lake is not comprised in the land now offered for sale.
The land is very heavily timbered with spruce, beech, maple and birch, and as lumber land alone is very valuable and desirable.
As a private preserve or a summer resort it is unsurpassed. It is very accessible and most beautiful, and abounds with game and fish in season. It is in fact a miniature Lake George.
A full description of the property and details as to the sale may be had on application to either of the following parties:

ARREST BOSTON WOMAN ON KIDNAPPING CHARGE

Mother Gave Child Up, Mrs. Natino Wouldn't Give It Back.

GIRL PLACED ON THE STAGE

Mrs. Romano Got Worst of Struggle at Theatre When She Tried to Take Daughter.

Mrs. Bertha E. M. Natino, who the police say is the wife of a well-to-do manufacturer of artificial limbs in Boston, is locked up in the Mercer Street Station charged with kidnapping. According to the police the story leading up to the arrest began five years ago, when Mrs. Caroline Romano of this city, finding herself a widow and unable to support her four-year-old daughter, gave her into the keeping of Mrs. Natino. Last Winter she tried to get the child back, but without success. At that time she got a warrant in Boston, but the woman was only taken in custody yesterday.

Mrs. Romano lives at 103 East Third Street. When her troubles came five years ago she had an advertisement inserted in a newspaper stating the case, and a day or two afterward the child was placed in the care of Mr. and Mrs. Natino. There was no trouble until last Winter, when, the police say, Mrs. Natino placed the child on the stage in Boston in "Drink" and in a melodrama known as "Children of the Streets."

About that time Mrs. Romano thought she could care for Caroline. So she went to Mrs. Natino, who was in New York in May last, and asked that the child, then nine years old, be returned. Mrs. Natino told Mrs. Romano the girl was better off in her care, and asked that she be allowed to remain. Mrs. Romano would not agree, but when she went to take little Caroline home, the police say, she could find no trace of Mrs. Natino. A search followed, and finally, late in May, Mrs. Romano came across Mrs. Natino, her husband, and Caroline in front of a theatre in Boston.

Mrs. Romano demanded her child; Mrs. Natino refused, and a struggle for her possession followed. It ended in the Natinos getting away with Caroline. Mrs. Romano then had Mrs. Natino indicted on a charge of kidnapping, but the police did not succeed in finding her until yesterday, when it was learned Mrs. Natino was in New York. Detectives Pollack and Howard sent a decoy message to her that she was to be at the Eighth Street station of the Sixth Avenue Elevated. She was there at the appointed time, and the detectives arrested her.

The police say that Mr. Natino and the child are also in the city, but Inspector McClusky, who questioned Mrs. Natino for an hour, got no hint of their whereabouts. The Natinos are said to live at 88 Berkeley Street, Boston.

Newark Roundsman Ordered to Turn Over Money He Collected.

NEWARK, Sept. 11.—Roundsman Patrick Durkin of the Fourth Precinct, collector for the Police Mutual Aid Association, has been ordered by the Finance Committee to turn over to that body by Tuesday noon, between $500 and $600 of the funds of the association, which he has collected and so far failed to turn into the Treasury.

Durkin has promised to make the amount good in the time given him, but it is alleged that he has made similar promises to the committee, which he has failed to keep.

TOOK POISON IN FLATIRON.

Boy Says He Robbed Mother and Employer—Will Recover.

Because, according to his own statement, he had robbed his mother and his employer, Walter Solomon, a nineteen-year-old stenographer, shut himself in a room on the tenth floor of the Flatiron Building early yesterday morning, drank poison, and cut the artery in his left wrist. A watchman, making his rounds, discovered the boy in a vacant office, a few doors from that of his employer, D. W. Langdon. The watchman called in Policeman Keller of the West Thirtieth Street Station, who asked the boy why he tried to kill himself.

"I didn't want to live," replied Solomon, who was very weak from the loss of blood. "I've robbed my mother and my boss, and I wanted to quit it all."

Solomon lives at 405 Bleecker Street with his mother and an older brother. The brother admitted that he had been in some trouble at home, but said that it was not of a serious nature. He knew nothing of any difficulty with Mr. Langdon. Mr. Langdon was out of the city yesterday.

Employes of the Flatiron Building said there had never been an attempt at suicide there before. They declined to discuss the case, so the police were unable to learn how long Solomon had been lying in the vacant room before he was found. He was taken to the New York Hospital, where it was said that the poison had had little effect, and that he would recover.

SET HIMSELF AFIRE IN CELL.

Alleged Murderer Tries to End Life in Harlem Jail.

Antonio Di Carlo, the Italian who is held on the charge of shooting and killing Antonio Delago and wounding two other men and a little girl at 344 East One Hundred and Tenth Street a week ago Saturday, after a quarrel over 5 cents in a gambling game, set fire to his clothing and was badly burned while confined in his cell in the Harlem Court Jail Saturday evening. After his burns had been treated he tried repeatedly to tear the bandages off.

Di Carlo had been moody and silent ever since he was confined and was watched closely all the time, but on Saturday evening, when the keeper's attention was diverted for a moment, the prisoner lighted a match which he had managed to secrete in his clothes and set fire to his shirt. Before the keeper was back the flames had enveloped the upper part of his body.

A keeper was set in front of the door all night, and Di Carlo made no further attempts to injure himself until about sunrise yesterday morning. When the keeper's head was turned for a second or two, Di Carlo ripped off nearly all the bandages on his face and chest, exposing his burns. He was stopped before he could harm himself more, and Dr. Burns again bandaged him. The ripping off of the bandages made his burns worse, and he is now under the care of Dr. Campbell, the jail physician, and in a serious condition.

SHOOTS WOMAN, TAKES ACID.

Jealous Negro Wounds Two and Then Commits Suicide.

After shooting a woman twice in the head, probably fatally, and firing a fusillade of shots, in which another man was wounded in the wrist, John Isaacs, twenty-five years old, a negro elevator man, drank carbolic acid in his room, at 114 Seventh Avenue, early yesterday morning, and died.

Although they have no doubt that Isaacs did the shooting, the police could neither find the revolver nor the bottle which contained the acid, and arrested four negroes, including the proprietor of the house, and Claude Gardinen, who has a wound in his wrist, which he says was caused by one of Isaacs's bullets piercing the partition between their rooms.

The woman is known as Maddie McGill, and she had known Isaacs for some time, both living in the Seventh Avenue house. Lodgers say that recently the man had been very jealous. Isaacs and the woman quarreled yesterday morning when Isaacs began shooting. A passing milkman heard the shots, and notified the police of the West Twentieth Street Station, who found the McGill woman in a faint, and Isaacs lying almost dead from the acid he had drunk. He was removed to the New York Hospital, and died a few hours later. The woman has a chance for recovery.

BOY NEARLY BLED TO DEATH.

Rode on a Trolley from Bath Beach to Bridge—Had Cut an Artery.

While bathing at Bath Beach yesterday John Abonzino, seventeen years old, of 214 Canal Street, cut his right foot on a broken bottle, severing an artery. The youth scrambled out of the water and went to a druggist and had his foot bandaged. Then he and his companions took a train and came up to Manhattan. When they reached the Brooklyn bridge the cut had opened under the bandage and Abonzino's foot began to bleed profusely.

At the Manhattan end of the Bridge he found Policeman Broderick, who called an ambulance from the Hudson Street Hospital. Dr. Stone said the youth was weak from the loss of blood and hurried him to the hospital, where he said his condition is serious. He said the patient would have bled to death in a short time.

CLUE TO MURDER SUSPECT.

Companion of Man Found Asphyxiated Is Cross-Eyed.

Police Inspector Schmittberger and his detectives yesterday got one fairly promising clue to the identity of the supposed thief who has been missing since his companion, who is still unidentified, was found asphyxiated on Saturday in a room at 61 East Fourth Street. Mrs. Tessie Probst, who rented the room to the pair, says that the missing man is cross-eyed.

The police are not convinced that the missing man's companion was murdered. In fact, they said yesterday that they thought the case was one of suicide. They admitted, however, that there were many facts to support the murder theory. An autopsy may be made to-day to determine whether the man was poisoned or drugged before he was asphyxiated.

Both men, Mrs. Probst says, spoke both German and English.

ONE SMOKE COSTS $3,000.

Fire in Cigar Store Basement—Bowery Lodgers Above Scared.

Three thousand dollars' worth of cigars, cigarettes, and other smoking materials went up in smoke early yesterday morning in a fire in the basement of a United Cigar Stores Company branch at 274 Bowery.

Above the cigar store and also on the upper floors next door are lodging houses. When smoke began curling up past the windows and the engines banged up, the occupants hustled out, by stairs and fire-escapes.

After shivering about in the cool morning air for a while, they learned that it was safe to go back upstairs.

THOUGHT HUSBAND WAS DEAD.

His Body Only Ethereal, Woman Said—Lohron Called Police.

Mrs. Mattie Lohron was committed to the psychopathic ward of Bellevue Hospital yesterday on complaint of her husband. The Lohrons live at 1,016 Avenue A, and the wife is thirty-nine years old. For several days she has been insisting that Henry, her husband of the flesh, was merely an ethereal body. The husband called in a policeman yesterday.

"He has had seven wives before me," the woman told the policeman. "I'm his eighth. Last night he died. When I saw him coming in at 7 o'clock this morning I knew it must be his ghost. The fat woman across the hall sprinkled holy water all around or else the devil would have come and got him."

UNIONS TO TALK OVER TERMS OF SETTLEMENT

Meetings of General Trades Called for To-day.

TAKE UP SCHOOL PROBLEM

Both the Alliance and Employers' Association to Act on Appeal from Chairman Adams.

Meetings of several of the unions in the Building Trades Alliance will be held to-day to discuss propositions for a settlement of the tie-up. The letters of Chairman Adams of the Building Committee of the Board of Education to President Charles L. Eidlitz of the Employers' Association and William K. Nason, President of the Building Trades Alliance, containing an appeal for a truce in the building war as far as school work is concerned, will be considered at a meeting of the Building Trades Alliance this afternoon. In the absence of Charles L. Eidlitz, who has gone to St. Louis for a day or two, the letter will also be considered to-day by the Emergency Committee of the Building Trades Employers' Association.

It was learned yesterday that there is a division of opinion among union members, and especially the carpenters, as to the terms of settlement. Some of the old members believe that the union rules must be observed fully and that no settlement can be arranged unless the union men who have gone to work are disciplined and the non-union men discharged. Some of the members, however, argue that the present situation is a new one and that, as it is always changing, cast-iron rules cannot last for all time.

The general belief of members of unions which were engaged in the struggle last year over the acceptance of the arbitration agreement is that in a short time the new unions organized by the Employers' Association will amalgamate with the old ones, thus settling that trouble. The members of the old unions would eventually come into control again, as in the case of the Housesmiths' and Bridgemen's Union. The members of this union are not involved in the present fight, and are satisfied with the arbitration agreement. George Warner, delegate of the Housesmiths and Bridgemen, said yesterday:

"Our union was the strongest opponent of the arbitration agreement last year, but now after it has been tried it seems to us that it operates fairly enough if the employers live up to it. There can be no agreement that is not capable of modification, and it may be that the arbitration agreement could be amended."

An agitation, it was learned yesterday, had been started to form three sections in the Central Federated Union. At present there are two sections, the Building Trades Section and the Miscellaneous Section. The Building Trades' section, however, includes a number of trades not directly connected with building. It is proposed that one section shall consist of trades directly connected with building. A second section is proposed, consisting of building material handlers and others indirectly connected with building, and the third section is to be the regular Miscellaneous Section.

When the Central Federated Union is thus reorganized it is proposed by the delegates of the building trades unions who are pushing the movement to try to make the municipality its own contractor in the erection of schools. They say that there is no reason why the city should not build the schools, as well as the docks, and if the city were its own contractor, there would be no delays caused by the general building strikes or lock-outs.

RUNAWAY CUT HER TRESSES.

Newark Police Seek Girl Who May Have Tried to Look Like a Boy.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 11.—After cutting off her tresses so as to resemble a boy, sixteen-year-old Grace Casler, daughter of Charles Casler of 83 Wilsey Street, left her home last night, and a general alarm has been sent out by the police.

When the girl's parents returned from shopping, they found the front door wide open and everything in the house was scattered about the floor. They at first suspected that a robbery had been committed, but an investigation revealed their daughter's tresses, under which was the following note:

Dear Papa: When you receive this I will be out of Newark. There was a place advertised in the paper, so I wrote and just got an answer and I am going to take the job. I will write before long and will let you know how I am getting along. Love to all.

Investigation showed that a young man was seen to enter the Casler home with a bundle under his arm. A neighbor of the Casler's says he saw a young man climb the back fence. The girl's father believes that the note was written to throw him off the right track, as his daughter had threatened to leave home and go on the stage.

DRIVERS SPILLED IN PARK.

Bay Mare Leaves Runabout at Tree and Escapes.

A big bay mare hitched to a light runabout, in which were D. J. Coleman, Jr., of 68 West Fifty-sixth Street and a young woman companion, took fright last evening at Eighty-ninth Street and the West Drive, in Central Park, bolted, and dashed up the drive.

The breast strap of her harness parted and left the mare practically free to run from between the shafts. This she did only after the runabout had been run against a tree at one side of the drive and both Coleman and his companion thrown out. The young woman was not injured beyond being shaken up, and Coleman had only a slight cut over one eye.

Up to a late hour last night no trace of the mare had been found.

ARRESTED FOR ODD ROBBERY.

Companion of Woman Who Robbed Hoboken Man Is Arrested.

Anton Mickerhenis, who was wanted in connection with the alleged theft of about $3,000 in money and jewelry from the residence of George Karaschoff of 703 Hyde Point Avenue, West Hoboken, several months ago, was arrested in Brooklyn last night. On the day when the Karaschoff home was robbed Mickerhenis called there in company with a woman for the ostensible purpose of engaging board. After talking with Mr. Karaschoff for a few minutes Mickerhenis asked him to go out with him and have a drink.

Karaschoff accepted the invitation. When he returned he was surprised to find that the woman had gone, and with her the money and jewelry.

THREE INJURED IN SMASH-UP.

Street Car Makes Kindling Wood of Quinn's Runabout.

A runabout occupied by Joseph Quinn, Superintendent for the company which is doing the excavating for the new station of the Pennsylvania Railroad, with his brother William, of 309 East Twenty-fifth Street, and Peter J. O'Brien of 342 First Avenue, was run down by a south-bound Christopher Street car at Twentieth Street and Avenue A yesterday afternoon. The vehicle was smashed, and Joseph Quinn, who was driving, received a fracture of the collar bone, William severe scalp wounds, and O'Brien is probably injured internally.

All three were removed to Bellevue Hospital, and then to their homes. Joseph Quinn lives at 117 Ruben Street, Brooklyn. The police arrested the motorman of the car, William Weundt, of 507 Greenwich Street.

PROTEST OVER BRIDGE PLANS.

Art Society Wants All Submitted Before Action Is Taken.

The Municipal Art Society has sent to the Art Commission a set of resolutions asking the commission not to pass at its meeting upon any plans for the proposed Manhattan Bridge until all of the plans are submitted. The resolutions are based upon the premise that the plans submitted are not complete. They say, in part:

Resolved, That in this case the design depends for its success upon the solution proposed for the engineering problems involved. No design can merit approval except one by which such problems are adequately and appropriately solved. Approval of any such design as to its aesthetic features without reference to its fitness for the public utility intended would be misleading. Such approval would utterly fail to meet the confidence which, by the extensive powers given, the Legislature has bestowed upon the Art Commission; and

That the Art Commission of the City of New York be respectfully urged, in view of these facts, not to pass upon any of the details of this important structure without such full and complete plans as will show the entire work contemplated and thus prevent the possible approval of parts, in themselves possibly effective, but which might or might not be appropriate or artistically satisfactory when considered in connection with the constructive features of the entire proposed structure. Be it further

Resolved, That the Art Commission be earnestly urged to secure disinterested engineering expert advice upon plans for Bridge No. 3, recently submitted or to be submitted as substitutes for the plan already approved by the Art Commission for the same structure, and a comparison of the engineering merits of both designs, so that the Art Commission shall be enabled to consider understandingly their relative merits as whole structures before taking final action.

ANNUAL EUCHARIST CONGRESS.

Announcement was made in all Roman Catholic churches yesterday of the plans and programme for the third annual Eucharistic Congress, which is to assemble in this city on Sept. 27, 28, and 29. The congress will assemble at 10:30 A. M. on the 27th in the cathedral, with the celebration of Pontifical mass by Archbishop Farley. Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia will preach on "The Holy Eucharist in the Twentieth Century."

In the afternoon at the opening session an address of welcome will be delivered by Archbishop Farley, and an opening address by Bishop Maes of Covington, Ky., who was appointed by the Pope to act as President of the congress. In the evening there will be eucharistic devotion in all the churches in the city, followed by a meeting of the Diocesan Directors of the Priests' Eucharistic League at the house of the Fathers of the Blessed Sacrament, 185 East Seventy-sixth Street.

On Sept. 28, at 9 A. M., Bishop Colton of Buffalo will preach on the "Holy Communion." The second session will then convene at 10 A. M., followed in the afternoon at 3 P. M. by the third session, both of the sessions being devoted to the reading of eucharistic papers. In the evening eucharistic devotions will be held in all the churches.

The sermon on the closing day will be preached by Bishop Stang of Fall River, Mass., his subject being the "Eucharistic Apostolate." Eucharistic papers will be read at the 10 A. M. and 3 P. M. sessions. In the evening the closing service will be held in the Cathedral.

REWARD FOR SMITH'S WATCH.

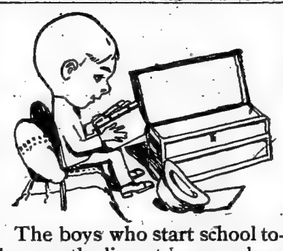
New Jersey's ex-Senator Was Robbed at St. Louis Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 11.—Chief of Police Hopper has issued circulars offering a reward of $200 for the recovery of a gold watch and scarf pin which was stolen from ex-United States Senator James Smith, Jr., while the latter was attending the St. Louis National Convention.

The jewelry was taken from the wash room of the Lindell Hotel in St. Louis, where Mr. Smith was staying.

The matter was reported to the police of St. Louis at the time, but no trace was found of the missing property.



The boys who start school to-day mostly live at home, where we are handy to stop any gaps that gape in their wardrobe.

But the boarding school boys who go soon must get together everything they'll need through the term.

We've done all that for them; have everything ready in boys' Fall and Winter wearables; and if it isn't convenient to bring in the boy we can outfit him by mail.

TO NAME HIGGINS OR ELSE HENDRICKS

Fifty-four Counties Line Up for Lieutenant Governor.

MAY SWING TO SYRACUSAN

Sudden Change Developed at Conferences Held Last Night by Gov. Odell.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 12.—As a result of series of conferences held to-night between Gov. Odell and the leaders from all the counties of the State, it developed that fifty-four of the sixty-one counties would be for Higgins if a test vote were taken in the convention.

It is now pretty conclusively established that Higgins will be the nominee unless the forces behind him should conclude that they would prefer Francis Hendricks.

It is learned from high authority that such a shift on the part of the men now behind Higgins is not an improbability.

Gov. Odell continues to assert that he has no candidate. Senator Platt says he is for Timothy Woodruff.

Obstacle in Higgins's Way.

The most serious obstacle in the way of the nomination of Mr. Higgins has been a lukewarmness toward his candidacy on the part of some of the Odell leaders. Ex-Gov. Frank S. Black, who arrived this evening, and George W. Aldridge and Louis F. Payn have been opposing the selection of Mr. Higgins.

They were not, however, urging the nomination of any other candidate, and the impression which has been created by—their opposition is that they had personal interests to serve and would endeavor to secure some much-desired pledges from Governor-Chairman Odell before they were brought around to his way of thinking.

George Cromwell, President of the Borough of Richmond, to whom an offer of the nomination for Lieutenant Governor was made to-day by emissaries of Gov. Odell, to-night decided that he could not accept second place on the ticket. When Mr. Cromwell's decision was made known there was talk of Louis Stern, President of the Republican Club, for Lieutenant Governor. The suggestion of his name was made to Gov. Odell by Edward Lauterbach and others.

Collector of the Port Stranahan arrived to-night and declared for Higgins. He said he thought Mr. Higgins was unquestionably the best man who could be nominated. Collector Stranahan's advocacy of Mr. Higgins's nomination was thought by many to indicate that Mr. Higgins was the candidate President Roosevelt preferred to see nominated.

Gov. Odell and Senator Platt were much together during the day, and several conferences between them were held in the cottage of the Senator. The Governor and the Senator averred that they were acting in perfect harmony. Both said that it was their desire to have a harmonious understanding upon the Gubernatorial nomination before the convention.

"It is my desire and the desire of Senator Platt," said Gov. Odell, "that but one name should be presented to the convention for Governor. We believe that will be brought about. Of course, if the friends of any aspirant for the nomination should desire to present his name after an understanding has been reached between the leaders as to what is best to be done, in their judgment, they will have that privilege."

The harmony between Gov. Odell and Senator Platt, although sufficient to call forth expressions of edification and admiration from subordinate leaders and the rank and file, had not up to dinner time reached the stage of an agreement between them as to who should be the candidate. When Gov. Odell left Senator Platt's rooms late in the afternoon he was asked what the situation was, and said:

"As I find the sentiment here it appears to be most favorable to Higgins, Hendricks, and Woodruff. I have no candidate. My desire is for the nomination of the man whose candidacy would give the best assurance of victory."

Cold Water on Woodruff Boom.

Although Gov. Odell included Woodruff as among the best of probabilities, and has taken care always to mention Mr. Woodruff's name in any statement which he has made about candidates, the Governor-Chairman's intimates were going about openly asserting that Woodruff was out of the race. A favorite expression with them was "He hasn't a show on earth."

In their estimation the contest had absolutely narrowed down to Higgins and Hendricks. During the forenoon they gave it as their opinion that Higgins stood by far the best chance, but later in the day they temporarily shifted in a way which indicated that meantime they had received information from headquarters which had caused them to rate Mr. Hendricks's chances much higher than they had in the morning.

Senator Platt's view of the prevailing sentiment on the Governorship was quite opposite to that of Gov. Odell. When he was approached for information after his afternoon talk with the Governor, he said:

"The sentiment here is for Woodruff for Governor and Mayor Knight of Buffalo for Lieutenant Governor. I am for Woodruff, and I believe that he will be nominated. Gov. Odell has no candidate. He has told me so twenty times. His hands are absolutely off, and that means the nomination of Woodruff."

Mr. Hendricks went to Albany this morning and it was shortly after his departure that it became generally known that his boom began to assume large proportions. Lieut. Gov. Higgins is now in Albany, and it was the general impression that Mr. Hendricks had gone to the Capital to have a talk with Mr. Higgins. It was hinted that he was the bearer of a message to Mr. Higgins from Gov. Odell. Confirmation on that point, however, could not be secured.

The notion that Mr. Hendricks was likely to be the nominee did not arise solely REPUBLICAN PLATFORM BRIEF.

As Approved by Odell It Is 400 Words Long—Labor Plank in Dozen Words.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 12.—The platform to be adpoted by this convention, if it goes through as it was drafted this afternoon, (and as it has received the approval of Governor-Chairman Odell, it is not likely to be changed much,) will be the shortest declaration ever adopted by a convention in this State.

It contains less than 400 words.

In short, sharp sentences of unqualified indorsement the platform "points with pride" to the record of Republican administration in National and State affairs. No words are wasted in expatiating upon the virtues of Republicanism or in argument intended to convince doubting Thomases that those virtues actually are possessed by the party and have been manifested in the administrations of President Roosevelt and Gov. Odell.

In dealing with National issues the same brevity of declaration prevails. On the tariff, the currency, and other great questions, the dominant ideas of the planks in the National platform have been set forth in tabloid form.

There is a labor plank of a dozen or so words to the general effect that labor is entitled to all the benefits and good things which "common humanity" should accord to it.

The most important plank having to do with State matters is one which pledges the party to repeal the law taxing the surplus of the savings banks. This is a matter on which the Governor has changed his mind, for he had that tax imposed upon the savings banks as a part of his scheme to wipe out direct taxation in the State.

At the same time this four-hundred word platform declares that the abolition of the direct tax under the administration of Gov. Odell is just about the grandest thing that ever happened to the State of New York, and congratulates the people of the State on the condition of the Treasury as proving that all of the Governor's tax reform measures have been wise and productive.

The pledge is made that work shall be persistently and honestly pushed on the canal and on the public highways.

In order that more money may be available for highway and other improvements the platform demands the amendment of the law limiting the terms of bond issues for those purposes by providing for longer term bonds, thus increasing the borrowing capacity of the State.

This is absolutely all there is in the platform as it was drafted to-night, and as Gov. Odell approves of it.

GANG SHOOTS DETECTIVES.

Three Hurt in Battle at Eleventh Street and Avenue A.

Three detectives of the East Fifth Street Station were wounded in a fight at Eleventh Street and Avenue A between a gang of thieves known as the "Humpey Jackson" gang and a squad of men under Police Capt. McDermott shortly before midnight last night. The row almost reached the proportions of a neighborhood riot. When the fight was all over these men were taken to the East Fourth Street Police Station as prisoners:

William Noble, twenty-five years old, of 437 East Fourteenth Street; Robert Reilly, twenty-four years old, of 404 East Fourteenth Street; Thomas Jackson, twenty-five years old, of 402 East Twelfth Street, and Frank Reilly, twenty-six years old, of 425 East Seventeenth Street. Jackson is the leader of the gang, and after him it is named.

The detectives who were injured were James Grant, John O'Brien, Charles Earnst, and Detective Butler. They were, by curious coincidence, all either shot or cut in the hands, Grant's knuckles on his right hand being almost shot off.

The gang hangs out at a little graveyard near Twelfth Street, and has a record of having held up some forty persons within the last month. They tried their trick again last night upon a man by the name of Frank Kelly.

They had a special grudge against Kelly because recently, when the gang tried to rob a saloon in the neighborhood, he "peached" on them. So last night when they caught Kelly in a lonesome place in the neighborhood they united in getting square with him, and robbing him as well. Badly battered up, he came into the Fifth Street Police Station about 11:30 o'clock and told Capt. McDermott of what had happened.

Capt. McDermott decided that the gang had about reached their limit. He called the detectives, who happened to be in the police station at the time—Wasserman, O'Brien, Grant, Butler, and Ernest. They were all heavily armed. When the squad of detectives reached the locality indicated by Kelly they saw a crowd of toughs on Avenue A, between Eleventh and Twelfth Streets. They made way slowly when they saw the detectives coming, backing into Eleventh Street.

The detectives, headed by Capt. McDermott, pushed on after the toughs ahead into Eleventh Street. It is dark in there at midnight, and no sooner were the detectives in this dark street than the thieves, backing up, pulled their revolvers and opened fire. The detectives blazed away in the dark. Then they made a charge up the street into a hand-to-hand struggle.

That stopped the shooting, revolvers, in some instances, being changed for knives, but the four prisoners were rounded up within a few minutes. At the station charges of highway robbery and felonious assault were preferred against them.

A Bellevue surgeon dressed the wounds of the detectives. The thieves had not escaped unhurt, and the physician was kept busy for a half hour sewing up and dressing wounds.

The firing in Eleventh Street was very wild while it lasted, and it would not surprise the police if this morning some wounded should turn up not before discovered.

Capt. McDermott said last night, when the prisoners had been locked up and wounds sewed up, that the gang was a rival to the Monk Eastman gang and fully as bad. He said that nearly all of those who had been caught had been in the police station before, and several of them had records.

FATHER OF 25 CHILDREN.

President Writes "Good Luck"—Grown Ups Will Vote Republican.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Sept. 12.—S. P. Swartwood, who is the proud father of twenty-five children, will receive to-morrow a photograph of President Roosevelt, signed "Good luck to you from Theodore Roosevelt."

There are five sons old enough to vote the Republican ticket. Swartwood sent a list containing the names and birthdays of each child. Swartwood is fifty years old and his wife is four years younger. They were married on April 28, 1871. Of the twenty-five children there were only two sets of twins and twenty children are alive.

Swartwood told the President about his family recently in a letter.

JAPAN MAKES PROTEST AGAINST LENA'S STAY

Demands That Russian Transport Leave San Francisco.

LIMIT TWENTY-FOUR HOURS

Inspected by American Officer, Who Finds She Cannot Sail—Leave to Stay Probable.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—The expected protest of Japan against allowing the Russian auxiliary cruiser Lena, which arrived at San Francisco yesterday, to remain longer than twenty-four hours, came to-day. The Japanese Consul in that city, through the Collector of Customs, made formal demand that the vessel be required to leave at the end of that time.

The Collector's telegram officially notifying the authorities of the arrival of the Lena, and of Japan's protest, was addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who at once sent copies to Acting Secretary of State Adee, and Acting Secretary Murray of the Department of Commerce and Labor, who has direct jurisdiction in the matter. The telegram reads as follows:

"Japanese Consul has made demand upon me that Russian auxiliary cruiser Lena, arriving at this port 11th inst., leave within twenty-four hours. The Captain reports that he has entered for repairs of engines and boilers, principally the latter.

"I am requesting the inspector of hulls and boilers to make an examination of vessel's machinery, with the consent of the Russian Consul and the commander of the Lena. Can find no authority in the law or regulations for the Collector assuming any authority in the premises, and request instructions."

THE GOVERNMENT'S INSTRUCTIONS.

After a conference with the Commissioner of Navigation Acting Secretary Murray sent the following dispatch to the Collector:

"Your telegram addressed to Secretary Treasury, concerning Russian steamship Lena received at 4:40 P. M. You should have addressed this department as directed in Circular No. 29.

"Wire this department hour of steamer's arrival at your port and concise resume of Steamboat Inspector's report, and if repairs are necessary the probable time required to complete them. On receipt of particulars the department will instruct you further. See Circular No. 29, end of Page 2 and all of Page 3."

The circular referred to was issued on Feb. 13, immediately after hostilities between Russia and Japan commenced, and besides containing the President's proclamation and the provisions of the statutes relating to neutrality, gave instructions to Collectors that "should any case arise requiring official action, you will communicate the facts to the department by telegraph."

Her evident errand to prey on commerce suspected of having Japan as destination has suggested that there may be other Russian vessels on the coast waiting for an opportunity to strike. It is expected here that much that is claimed as to the unseaworthiness of the Lena will not prove true, and that she is in fair trim for work on merchantmen.

LENA CANNOT SAIL.

American Officer Inspects and Reports —Leave to Stay Likely.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 12.—An inspection of the cruiser Lena was made late this afternoon by Lieut. Commander W. C. Herbert, fleet engineer of the Pacific Squadron, acting under orders of Admiral Goodrich.

Herbert carefully inspected the vessel and found that the boilers were in such bad shape that, though the vessel could make ten knots with them, she would not be seaworthy in a storm.

His report was wired to Washington to-night and will probably lead to the granting of a special stay here for repairs.

It is understood that Herbert hinted the condition of the boilers was due partly to crowding on more steam than the machinery could stand.

The Japanese Consul General called on Collector Stratton shortly after he entered his office this morning. To the demand that the Lena be ordered to leave within twenty-four hours, Collector Stratton returned a curt refusal.

Consul General Uyeno then made the demand that he be permitted to be the judge of the seaworthiness of the Russian ship.

Collector Stratton replied that the United States was not only willing, but able to cope with the situation without the assistance of either of the belligerents. When Consul Uyeno emerged from the Collector's office he denied that there had been any friction. That was all he would say at the time.

Collector Stratton made the following statement to newspaper men:

"Under the circumstances I am unable to say much for publication. I will say, however, that this delay is not caused by my ignorance of the points of international law involved in this matter. These are absolutely clear and I understand them thoroughly. The point is, I don't know just how far I can go without authority."

Just then a telegram from Washington was handed the Collector. Its contents he refused to make public.

Rear Admiral Goodrich took luncheon with Capt. Berlinsky and other officers of the Lena on board the vessel. Lieut. Zotoff, speaking for the Captain, stated that the main object of the Russian vessel in making this port was to have absolutely necessary repairs made to her engines and boilers.

Her bottom is foul and will have to be cleaned in dry dock. The Lieutenant said that the Lena's coal bunkers were far from being depleted, and he thought it would be unnecessary for her to coal at this port.

Navigating Officer Speckneeff, who spoke excellent English, said:

"We were sent to Vladivostok to transfer the troops home when the war should be over. The Lena is not a warship. We cannot fight.

"Needing repairs, we were first ordered back to the Baltic. Afterward these orders were changed, and we have come here because it is the nearest port in which we could get the new boilers we need."

Being asked how long he would remain here, the officer said:

"We expect orders from our naval representative at Washington, who has just been advised of our arrival. It is probable that he will ask the American Government for its permission to remove the guns from our decks and allow the vessel to remain here until the repairs can be finished."

When asked how long he thought that would require, he said:

"The Lena will probably remain here until the war is over. We expect that the officers and crew will be sent home by way of New York."

An inspection of the decks of the converted cruiser, to which no objection was made, revealed the fact that she had mounted twenty-five guns.

FORT WORTH, Texas, Sept. 12.—The presence of a Russian warship at San Francisco has caused cotton shippers here to take out war risks. Much cotton is shipped from Texas to Japan. Risks are from 10 to 15 cents per bale.

MRS. H. M. FLAGLER ROBBED.

Lost $10,000 in Cash and Jewels, Newport Report Says.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 12.—Word was received from New York to-day that a robbery by which Mrs. H. M. Flagler lost a chatelaine bag containing money and jewelry aggregating several thousand dollars in value at Newport was being investigated by detectives.

The date of the robbery was not given, but as Mrs. Flagler has not been here since the middle of August it is thought it must have been at that time. Mrs. Flagler was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Julien T. Davies while here.

The police say that they had no report of the robbery of Mrs. Flagler. The messages from New York stated that the chatelaine bag contained $6,000 in cash, a draft for $10,000, and jewels valued at $4,000. The robbery, it was said, took place in a crowd at a lawn party.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Flagler are now in Bretton Woods, in the White Mountains, New Hampshire, so it was said last night at the Flagler country residence, Orienta Point, Mamaroneck.

PHIPPSES REACH AGREEMENT.

Property Held in Wife's Name to be Transferred to Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Sept. 12.—The agreement so long looked for in the affairs of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence C. Phipps of Pittsburg was reached here to-day when, at a conference of attorneys on both sides, the proposition made by Mrs. Phipps last June was accepted by Mr. Phipps.

The parents are to have equal custody of the children, and all property held in Mrs. Phipps's name, including the Denver and Pittsburg mansions, is to be transferred to Mr. Phipps. No request for a money consideration was made. Both parties will contribute from their bountiful incomes to the support of the little girls, Helen and Dorothy. Everything is settled except details.

Both parties desire a divorce and one will be secured, but Mrs. Phipps is prepared to defend the charge of desertion, upon which Mr. Phipps brought suit for divorce in June, and answer will be made to-morrow in the District Court denying the charge.

Mrs. Phipps and her father, C. H. Chandler, are at the Adams Hotel. After the divorce proceedings are concluded Mrs. Phipps will make her home in Denver.

MOTORMEN DO NOT CHANGE.

Most of Them Prefer Elevated Jobs to Subway Places.

The last echo of the trouble on the Manhattan Railroad, which nearly led to a general strike, came yesterday evening at 5 o'clock when, in accordance with the agreement between the Interborough Company and the men, the time expired for applications by elevated railroad men for subway positions.

It was said at the bureau where the applicants received their blanks that a number of motormen had applied for subway jobs, and that among the other applicants were some of the officers of the Amalgamated Association. Superintendent Hedley said that the applications from the elevated motormen were from men on the extra list, he believed, and from others who had night runs.

"The old motormen on the elevated roads will stick to their present jobs," he said. "They think it better to have $3.50 for nine hours on the elevated road than to have $3.50 for ten hours on the subway. I cannot tell just now what proportion of elevated railroad men have applied for subway jobs."

CHARITY CHAIR IN COLLEGE.

Chicago University to Open a Novel Branch of Study.

CHICAGO, Sept. 12.—For the purpose of providing courses of study and practical training in social and philanthropic work, the University of Chicago will open on Oct. 1 at the Fine Arts Building a new department to be called the Institute of Social Science and Arts. Prof. Graham Taylor is to be the director.

The department has been formed to meet the demand for trained men and women in charitable and reformatory institutions, in organized movements for civic betterment, in social settlements, in the institutional work of churches, and in home and foreign mission work.

AUTOS CARRIED THIS ELECTION.

Citizens of Rye Who Opposed Incorporation Had to Walk.

RYE, N. Y., Sept. 12.—Rye will be incorporated as a village, and it is planned to spend much money in improving the place. The incorporation was opposed by some of the tradesmen and others, but the opposition was not as formidable as was expected. All the time the polls were open to-day at a special election to ascertain whether the village should, incorporate or not, automobiles and carriages were kept in use bringing voters to the polls.

It was not an infrequent sight to see the liveried coachman, with the footman, drive up to the polling place, and then from the interior of the vehicle would emerge the gardener of their employer. After they had voted, the carriage would go to the station to meet a train and bring the owner to the poll.

Those opposed to incorporation walked, and the result was they were beaten, and beaten badly. One hundred and ninety-nine votes were cast. Of these 152 were in favor and 27 against. No women voted.

FIGHT ON TRAIN, THREE DEAD.

Florida Deputy Fired on When He Went to Make Arrests.

VALDOSTA, Ga., Sept. 12.—A Deputy Sheriff who attempted to arrest the Altman brothers, accused of stabbing to death one white man and two negroes on a train yesterday, was fired on by friends of the men. The deputy retired, and now the Altmans are in a house surrounded by a crowd armed with Winchesters, who say the men can only be taken over their dead bodies.

The row in which the killing was done occurred on a train coming from Jacksonville, Fla., to this city. For a long time there has been bad blood between the Altmans and the Duncan family, both of Baxter, Fla. Charles and Hillary Altman and Marshall and Jackson Duncan were on the train. The Altman faction, it is alleged, picked a quarrel with a negro named Jim Riley, who worked for the Duncans. He was stabbed through the heart with a dirk.

Then Jackson Duncan remonstrated, and Hillary Altman drew his dirk and stabbed Duncan, who died soon after. Marshall Duncan was also stabbed, but not fatally. This morning the row was renewed. W. M. Duncan and another younger son were slightly wounded.

MAINE REPUBLICAN BY 30,000 MAJORITY

Less by 3,000 Than the Plurality Cast in 1900.

HAD EXPECTED ONLY 18,000

Democratic Gain of 31 Per Cent. and Republican Gain of About 15 Per Cent.

PORTLAND, Me., Sept. 12.—The Republicans exceeded their expectations in the State election to-day in carrying the State for William T. Cobb of Rockland, the candidate for Governor, by a plurality of about 30,000 over Cyrus W. Davis of Waterville, his Democratic opponent.

Complete returns will not be received for several days, but 380 out of 522 cities, towns and plantations give Cobb, 59,705; Davis, 38,399. The same places in 1900 gave Hill, (Rep.,) 51,707; Lord, (Dem.,) 29,302. These returns show a Republican gain of about 15 per cent., and a Democratic gain of about 31 per cent. over 1900.

The vote for Governor will probably be the largest since 1888.

In the light of pre-election claims both parties should be satisfied with the result. The Republicans placed Cobb's plurality at 18,000, and the leaders were overjoyed to-night in having those figures exceeded by 12,000. The Democratic leaders stated yesterday that if the Republican plurality of 33,384 of four years ago, was reduced by one vote that they should regard it as a Democratic victory.

Up to a late hour to-night no statement could be obtained from any of the Democratic leaders.

All four of the Republican members of Congress were re-elected. Amos L. Allen, in the First, and Charles E. Littlefield, in the Second, were returned by practically the same pluralities as in 1900, while in the Third Congressman E. C. Burleigh ran ahead of his vote of four years ago. In the Fourth District Congressman Llewellyn Powers was re-elected by about 6,500 plurality, compared with 8,800 two years ago.

The Democrats made slight gains in both branches of the Legislature.

Voting in Maine yesterday showed a large Democratic gain in the manufacturing centres, according to the returns received at the Democratic Headquarters last night.

Lewiston went Democratic by 500, this being a Democratic gain of 1,000. Auburn, in the same county, showed a Democratic gain of 150, and in all that county, Androscoggin, the gain was 1,500. The vote in Lewiston was for Cobb 1,528 and for Davis 2,114.

In Cumberland County there was a Democratic gain of 2,000. They elected a Democratic Sheriff in this county, and also one in York County.

In Bangor there was a Democratic gain of 500, and in Oxford County a Democratic gain of more than 1,000. The Democratic gain in Augusta was 412, and the total Democratic gain in Kennebec County was 2,000.

According to the figures, a great many counties have elected Democratic Sheriffs. No estimates were given out as to the vote for the Legislature.

WANT TO BUY A TITLE?

BERLIN, Sept. 12.—There has been an exposure here of a regular dealer in orders and titles, who, it is asserted, says he is able to procure honors in several of the European States for persons who are willing to devote the necessary money to "charitable purposes."

The trafficker in these honors, who is a Tyrolean, is said to conduct his trade in a businesslike manner and to issue a regular price list which quotes the degree of nobility in certain German States at $30,000 and the Baronetcy at $50,000; the Spanish nobility at $4,000, Turkish orders from $2,000 downward, and Persian orders at low prices.

Portuguese titles of Count and Marquis are said to be offered without the price being named, and Consulates in various South American countries and in Persia are reported to be on sale at from $1,200 to $2,400. Definite prices for a host of minor decorations, it is declared, are also given in the price list.

UNHAPPY CHILD WEDDING.

Brooklyn Girl Accuses Husband's Parents of Alienation.

An unhappy sequel to a boy and girl marriage was before Justice Herrick, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, when Mrs. Augusta J. Bailey was appointed as guardian ad litem for her daughter, Mrs. Sallie Cochran, in the latter's suit against the parents of her husband to recover $50,000 damages for alleged alienation of his affections.

Mrs. Cochran lives with her mother at 244 Classon Avenue, while her husband, Ernest Cochran, makes his home with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Cochran, at 296 Clifton Place. The younger couple were married on Sept. 20 of last year. Both were nineteen years old, and had been attendants at the De Kalb Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, where they had met. The wedding was at the John Street Church, Manhattan. It was some time later that young Cochran went to live with his bride at her mother's house, after telling his parents of the marriage. Mrs. Cochran alleges that her husband was "enticed" from the house one night and did not return. Believing his parents were keeping him from her she brought suit.

The elder Mr. Cochran declared yesterday that there was nothing in the talk about his son having been enticed away. He said he would fight the action.

FOUR DEAD IN TENEMENT FIRE.

Flames Spread Rapidly from Basement Up the Stairs.

Four persons lost their lives in a tenement fire, which started at 2:30 o'clock this morning, at 68-70 First Street. The flames were discovered in the basement and spread rapidly up the common stairway of the double building to the top or fifth floor.

Twenty families were sleeping in the building when persons who had noticed the flames from the street gave the alarm. The fire escapes were soon filled with frenzied men, women and children.

The firemen ran ladders up the front of the structure and took down many. Half a dozen men and women leaped from windows and the fire escapes and were injured. A score of persons escaped by way of the roof.

When the firemen had partly subdued the flames they searched the tenement and found the dead all on the top floor—three men and one woman. Up to 3 o'clock the dead had not been identified.

Southern Pacific Crash Kills Fireman and Unidentified Man.

RENO, Nevada, Sept. 12.—A. L. Hicks, fireman, and an unidentified man were killed and several passengers injured to-day by a collision between Southern Pacific passenger trains at Lawton, seven miles west of Reno.

A west-bound passenger train, running thirty-five miles an hour, crashed into the third section of an east-bound train carrying a large party of Knights Templars. Both trains were double headers, and all four locomotives were wrecked, as well as the baggage and day coaches. The accident was due to disobedience of orders.

FRENCH AND COLONIALS CLASH.

Newfoundland Fishing Vessels Held Up by Armed Men.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Sept. 12.—The difficulties between French and Colonial fishermen on the French shore are daily growing more acute. On Saturday a British warship, on the demand of the French Commodore, stopped a party of Colonial lobster catchers there.

On Friday, on the fishing banks, fourteen men, armed with knives, from a French fishing vessel which had previously disguised her name with a piece of sail cloth, boarded a Colonial vessel and carried off her whole stock of bait. A few days previous another French crew did the same thing, the French Captain being armed with a revolver.

In another section a French vessel deliberately ran down and nearly sank a Colonial fishing smack. British warships will be asked to punish the offenders.

Both were taken to the Homeopathic Hospital.

The car was overloaded and started to go down rather fast when the boy in charge became frightened and put on a clutch brake, which broke and precipitated the car to the bottom.

JAPANESE CAPTURE GEN. SASSULITCH AND 3,000 MEN

Russian Rear Guard Cut Off South of the Hun River.

OYAMA AGAIN ADVANCING

Russians Are in Fear of Another Flanking Movement.

REPORTED CHECK TO KUROKI

Linevitch, with 50,000 Men, Is Said to Have Cut His Communications—Famine at Mukden.

LONDON, Tuesday, Sept. 13.—The Morning Post states that official Russian dispatches received in London announce that Lieut. Gen. Sassulitch, who commanded the portion of the Russian rearguard south of the Hun River, has been severely wounded and captured with 3,000 out of his 5,000 men.

It is added by The Morning Post that Gens. Zarroubaieff, Kondratovitch, and Bilderling have checked Gen. Kuroki's advance.

A correspondent of The Daily Mail who was with the Japanese army repeats, in a telegram from Tien-Tsin, the report that Lieut. Gen. Linevitch, with 50,000 men, invaded Northeastern Korea and cut Gen. Kuroki's communications with Feng-wang-Cheng.

Gen. Sassulitch has been an unlucky commander since the land fighting began. It was he who was in command of the Russian troops in the first great battle, that of Kiu-lien-Cheng, when the Japanese drove the Russians back from their positions on the Yalu River with heavy loss. After that battle it was said in St. Petersburg that Sassulitch had disobeyed his instructions, and that he would be court-martialed. He was described as "headstrong" and as lacking judgment, but that he had only followed orders in making as much resistance as he could at the Yalu was apparently proved by his retention of his command. There have been various reports recently that Gen. Linevitch, with 50,000 men, was marching south from Vladivostok, but these reports were of a conflicting character. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Echo de Paris heard that Linevitch was going to the north of Mukden, and that Kuropatkin's retreat from Liao-Yang was in order to induce the Japanese to follow him and so become wedged between his own and Linevitch's forces.]

Japanese Advancing Rapidly.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 12.—The Birzheviya Viedomosti's correspondent at Tie Pass telegraphs to his paper as follows:

"The Japanese, who had been accused of moving forward slowly, are now advancing very rapidly.

"Little avails the Russian increase of troops, for the Japanese are receiving reinforcements from Niu-Chwang.

"The initiative will remain in the hands of the Japanese, and their tactics will always be repeated."

A dispatch has been received from Lieut. Gen. Sakharoff, under yesterday's date, reporting that no large Japanese force has been seen north of the branch railroad to Yen-Tai, but that south of it there are many large camps of Japanese.

The three armies of Marquis Oyama are reported to have united north of the Tai-Tse River.

A Russian correspondent telegraphs that Gen. Kuroki has fallen back on Yen-Tai, but he points out that previous experience has shown that when the Japanese withdrew from the Russian front this usually was the precursor of their appearance on the Russian flank.

The correspondent thinks that the indications point to a Winter campaign. Moreover, he says, there remain two full months, the best of the year, for campaigning.

Unofficial information tends to confirm the reports that Gen. Kuropatkin is withdrawing the bulk of his army northward from Mukden. The best unofficial opinion is that Kuropatkin does not contemplate making a serious stand at Mukden.

A Russian correspondent at the front considers it to be extremely significant that the Chinese officials at Mukden have already broken off relations with the Russians. The chief of the Chinese officials says he has received orders from the Japanese to pay the taxes to them.

Japanese Pushing North.

LIAO-YANG, Sunday, Sept. 11.—(Delayed.)—The Japanese are pushing on appointed at the failure of their plans to impose a final conflict upon the Russians at Liao-Yang in the hope of breaking up the present Russian army in Manchuria.

The Japanese are now pushing reinforcements and supplies northward in every possible way, using boats on the Liao River and its tributaries, while all the native roads leading into Liao-Yang are filled with wheelbarrows and other conveyances carrying grain and ammunition into the Chinese city, where Field Marshal Marquis Oyama, the Japanese Commander in Chief, has established his headquarters.

There is every indication, therefore, that the Japanese intend to force if possible a decisive battle with the Russians.

The impression in Liao-Yang was that the Russians had destroyed the railroad between here and Mukden, but an examination of the line as far north as possible showed it to be everywhere intact. This is taken to indicate that the Russians propose to use the line again.

The Russians posted proclamations along the line warning the Chinese not to damage it under pain of future punishment.

It is believed that the Japanese forces will remain stationary at Liao-Yang for one month to come.

Report from Oyama.

TOKIO, Sept. 12.—A telegram received here from Field Marshal Oyama at midnight last night gives the disposition of the Russian troops in the vicinity of Yen-Tai and Mukden.

Marquis Oyama says that a large force of Russian cavalry is posted at Ping-tai-Tse, which is about twenty-four miles to the east of the Yen-Tai railway station, and that another force of cavalry occupies the town of Hei-ling-Chai, to the northward of Ping-tai-Tse. Other bodies of cavalry, with artillery, are located at Huang-shan-Lin, on the eastern road out of Mukden, as well as in the neighborhood of Yumen-tzsu-Shan, which is occupied by the Japanese.

Russian Retreat Continues.

MUKDEN, Sept. 12.—The Russians have been continuing their retirement to Tie Pass.

The advance of the Japanese has been slow, though the military situation is not unfavorable to them.

Many Russian companies now consist of only thirty men, but notwithstanding the Russian reverse, the retreating troops are cheerful.

Last night rain again fell in torrents, and to-day it is drizzling. The roads are impassable and military movements are at a standstill.

CZAR MAY RECALL KUROPATKIN

Rumor That Linevitch Is to Succeed Him Owing to Liao-Yang Defeat.

ST. PETERSBURG, Tuesday, Sept. 13 (2 A. M.)—With the lull in military operations and almost entire suspension of dispatches from the front, St. Petersburg has again fallen back upon rumors.

Countless stories are afloat regarding the Russian defeat at Liao-Yang, some of which are absolutely absurd, while others have apparently enough basis in fact to give them a color of possibility. While none of these stories can be confirmed, it would not surprise those best informed if some of them should turn out to be true. Of first importance is the revival of the rumor of Viceroy Alexieff's resignation, based probably upon differences said to exist between him and Gen. Kuropatkin and others in authority in the Far East.

Of next importance is a rumor that Gen. Kuropatkin is to be superseded. Lieut. Gen. Linevitch being named as his most probable successor. This is supposed to be a result of the Emperor's displeasure with Kuropatkin's generalship at Liao-Yang and his general dissatisfaction with the course of events at the front.

Many other rumors are probably the outgrowth of jealousy, bickerings, and irresponsible criticism of the defeat at Liao-Yang, but none is traceable to an authentic source.

Nevertheless, in a country where the will of one man is the supreme law, sudden changes of the most grave importance are always possible. Neither Alexieff's nor Kuropatkin's friends, however, seem to attach great importance to the stories involving them.

KUROPATKIN'S PLANS UPSET.

He Hoped to Defeat Foes in Detail and Then Relieve Port Arthur.

GEN. KUROKI'S HEADQUARTERS IN THE FIELD, NEAR LIAO-YANG, Sept. 8, (Delayed.)—The battle of Liao-Yang was a magnificent victory of which the Japanese have great reason to be proud, although they were unable to realize their hopes of another Sedan.

The execution of a campaign by the Japanese on such a vast scale against an army probably their superior in numbers, possessing more modern guns, of greater calibre and range than theirs, established behind fortifications of great completeness and unprecedented extent, and directed by skillful commanders, excites the highest admiration on the part of military critics.

It is unquestioned that at Liao-Yang Gen. Kuropatkin expected to turn the tide of war against the Japanese.

It would now appear that the fighting of the last few weeks, since the failure of the Russian movement to the south, was not expected to be decisive, but was a series of preliminary operations conducted for the purpose of harassing the Japanese and gaining time for the crucial struggle.

The foreign military observers with the Japanese Army find convincing evidences that Gen. Kuropatkin planned to defeat the Japanese armies in detail, and then to dispatch a powerful column to the south for the relief of Port Arthur, and they are of the opinion that with the thirteen divisions at his command Gen. Kuropatkin could have accomplished this had the quality of his officers and soldiers equaled that of the Japanese.

Not until the night of Sept. 3, after five days of continuous battle, did the Russians take the first steps toward retreat. With an almost unfordable and wide river at his back and a strong force of Japanese opposing him in the rear and on the flank, Gen. Kuropatkin was able to withdraw his army without losing a single gun.

Japanese Opinion of Foes Improves.

One result of this battle has been to give the Japanese a much higher opinion of the abilities of their antagonists than the exhibitions at the Yalu River and elsewhere compelled them to entertain. To-day the Japanese Army is self-possessed, and it has indulged in no demonstration of rejoicing.

The work done by the Russians in preparing the neighborhood of Liao-Yang to be a theatre of battle was of incredible magnitude. In addition to the extensive fortifications on the south side of the Tai-Tse River there were three lines of defenses for the protection of the eastern approaches of the railroad, which in themselves constituted a formidable battle arena.

The fighting was carried right up to the railroad line, but notwithstanding the fact that the Japanese shelled the last trains which left Liao-Yang on the way to Mukden it was impossible for them to intercept any of the Russian rear guard.

The area north of the river, which was fought over by the contending armies, presents a terrible picture of the results of war. The fields are strewn with hundreds of lines of trenches, and, marking the successive stages of retreat, crematory fires are yet burning. Searching parties are still bringing in Japanese bodies.

Graves of Russian soldiers can be seen at every turn, some dug by comrades and others by Japanese. On the hillside is a group of 200 or 300 graves marked by rough sticks. Many bodies remain undiscovered in the high grain. Flocks of crows hover about, and hundreds of Chinese dogs roam the field.

The portion of the railroad in the possession of the Japanese remains almost intact. The woodwork of the railroad bridge was burned and a small section of the framework destroyed, but none of the piers was hurt, and the bridge could be made fit for temporary use in a few days. The station building remains standing. Only a few houses in the Russian settlement outside of the city wall, which forms a considerable village, were burned.

Looting of Liao-Yang.

The Chinese have hung Japanese flags over their houses. Most of the Chinese shops and all of the Russian buildings were thoroughly looted on the departure of the army. Both Russians and Chinese participated in the looting.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 12.—The War Office fully realizes the discouraging effect of the battle of Liao-Yang upon the heroic garrison of Port Arthur.

With all prospect of immediate relief from Gen. Kuropatkin gone, it is feared that the length of the siege will be shortened.

LIAO-YANG, Sept. 11, (Delayed.)—It is now reported on good authority that in some of the assaults made by the Japanese upon the Russian trenches before Liao-Yang on Sept. 1 and 2 the attackers at some places lost in killed or wounded 90 per cent. of the numbers engaged.

RUSSIAN CAMPAIGN LOST.

French Correspondent Says It Will Take Months for Army to Recover.

PARIS, Tuesday, Sept. 13.—The Journal's Liao-Yang correspondent, having reached Tien-Tsin, sends thence the following uncensored dispatch under date of Sept. 12:

"The first part of the campaign may be considered lost. The Russian army has retreated northward in the direction of Tie Pass or further.

"The Russian army's inferiority in men, guns and enthusiasm prevented Kuropatkin from resisting longer at Liao-Yang or achieving at Yental a victory which would have obliged the Japanese to fall back. The Japanese will shortly triumphantly enter Mukden.

"The Russian General Staff now estimates the Japanese forces at from 450,000 to 500,000.

"The Russian Army will reconcentrate in the north, but it needs several months in order to fill up the losses in a number of corps, which must be doubled, and to replace reservists by active troops. Above all it is essential to restore the morale, affected by almost unprecedented trials and difficulties. A Russian offensive movement will be impossible for a long time.

"Should Russia be determined to continue the effort, she might still vanquish, but at a cost wholly disproportionate to the results.

"As an impartial witness I am convinced that it would be to the best interests of the belligerents to sink national pride and, by mutual concessions, end a war which otherwise will ruin both."

MANY NON-COMBATANTS SLAIN.

Russians Forbade the Departure of Chinese from Liao-Yang.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 12.—The Japanese Staff in Manchuria telegraphs that owing to the Russians having constructed fortifications in the immediate vicinity of the walled town of Liao-Yang, from which they forbade the departure of non-combatant Chinese, many of the latter were killed or wounded.

A British subject, Dr. Westwater, who is in the service of the Chinese railway, collected over 200 injured old people and children, and is now succoring them. Marquis Oyama is assisting him.

The report describes the spectacle as inexpressibly painful, and pays a warm tribute to Dr. Westwater's philanthropy.

On the other hand, the report severely censures the Russians for having virtually condemned the unfortunate Chinese to remain in the path of Japanese bullets, thus deliberately extending the horrors of war to innocent and unoffending people.

RUSSIAN OFFICERS LED FLIGHT.

LONDON, Tuesday, Sept. 13.—In a dispatch to The Daily Telegraph the correspondent of that paper in the field with Gen. Kuroki says:

"The Russians made a very poor stand on the heights beyond the Tai-Tse River. Extensive trenches had been dug on the cliffs overlooking the river opposite and above the town, but the first few shells from the Japanese batteries sent the enemy flying.

"I was amazed to see officers leading the way in this headlong flight across the hill and down into the valley behind. The officers were easily distinguishable in the forefront of the fugitives."

The correspondent graphically describes the fierce fighting for the possession of a hill at Hei-ying-Tai, (about fifteen miles northeast of Liao-Yang,) the key of the Russian position, and upon the capture of which depended the success of Gen. Kuroki's flank movement, and the terrible punishment the Japanese sustained in retaining it. After the capture there was a double night attack, the Japanese trying to capture a battery that had annoyed them during the day and the Russians seeking to recapture Hei-ying-Tai. The correspondent says:

"Neither desperate venture succeeded. The Russians were repeatedly near gaining the summit, but were swept away each time by Japanese bayonets and bullets.

"On the other side, the Japanese attack on the Russian battery was defeated by electrical devices the Russians had arranged, giving them the exact position of the assaulting forces. The brave Japanese were mowed down in swaths in front of the Russian guns, one battalion being practically annihilated."

LIAO-YANG STRIPPED BARE.

First Russians, Then Chinese and Japanese Looted the City.

LIAO-YANG, Sept. 8, via Tien-Tsin, Sept. 12.—The looting of Liao-Yang has few parallels in the annals of warfare. Three armies on three different days had possession of the city and engaged in acts of depredation.

When the Russians entered into the occupation of Liao-Yang they built a model Russian city outside the old walled Chinese city, and thousands of troops were lodged within its gates.

When the Japanese drove the Russians out of Sham-sam-Po, the Russian soldiers realized that the town must fall and forgot all discipline. They looted the town, sparing neither Chinese nor European shops, destroying what they could not carry away. They wantonly destroyed great quantities of foodstuffs and other goods, ripping open bales, bags, and boxes with the ever-ready bayonet and scattering their contents over the streets. Much liquor was found, and the soldiers, becoming drunk, committed further excesses.

During the interim between the departure of the Russians and the arrival of the Japanese the Chinese soldiers and police continued the work the Russians began, pillaging the shops that were not found by the Russians.

Then, when the Japanese came, they completed the looting. They had been fighting for five days without food, except dry rice, and broke loose on entering the town. The Japanese looted right and left. The shops having already suffered, the Japanese turned their attention to the private houses. They wanted food principally, but overlooked nothing.

That was the first time in this war that the Japanese were guilty of looting a captured city, and their officers were much disturbed by the outbreak. When order was restored the Japanese soldiers were taken out of the walled city, and now are not allowed inside without special passes.

The Russians burned great quantities of supplies.

NO WATER FOR 24 HOURS.

TOKIO, Sept. 12.—Details of the fighting by the troops under command of Gen. Kuroki from Aug. 28 to Sept. 5 were received here this morning, and the stories of desperate and continuous engagements show the fighting to have been a supreme test of endurance.

On Sept. 2 and 3 the Japanese soldiers were without anything to drink for twenty-four hours, and during that time they had no food save dried rice.

During the night fighting at Hsu-chia-Kow on Aug. 30, the Russians made use of their field searchlights to expose the Japanese positions to a deadly fire.

On the night of Sept. 2 a Japanese column, after repulsing a Russian attack, occupied a line from a point in the vicinity of the Yen-Tai mines to the ridges west of Ta-Yao. On the afternoon of the 3d the Russians were again engaged. The enemy had received strong reinforcements and had sixty guns. A Japanese column was detached and advanced from Pensi-Hu to Ping-tai-Tse, and a guard was left where the column swung to westward.

The centre column, while engaged in getting possession of the ridges west of Heiying-Tai on the afternoon of Sept. 2, was subjected to a concentrated Russian fire and suffered heavily. The Japanese held their position with difficulty. The Russians shelled the Japanese right and centre from two sides. The Japanese artillery was unfavorably placed. The artillerymen were exposed and sustained severe losses.

RUSSIAN DUM-DUM BULLETS.

Japanese Say They Found Two Kinds on the Field at Liao-Yang.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1904, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

TOKIO, Sept. 12.—In a dispatch dated Sept. 11 Marquis Oyama states that among the ammunition abandoned by the Russians at Liao-Yang were two kinds of dum-dum bullets, each resembling those for the 1891 pattern Russian rifle.

Although the bullets fit that weapon, rifles with which they would be used have not yet been found. Marquis Oyama adds:

"Judging from the nature of their hurts some of our men seem to have been wounded with dum-dum bullets, but this is still uncertain, though the fact of the existence of the bullets is uncontrovertible.

"The bullets, together with photographs, will be forwarded to Tokio."

By The Associated Press.

LIAO-YANG, Sept. 11, (Delayed.)—In the past the Japanese have declared their belief that the Russians were using dum-dum bullets, basing their contention on the vicious wounds made by the bullets when they struck.

They now assert that they have proved their case by the fact that they found dum-dum ammunition on the field at Liao-Yang.

The dum-dum bullet is under the ban of The Hague Peace Conference, although Great Britain refused to subscribe to the clause condemning it, leaving herself free to use it. Great Britain only uses the dum-dum bullet against uncivilized peoples. It was employed in Egypt in 1895, but not in the Boer war.

The bullet was first made in the Dum-dum arsenal in India, whence its name. It resembles the ordinary service bullet, except that the leaden core is left uncovered, and, by further making the bullet weak at the apex, it spreads out immediately on striking a bone, usually with fatal results.

The British continue to use the bullet against savage peoples because it is said to be found that the ordinary bullet does not possess sufficient "stopping power"—that a savage struck by it often does not at once suffer shock or disablement, but continues to fight.

DEATH FOR MIKADO AN HONOR.

Letter from a Japanese Mother Found on Her Son's Body.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 12.—The spirit animating the Japanese troops is shown by the translation of a letter written by a Japanese mother to her son, which has reached the War Office.

The letter was found on the body of the woman's son. It adjured him to fight nobly for the Mikado and his country, and informed him that his capture would be considered an everlasting disgrace upon the family ancestors, but that if he died on the battlefield it would be an honor which the family would celebrate for a week.

from the fact that he had made a trip to Albany to talk with Lieut. Gov. Higgins. There was a more substantial basis for it than that.

Ever since it has been understood that Mr. Higgins was the first choice of Gov. Odell it has been taken for granted that with Mr. Higgins as the nominee for Governor the nomination for Lieutenant Governor would go to New York County.

HIGGINS STOCK DROPS.

The names of Senator Nathaniel A. Elsberg, Job Hedges, M. Linn Bruce, Julius M. Mayer, and George Cromwell have been mentioned in that connection, and it has been the general belief that the New York County organization would surely favor one of these gentlemen for the honor.

Senator Elsberg's friends have gone so far as to state that he had received positive assurances from the powers that be that he could have the nomination if he desired it. When, therefore, William Halpin, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the New York County Committee, announced that the New York county organization had no candidate for Lieutenant Governor, but would urge Julius M. Mayer for Attorney General, the suspicion spread that perhaps Mr. Higgins's nomination was uncertain. This impression was accentuated when members of the New York County delegation began to talk up Erastus C. Knight for Lieutenant Governor.

There had been considerable talk of George Cromwell, President of the Borough of Richmond, in connection with the nomination for Lieutenant Governor, during the morning, but both Mr. Cromwell and his friends discounted it by stating that circumstances would prevent his acceptance of the place. It was pointed out that if Mr. Cromwell were named for Lieutenant Governor and elected he would have to resign his position as Borough President, in which event his successor would be chosen by the local board, which happens to be 2 to 1 Democratic.

Mr Cromwell himself said that he did not believe he could afford to resign the Borough Presidency, and thereby open the way for the selection of a Democratic successor, because of the fact that his successor could remove from office many Republicans appointed by him.

Cromwell Reserves Decision.

Toward evening, however, Mr. Cromwell was called aside by National Committeeman Ward and Edward Lauterbach and they conveyed to him the information that Gov. Odell was anxious to have him take second place on the ticket. Mr. Cromwell stated to them the objection which he saw in the way, but they did not consider the objection of sufficient weight to remove him from consideration, and he then said he would reserve a decision until all of the members of the Richmond delegation had arrived here and he had time to consult with them.

It was after Mr. Hendricks had returned from Albany to Saratoga that Messrs. Ward and Lauterbach called upon Mr. Cromwell to inform him of Gov. Odell's desire to have him take the second place on the ticket, and the impression which then became current was that Mr. Higgins was still the Governor's favorite, the reasoning with the politicians being that if Mr. Hendricks were to be the nominee it would be altogether unlikely that Mr. Cromwell would be the nominee for Lieutenant Governor.

Their belief was that the more probable apportionment of honors, if the Gubernatorial nomination went to Syracuse, would be to have the nomination for Lieutenant Governor go to Erie, and the nomination for Attorney General to New York County. Not even Chairman Halpin was so optimistic as to think that the nomination for Lieutenant Governor could go to Richmond and New York County still obtain the nomination for Attorney General.

PLEASES WOODRUFF MEN.

When the boom for Mr. Hendricks was gaining rapid impetus here to-day the idea expressed about it by the Woodruff men was that Gov. Odell had found that he could not beat Woodruff with Higgins, and had been compelled to take up a new candidate. They expressed confidence that Hendricks would not be any stronger with the delegates than Higgins was, and were inclined to be a trifle jubilant over the situation, declaring that Gov. Odell evidently was not cock-sure as to what was the best move for him to make.

The Higgins men did not like the suggestion of Hendricks's candidacy. When several of Gov. Odell's emissaries went to them to sound them as to how they would regard the springing of Hendricks's name in the event that Gov. Odell should conclude that it would be inadvisable for him to persist in an endeavor to bring about the nomination of Mr. Higgins, some of them promptly stated that if it came down to a question of whether Mr. Hendricks or Mr. Woodruff should be the candidate their preference would be for Woodruff.

This announcement came as quite a shock to the Odell men, and possibly may have been responsible for the apparent shift of Odell men from Hendricks back to Higgins in the afternoon. The Higgins men bluntly informed Gov. Odell's messengers that they resented the bringing of any new man into the race; that so far as they were concerned they would be entirely satisfied to have the delegates make a decision between Mr. Higgins and Mr. Woodruff. Undoubtedly this was a good tactical play for them to make, whether or not they really felt as kindly disposed toward Mr. Woodruff as they sought to have it believed, for they knew full well that as between Mr. Higgins and Mr. Woodruff Gov. Odell could have but one choice.

Mr. Woodruff was again asked to-day whether he would make a fight in the convention in the event that the leaders should declare for Higgins, Hendricks, or some other candidate. He avoided a direct answer. He said he had received assurance from the leaders in most of the important counties of the State that the sentiment of their delegations was for him.

"In view of the situation which exists here," he said, "there is nothing more me to do except to let events shape themselves. I think everything will come out all right."

Woodruff recognizes that Gov. Odell is the master of the situation, and that the convention will do what the Governor finally concludes to advise should be done, whether or not it is in accordance with the best judgment of the delegates themselves.

As he reasons the situation out, according to his friends, either the Governor-Chairman will feel forced to bow to the Woodruff sentiment, or show an absolute disregard of it. In either event Mr. Woodruff is said to feel that an increase of prestige for him is assured. That is the explanation which is given to account for his much remarked placidity of bearing in a situation which one would think he would naturally be disposed to force.

MINOR PLACES ON TICKET.

Several Candidates for Attorney General and State Treasurer.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, Sept. 12.—The most astonishing feature of the Republican States Convention is the almost complete lack of discussion of candidates for the various places on the State ticket outside of the Governorship. That, with the Lieutenant Governorship, which hangs upon it, has so firmly held the attention of the leaders and of the public that scarcely a thought seems to have been given to the minor places.

The convention will nominate candidates for Secretary of State, Controller, Attorney General, State Treasurer, and State Engineer and Surveyor, together with the two Court of Appeals nominations, which will be given to Chief Judge Cullen and Associate Judge Werner.

Until to-day it was thought that John F. O'Brien of Clinton, the present Secretary of State, would not accept a re-nomination to that office, but friends of Mr. O'Brien to-night let it be known that he not only would accept such a nomination, but wanted to get it. As no other candidate has appeared, it is generally regarded as settled that he shall be named to succeed himself.

For Controller, Otto Kelsey of Livingston, who is now Controller by appointment of Gov. Odell, will be named to succeed himself. Mr. Kelsey was appointed to his present place to succeed Controller Miller when he accepted a Supreme Court Judgeship, by appointment from Gov. Odell several months ago.

The present State Engineer and Surveyor, Henry A. Van Alstyne of Columbia County, is also slated for the nomination to succeed himself. He was appointed by Gov. Odell to fill out the unexpired portion of the term to which Edward A. Bond of Jefferson County was elected two years ago.

Mr. Van Alstyne is backed by Louis F. Payn, and has no opposition whatever. This makes two Judicial offices and two State offices, the nominations for which will be given to men who at this time fill, by appointment of the Governor, the places to which they will stand for election in November.

For the Attorney Generalship and State Treasurership several candidates have been suggested, but owing to the custom which the Governor as Chairman has adopted of taking all names under consideration and then telling everybody that nothing will be done in regard to the other nominations until the Governorship and the Lieutenant Governorship have been settled, no effort is being made to attract any special attention to any of these booms.

According to William Halpin, New York County presents the name of ex-Judge Julius M. Mayer for the nomination for Attorney General. Judge Mayer is here, but is doing nothing to advance his candidacy, and his friends are doing nothing more than explaining to the Governor that Judge Mayer would make a good candidate. The names of Job Hedges and M. Linn Bruce of New York also have been mentioned as possibilities.

Several of the leaders have an idea that Henry V. Coman of Madison is entitled to the nomination if he wants it, an idea which the delegates are inclined to indorse. Mr. Coman was nominated for Attorney General two years ago, but was defeated for the office by John Cunneen.

At that time Mr. Cuneen, who was Democratic candidate also had been indorsed by the Prohibitionists, and this additional strength enabled hi mto be elected. He was the only Democratic candidate for a State office who was elected, and because of the candicap which had been placed on Coman at the time it is thought that he should be named again

Senator Elon R. Brown of Watertown is a candidate for the nomination, and so is Frank Hurd Robinson of Hornellsville. Mr. Robinson has served as County Judge in Steuben County and has many backers. Because he comes from the Western part of the State, however, which section is likely to receive its full share of nominations, it is thought that it would be wise to give the nomination to another.

For the nomination for State Treasurer nothing has been decided. The present incumbent, John G. Wickser of Buffalo, has announced that he does not want a renomination, and the friends of John N. Cordts of Kingston are urging him as a candidate. Mr. Cordts is a wealthy merchant of Kingston, and it is urged that, as he comes from Ulster County, where Judge Parker lives, his nomination would aid the Republicans in that county, where a large complimentary vote for the Democratic ticket is to be expected.

One other candidate so far has been named for the State Treasurership—James L. McArthur of Washington County. Mr. McArthur comes from Granville, where he is the editor of The Sentinel. Senator Brackett of this village and Congressman Littauer are backing the aspirations of Mr. McArthur.

ANTE-CONVENTION BUBBLINGS.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Sept. 12.—There was a preliminary wailing of Republicans here when they started out to-day on a tour of discovery, only to find that not a single picture of President Roosevelt was on view anywhere, much less a banner with the pictures of Roosevelt and Fairbanks. Right in front of the United States Hotel, where the Republicans have made their headquarters, there is an immense campaign banner across the street which flaunts the pictures of Parker and Davis.

As a result of the investigation the Republicans made a scurry around town to arrange for the placing of some Roosevelt pictures. Lithographs were distributed, and it also was found that a big Roosevelt and Fairbanks banner which had been ordered some time ago by Republicans in the village was still unpacked in the local express office. This was dug out, and after much difficulty was hung over Broadway, near the United States Hotel.

William Leary, the ex-Secretary of the Fire Department, and always one of the most active of party workers, started in promptly to introduce some novelties in the way of advertising the Republican Presidential ticket. Mr. Leary reached town with a choice assortment of sign kites, such as are used in and about New York for advertising purposes. Some of these kites bear the names of Roosevelt and Fairbanks, while others have the names of Frémont and Dayton, the Republican National ticket in 1856. This is in honor of the celebration to be held on Wednesday night of the semi-centenary of the birth of the Republican Party, founded in 1854, which two years later made Frémont and Dayton its first Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates. These kites have been put on top of the United States Hotel, and to-morrow will be let loose on strings anchored at the hotel top.

"This is a great crowd that has been dumped on us to-day," remarked the head barkeeper of the United States Hotel to-night, in fine disgust. "Gee, man, if it was Democrats we would have business." At the Grand Union Hotel, where the bar also was carefully inspected for information on the state of business, things were even in a far worse state than at the States. The cashier and the barkeepers there went for an hour and a half this afternoon without having their slumbers disturbed by the entrance of a single person.

"Gosh, I'm gettin' scared," remarked Jacob Snell this afternoon as he introduced his sylphlike form to a chair on the States veranda. "What's the matter, Jake," asked one of the friends of the Amsterdam statesman in alarm. "Losin' weight fast," said Snell. "Saratoga don't agree with me. Weighed this afternoon at only 410 pounds, lost fifteen pounds since Saturday, and for my height of 5 feet 1 inch, I think I now am underweight."

"Friend of mine sprung a good one on me this afternoon," said ex-Judge Julius Mayer to-night at the States. "He wandered about the town this afternoon, and finally for the fun of it, went to a spiritualistic seance given by a fakir over on a side street. The fakir got hold of my friend's wrist, got a dollar from him, and then began to 'see things' in the other world. 'I see your brother,' said the spiritualist. 'He is bigger than you are and he has blue eyes. Is that right?' 'Well, I can't answer entirely,' said my friend. 'I had a brother and he's dead, maybe he had blue eyes and maybe he's bigger than I am, but he died when I was three months old and I never saw him.' The spiritualist looked solemn for an instant and then came back with a quick answer. 'Well,' he said, 'you know that spirits continue to grow in the spirit world.'"

While the advance agents of the convention were walking up and down "Cottage Row" to-night, in the United States Hotel court, dropping in to see the various leaders, and discussing various phases of the situation, Collector Nevada N. Stranahan of the Port of New York came along.

"Are they having a general conference to-night?" he asked.

Col. "Abe" Gruber got here to-night fresh from addressing a Republican commercial travelers' meeting in New York. Senator Charles Warren Fairbanks addressed the same meeting.

"I finished speaking just as Fairbanks came in," said Gruber. "After he had spoken the Chairman asked him to pose for a newspaper picture. The Chairman shoved me up alongside of Fairbanks. And say, what do you think? Just as the flash was about to go off I looked at the Senator's feet—you know I couldn't see any higher on him—and I'll be hanged if he wasn't standing on his toes. I call that a mean trick—trying to make me look even smaller than I am."

***

National Committeeman William L. Ward walked to the cigar stand at the States to-night, when a friend who had just arrived greeted him and asked him for information as to what was going on.

"Well," said Ward, reflectively, "we are having a hard time to decide on Timothy L. Higgins for Governor."

***

Borough President George Cromwell, the only Republican Borough President in Greater New York, and the man who has been affiliated with a boom for Lieutenant Governor, was sitting on the State's piazza this evening when an up-State Senator asked a friend to introduce him.

"Senator," said the friend, "I want to present you to Mr. Cromwell, the only survivor of the Slocum disaster—I mean the Low administration."

In dignified procession the head, foot, and advisory counsel of the Tapeworm Club were seen going down Broadway. Gov. Odell, the head, was arm in arm with Congressman Littauer, the foot. They were walking close to the buildings so that there could be no interruptions on that side, while Edward Lauterbach, advisory counsel, walked a few feet ahead and slightly to one side as a sort of escort of honor and protector against persons who might seek to interrupt.

"Hold on, Governor," yelled George Wanmaker, who came along in an opposite direction. "Can't," said the Governor. "Am in a hurry. Something in the air."

Wanmaker held off in surprise. "Well, if there's anything in the air," he said, "I'll bet you will smell it before you've gone a block."

Many of the Republican leaders to-night were inclined to discuss the Democratic situation, paying especial attention to the question as to whom the Democrats would nominate next week for Governor. They seemed frank in expressing opinions as to Stanchfield or Palmer or Grout or Goodyear, but when it came down to answering a question as to the nomination of Shepard they did not seem disposed to venture an opinion. None seemed to desire to see Shepard named, a couple of them saying that Shepard would be a hard man to beat.

William Barnes, Jr., of Albany, Chairman of the State Executive Committee, returned to the States to-night to find his father, William Barnes, Sr., seated on the piazza. The elder Barnes is one of the founders of the Republican Party, and is here to attend the reunion of the founders and Frémonters.

KEEPS EYE ON BALTIC SHIPS.

Britain May Protest If They Are Aided in Violation of Neutrality.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—The Foreign Office has no information regarding the report published by the Heraldo of Madrid, that it is the purpose of the Russian Baltic Fleet to coal, victual, and remain at Corunna for a longer period than is permitted by international law. The Foreign Office, therefore, has not protested against such contemplated action.

The British Government, however, is closely observing the attitude of other nations in connection with assisting the Russian fleet, and it is intimated that if there should be a flagrant violation of neutrality, there might again arise the question of the application of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, which developed during the recent discussion with Russia over Turkey's assent to the passage of the Dardanelles by the Russian Volunteer Fleet steamers Smolensk and Petersburg.

The Government hopes that neutral Powers will adopt the British attitude, as exemplified by the proclamations of the Governors of Malta and other points on the road to the Far East, explicitly forbidding the rendering of any assistance whatever to belligerent ships on their way to engage an enemy.

The Spanish Embassy here denies that the Madrid Government has received a protest from any source against the alleged agreement to permit Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet to coal and victual at Corunna. The embassy asserts that Spain, in pursuance of her declaration of neutrality, will not permit a belligerent act on the part of either Russia or Japan within her jurisdiction.

EAGLES MARCH ON BROADWAY.

Following their leader, "Big Tim" Sullivan, a big blue flag and a brass band, 300 husky members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles paraded proudly down Broadway yesterday from Tammany Hall en route to the annual convention of their order at Baltimore by way of the Liberty Street Ferry. All the Eagles belonged to New York Aerie No. 40, as their banner declared, and by instruction they were arrayed "in dark clothes, white vests, and light soft hats." It was stated confidentially by one of the crowd that the "dark clothes" clause had been put in lest the usual broad checks and variegated hues of the Bowery contingent arouse envy in the breasts of their brethren in Baltimore.

A particularly muscular-looking lot of men, who led the vanguard in sweaters, were said to belong to the "Degree Team," whose business it was to test aspirants to the Aerie, to see whether they could soar there. The team carried along a "Sick Squad," whose duty it was to care for Eagles who flew too high. According to a member, there was also a Coroner, named Dr. Wail, to take entire charge of the "dead ones."

In the line of march were Senator Thomas F. Grady, Congressman William Sulzer, Judge McCarthy, Judge Bolte, Congressman Goldfogle, Assemblyman Kerrigan, Col. Robert Walsh, Capt. M. H. Whalen, Grand Marshal; Dr. E. F. Leveridge, Lieut. Col. Tobin, and S. C. Austin.

CHEERS FOR FAIRBANKS IN BROADWAY CROWDS

Managers of Two Meetings Contended to Get Him First.

HE MAKES PROSPERITY APPEAL

Senator Fairbanks, Republican nominee for Vice President, made his début as a political orator in this city yesterday. Between noon and 1 o'clock he made two informal addresses on Broadway. His first speech was before the Roosevelt and Fairbanks National Commercial League, at 596 Broadway. From there he went to No. 501, where he spoke to the Commercial Travelers' League of America.

At both places the big meeting rooms, located in stores, were packed to their utmost, and the crowds which have been fed daily on the pabulum furnished by spellbinders were quite ready to let forth their pent-up enthusiasm for a Vice Presidential nominee. In all more than 6,000 persons listened to Mr. Fairbanks.

There is considerable rivalry between the two organizations, and each one wanted the honor of being talked to first. The commercial travelers' organization sent out a skirmish line to try to head off the Senator and bring him to No. 501 before he fell into the hands of the enemy up the street, but the pickets failed to connect, for Mr. Fairbanks made his first stop at No. 596.

A spellbinder was whooping things up when the Senator's cab drove up to the door. At once every man in the big hall was on his feet yelling like mad, while the band vainly tried to make "Hail to the Chief" heard above the din. The Senator, who relaxed not a whit of his customary solemn look at this outbreak, was shoved through the crowd and finally landed in a chair on the platform. There he remained while the crowd went on shouting as if it never would stop.

What was meant by the Senator for a smile, but which would hardly be taken for that in any one else, appeared on the candidate's face, and still seated he bowed stiffly to the enthusiastic crowd facing him. Even when some enthusiast shouted "Fairbanks, first in war, first in peace," &c., the Senator found nothing to laugh outright about.

Elijah R. Kennedy, President of the league, made the introductory address as soon as the crowd gave him a chance. He said it was fitting that the candidate of a great party should make his first address in the business district of the greatest city in the world. Then the crowd broke loose again, and Mr. Fairbanks took this as his cue to rise.

"I will make no formal speech," said the Senator, "but I thank you from the bottom of my heart for this welcome. I have witnessed an evidence of the fact that the people of this city are thiknnig in this campaign, and that they are thinking right. When the American people think on any political question their verdict is invariably a righteous one. The men before me are workmen in all the great activities of the metropolis. Never did they do better work in their lives than when they worked for the cause of Republicanism.

"We are all interested in good government. Good government brings good times. We stand by Republican policies, because Republican policies stand by us. We stand for the gold standard, and we are not afraid to announce our adherence in our platforms.

"Such a meeting as this to-day is significant. It means that you are determined to uphold the hands of Theodore Roosevelt. [Great applause.] We are proud of our record of prosperity, and we believe you will vote to maintain it. Enthusiasm is well enough, but remember that it is of no avail if it is not crystallized into vote on election day."

Mr. Fairbanks jumped into his cab as soon as he could be forced through the crowd, and made a quick run to No. 501, where all the enthusiasm was repeated. A crowd of men deserted the first hall and followed the Senator's carriage for the block down Broadway to hear what he would say at the second meeting. Few of them got beyond the doors. The place was packed.

Across the street the Parker Commercial Travelers were having a hard time to hold their crowds with the yelling going on in the street. A lot of Democrats went across the street to hear what Fairbanks had to say.

At No. 501 every man in the big hall had been supplied with a small American flag, and as Fairbanks took his seat on the platform the air was filled with flags until the place was an undulating sea of red, white, and blue. President Shephard introduced the Senator at once.

"Much as I appreciate your welcome," he said, "I realize that it is not for me alone but for the party and the great principles for which it stands. We are all dependont on good politics. When good times come there will be the land from end to end. For seven years we have carried out Republican policies, and the Nation has moved steadily onward in commercial development.

"No Democratic Administration can show a record for prosperity like that of Theodore Roosevelt. What we have done in the past we will continue to do in the future.

"Last week we heard from Vermont. ["How about Maine?" yelled a man.] We will hear from Maine to-day. ["You bet we will."] And in a few weeks you in New York will have the opportunity to stand up and be counted. ["And we'll do it."] I am sure you will, my friend," said the Senator, "and that you will give an old-time Republican majority."

WANT SOUND MONEY PARADE.

Republicans to Take Their Case Before McClellan and McAdoo.

Members of the Business Men's Republican and Sound Money Association met last evening at the Fifth Avenue Hotel and organized for the year. Officers were elected and a committee named to call on Mayor McClellan and Police Commissioner McAdoo and insist that they get the permit to parade this year on Nov. 5, asserting that Commissioner McAdoo has wrongfully said they could not march on that date since the permit to parade had been given to the Democratic organization prior to the request made by the association.

The contention of the association is that Commissioner McAdoo had not received a written application from the Democratic organization, as required by law, prior to the one made by them.

The officers elected were Charles A. Moore, President; Gen. Charles F. Homer, Frank Brainard, Charles H. Sherrill, Vice Presidents; E. A. Drake, Secretary and Treasurer, and A. E. Drake, Assistant Secretary.

FAIRBANKS AT OYSTER BAY.

He Goes to Saratoga To-day, Where He Will Address the Convention.

OYSTER BAY, L. I., Sept. 12.—Senator Fairbanks is a guest to-night of President Roosevelt at Sagamore Hill. One of the President's carriages was awaiting him at the station, and he was driven directly to Sagamore Hill, arriving there shortly after 7 o'clock.

Senator Fairbanks said that he had been on the move almost constantly since he came East, and that thus far the campaign work had been most agreeable. He declined to discuss in detail his political observations, but indicated that so far as he could ascertain the situation was quite satisfactory from his point of view. He said his ing, as he is going to Saratoga to attend the Republican State Convention, and desires to reach his destination to-morrow afternoon. He will address the convention on Wednesday. Later he will speak at Elmira, Wilmington, Dover, Del., and Baltimore, and on Sept. 21 will leave for the West. He probably will extend his campaign tour to the Pacific Coast.

During their conference at Sagamore Hill the President and Senator Fairbanks received returns from the election in Maine. Bulletins were received over the special wire in the executive office. Only the most important dispatches were transmitted to the President and Senator Fairbanks by Secretary Loeb, who telephoned them to Sagamore Hill.

After transacting early in the day an accumulation of public business that was brought to his attention by Secretary Loeb, the President, accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt, Dr. Alexander Lambert of New York, who is a house guest of the family, and the Roosevelt children, left Sagamore Hill for a boating excursion on the Sound. The President rowed one of the boats, Dr. Lambert another, and Theodore, Jr., a third. They ate luncheon at a point about six miles from the President's home and returned to Sagamore Hill just before 6 o'clock.

SHE IS TO STUMP FOR PARKER.

This Young Kentucky Woman Made Hit in the Bryan Campaigns.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 12.—If Parker and Davis do not carry the State of Indiana in the Presidential election it will not be the fault of Miss Margaret Ingles, the pretty young society woman of the blue grass region of Kenutcky, who has volunteered to Chairman Taggart to take the stump.

Miss Ingles was on the stump in both of the Bryan campaigns, speaking through Ohio and Indiana in 1896 and throughout Missouri, Indiana, and Kentucky in the Fall of 1900. Everywhere she spoke in both campaigns she was highly praised by the press and public.

Miss Ingles is in receipt of a letter from Chairman Taggart thanking her for volunteering her services, and assuring her that choice dates would be given her by the committee. She departed this week for New York, and she will begin active work in the next few days.

WELCOMES PEACE UNION.

Loomis Greets Inter-Parliamentary Body in President's Behalf.

ST. LOUIS Sept. 12.—Speeches of greeting and felicitations by delegates of the fourteen nations represented occupied the first session of the Inter-Parliamentary Union, which convened to-day in Festival Hall. First Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Loomis delivered the address of welcome on behalf of the President. In the speeches that followed former Congressman Samuel T. Barrows spoke for the United States, pointing out the value of international arbitration and universal peace. Mr. Loomis said in part:

"Valuing as the President does the blessings of peace, earnestly desiring the diminution and lessening of the rigors and horrors of war, your coming is particularly grateful to him, for you are about to discuss phases of a problem of deeply human and world-wide interest, the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

"Within the last 100 years there have been more than 200 cases in which international difficulties have been adjusted by the peaceful method of arbitration in one form or another, and the Government of the United States has been a party to about seventy of these arrangements."

Mr. Loomis congratulated the union on its efforts for peace, of the work accomplished at The Hague conference, and continued:

"It occurs to me while we attune our voices to paeans in praise of liberty and peace, those of us who may be intrusted with the duty of making laws for the nations of the world might properly pause to consider also what legal remedies, outside the sphere of diplomacy, treaties, and arbitrations, can be devised and applied to the settlement of questions arising from the consideration of such serious international problems as Anarchist assassins, general sanitation, emigration and immigration, and citizenship."

Mr. Loomis said that interest in the subject was growing. While the difficulties seemed almost insuperable, he hoped that those who were to follow might dwell in the time when—

The war drums throb no longer and the battle flags are furled,
In the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

The union will begin discussion of international questions at to-morrow's session.

REFORMERS ON CIVIL SERVICE.

Tell Mayor Park Commissioner Schmitt and Others Have Violated Laws.

Mayor McClellan is warned of persistent violations of the civil service laws in an open letter addressed to him by the New York Civil Service Reform Association. Park Commissioner William P. Schmitt of the Bronx is named as being one of the chief offenders in this line, and it is said that in his department several hundred men were laid off in January and their places filled by new appointees or by those transferred from other divisions of work. The men laid off, ostensibly for lack of work, were not, it is said, placed on a preferred list for re-employment, as they should have been, and investigation shows that they were at the rate of 98 Republicans to 2 Democrats.

The Municipal Civil Service Commission is held partly responsible for the alleged irregularities, in permitting the establishment of special classes and non-competitive positions. It is charged that on some occasions men who lost their places have been told personally that they could only hope for reinstatement by joining the party dominant in the city. Superintendent of Parks William T. Wegr, Jr., having told such employes that he cannot employ men except upon recommendations from their district leader. Fourteen men entered on the city's books as rockmen or laborers are mentioned by name as having been put to work as drivers.

The association asserts that it is prepared to produce affidavits of its charges. The Civil Service Commission is asked to keep sharp lookout for these alleged frauds and to hold up the pay of those concerned in them.

HILL HURRIES TO ESOPUS.

Summoned by Telephone—Busy Watching Republicans, He Says.

Special to The New York Times.

ROSEMOUNT, ESOPUS, Sept. 12.—David B. Hill arrived to-day, and was in conference with Judge Parker in the Rosemount library from 12:30 this afternoon until 8:30 this evening. It was Mr. Hill's first visit since Aug. 10, when Judge Parker was notified of his nomination, and he came to-day in response to a telephone invitation from the candidate, and he appeared while Judge Parker was reading the President's letter of acceptance.

The arrival of Mr. Hill, the hurried coming of Mr. Belmont, and the long conference with him and Mr. Sheehan would seem to indicate that something of importance is brewing at Esopus. What the important subject of conference was none of those concerned would say. Mr. Hill evaded the question direct by remarking: "All eyes are now upon the Republicans at Saratoga. It will be time enough for us when they have nominated their candidate for Governor."

GORMAN IN NEW YORK CONFERS WITH DAVIS

Senator Will Attend Conference of Campaign Managers To-day.

TAGGART TO INSPECT WEST

Sheehan Says Rumor That the National Chairman Will Remain West Is Ridiculous.

Senator Gorman of Maryland arrived at the Fifth Avenue Hotel at 9:30 o'clock last night. Coincident with his arrival here the rumor was revived that he was to take actual charge of the campaign and that Chairman Taggart, who goes West to-morrow on an announced trip of a week or so, will decide to stay in Chicago and look after the Western end of the campaign.

This rumor recalled, however, the announcement more than a month ago that Senator Gorman would probably spend the Fall weeks of the campaign in this city, that Henry G. Davis planned to come here several times in the Fall, and that Chairman Taggart would put in part of his time in personal inspection of the progress of the campaign in the West.

A few minutes after his arrival Senator Gorman was closeted with Senator Davis, the Vice Presidential nominee, who said he was waiting for Mr. Gorman and would talk to him, no matter what time he arrived. Mr. Gorman was silent when asked about his trip here.

"The newspapers say that you are to take charge," said one of his interviewers.

"Well, the newspapers are usually right," was the reply, and then, after a moment's pause, he added. "But I would not care to indorse their views on this matter." Then he went up to see Mr. Davis.

There was a conference at the National Headquarters yesterday morning, attended by Mr. Taggart, August Belmont, William F. Sheehan, James K. Jones of Arkansas, Daniel J. Campau of Michigan, ex-Gov. Hogg of Texas, John G. Carlisle, Thomas F. Ryan, Col. James M. Guffey of Pennsylvania, and Senator Davis. The conference went on during the morning, and only broke up for luncheon. It was continued later and kept up until 6 o'clock.

One of the conferees said later that the whole situation was thoroughly canvassed. He said that Mr. Taggart would only remain away for a week or two days. The conference, he said, also discussed at some length the question of the New York Governorship.

"Was any particular name mentioned?" was asked.

"Well, two or three were talked of."

"Was any decision reached?"

"No, but you know that Mr. Hill will have quite a lot to say about the nominee for the Governorship."

"Will Mr. Gorman take charge while Mr. Taggart is away?"

"I think it will not exactly take charge, but he will be consulted. He is a very able man, probably the ablest in the party. I guess Mr. Sheehan will have charge while Mr. Taggart is away. You all know that he has been more or less in charge right along."

When Mr. Sheehan was asked whether Mr. Taggart would move the scene of his activities to the West he answered:

"Ridiculous."

Mr. Taggart said he knew nothing of any such plan, and Mr. Belmont refused to say what had been done at the conference. Another conference will be held to-day, when all the conferees of yesterday will be present. Senator Gorman will take an active part.

The statement that Hill will probably dominate the convention next week brought the Stanchfield boom prominently to the fore again. There was a decided difference of opinion as to the state of Mr. Hill's mind just at present, when the Republican nominee was not yet known or even decided upon. It is said that Mr. Hill wants to win the State election before his retirement, and that his actions will be guided largely by what the Republicans do on Tuesday.

Charles F. Murphy refused to discuss State issues yesterday. He repeated that Tammany Hall had no candidate.

GETS ON WELL WITH TAGGART.

Sheehan Says Reports to Contrary Are Republican Imaginings.

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 12.—The following letter, dated Sept. 9, was received today by William H. O'Brien, Chairman of the Democratic State Committee:

"My Dear Sir: I have received your letter of the 5th inst. referring to the persistent effort of the Republican press to create the impression that a lack of harmony exists between Mr. Taggart and the Executive Committee, of which I am Chairman. While these reports have not escaped my attention, I have not deemed it necessary to contradict them or to notice them in any way.

"They are absolutely without foundation, obviously manufactured by the opposition for want of better campaign material. From the very outset there has existed between the members of the Executive Committee and the National Chairman a perfect understanding and accord upon all questions relating to the management of the campaign.

"Nothing has occurred, or can occur, to disturb the harmony of our labors, least of all the imaginings of the Republican press. Very truly yours,

"WILLIAM F. SHEEHAN."

Franklin and Clinton Against Hill.

Special to The New York Times.

PLATTSBURG, N. Y., Sept. 12.—The Hill Democrats have been beaten overwhelmingly in both Franklin and Clinton Counties. In Franklin County, at the caucuses on Saturday, the anti-Hill faction scored a decisive victory after a hard fight. To-day in Clinton County the Cowherd-Conway people carried every town, the Rogers or Hill faction offering practically no resistance.

Annual Harvest Festival and the Greatest sale of groceries.

TO-DAY at 8:30 o'clock the doors of the Model Food Store will open for the second day upon the year's greatest money saving sale of groceries and wines.

Planned especially for economical householders who demand the highest quality, strictly pure foods and table beverages. Sixth Floor. Sixth Floor.

It's an occasion so sensational in its money-saving power that thousands annually purchase a supply of groceries and wines to last throughout the Winter, when expensive transportation makes prices the highest of the year.

We've delved into every market of the world and selected carloads of the best products—buying in such mammoth quantities that brought prices far below what other stores that sell foods of equal quality have to pay for the small lots they handle.

Six months of diligent preparation—is it any wonder that we offer you the greatest opportunity of the entire year to fortify yourself against the higher prices that will surely come with the Winter season?

Stirring music and a harvest festival scene, breathing the fragrance of the wheat field, orchard and garden, will make your visit pleasant beyond your conception. Shocks of corn, sheaves of wheat, Autumn leaves will make it a panorama true to Mother Nature.

But the appended price list is far more important. In every item there's a bargain ring that will appeal to every family in New York and vicinity who demand pure foods at lowest prices. This list covers every requirement of the table. Call Chelsea—2,100.

COWHERD JABS HOLES IN ROOSEVELT LETTER

President's Account of Cuban Reciprocity Vote Untrue.

BACKED DOWN ON KISHINEFF

Misrepresented Democratic Position on Pension Order, as Shown by Action in Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—"Taken as a whole, the letter is a bold, defiant expression of the 'big stick,'" said Chairman Cowherd of the Democratic Congressional Committee, speaking to-night of President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance. "This Administration suits the President, and he thinks it suits the people, and proposes to stand by it. I admire his boldness, but I question his judgment.

"Like most of his writings, it is virile and bold, and likewise, as most of his writings, it is full of inaccuracies.

"Few men have the dramatic instinct to a greater degree than President Roosevelt. It is an excellent quality in an author and a very dangerous one in a President.

"It makes all his writings readable, and keeps the country in continual alarm as to what he will do next.

"It takes a bold man to speak of the shiftiness and uncertainty of others who they (the Democrats) object to the way in which the Monroe Doctrine has been strengthened and upheld?' he assumes the very thing which never occurred. The Monroe Doctrine, as every one knows, has been weakened by Mr. Roosevelt's attempted definition and limitations of it.

"When he says that 'never before has this doctrine been acquiesed in abroad as it is now,' he should qualify it by stating that it is the Monroe Doctrine that is acquiesced in and not the Monroe Doctrine as it was known before he amended it. His construction has been acquiesced in abroad because it was in conformity with foreign interests.

"He has the temerity also to ask whether we objected to his action on the petition of the American citizens against the Steinhardt massacre. In the light of Mr. Roosevelt's complete backdown on his proposed forwarding of that petition to the Czar, this statement is amusing.

"Mr. Roosevelt also says that the Democrats assert their belief in reciprocity, but their action on the Cuban treaty does not carry the assertion. This is a plain attempt to misstate the facts of history.

"Mr. Roosevelt knows that his Cuban policy never could have been put into execution except by the unanimous aid of the Democratic Party.

"He knows that it was fought, and bitterly fought, by a large and influential portion of the Republican Party, both in the House and Senate.

"It is true the Democrats desired to take off the protection to the Sugar Trusts; it it also true they opposed the clause in the Cuban treaty which practically prohibited reciprocity toward any other country.

"But, though they could not get their ideas into the treaty, they accepted it as the best they could do and stood by the policy of reciprocity.

"Mr. Roosevelt's talk of liberality to the veterans by his executive order and criticism of the Democrats comes dangerously near being that of a small lawyer in a Justice's court. The Democratic policy was shown when the party offered to make his illegal order law by putting it on the statute book, thus securing to the veteran by law that which he holds now only by the precarious tenure of an executive order.

"On the question of expenditures the President announces that the expenses of were, in the four years past, $211,000,000 more than under McKinley's, although he carried on a war with Spain, and more than $800,000,000 more than under Mr. Cleveland during his last term.

"Mr. Roosevelt has no idea of the Constitutional limits of his power. His letter shows conclusively that when he thinks a thing ought to be done, he also thinks he ought to do it, regardless of whether the law has given that power into his hands or not."

Senator Knox to Speak Here Oct. 18.

It was announced at Republican National Headquarters yesterday morning that Senator Philander C. Knox of Pennsylvania will make the principal speech at a meeting held by the West Side Republican Club at Durland's Riding Academy on Oct. 18.

NOTE STOPS WEDDING.

"Your Daughter is to Wed Married Man," It Said.

Martin Townski of 198 Van Winkle Street, Jersey City, and Miss Sophie Kowoski of 8 Skillman Avenue, were about to leave the Kowoski home yesterday morning to be married when a messenger boy broke through the crowd that had gathered outside the door and gave this unsigned note to Mr. Kowoski:

"Stop the wedding. Your daughter is about to wed a married man. Townski has a wife in Poland."

Townski protested that he was not married, and the girl joined in her fiancé's request that the wedding should be allowed to proceed, but her father would not allow that.

Townski has lived in Jersey City eight years and bears an excellent reputation. He believes that the letter was written by some disappointed admirer of Miss Kowoski. Miss Kowoski says she will wait for him until the mystery is cleared up.

RUMPUS OVER ST. LOUIS SHOWS

Attorney General Says He Will Close Them—Sheriff Defies Him.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 12.—Sheriff Henckeen of St. Louis County refused to-day to discuss the result of the investigation of objectionable shows in St. Louis County with Attorney General Crow and virtually defied the Attorney General to continue it. At the close of the attempted consultation with the Sheriff Mr. Crow said:

"The shows will be closed. I am determined on that. I have not yet decided what my next step will be, but I have men who are at work investigating the situation for me."

Before the consultation Mr. Crow said that if the Sheriff failed to close the shows and drinking places as he has ordered he would begin injunction suits to close them.

HUNGRY MAN'S LAST MEAL.

Prisoner So Eager to Eat That He Choked Himself.

Overeagerness to satisfy his hunger led to the death of a prisoner in the Kings County Penitentiary yesterday. The man, William Mingst, twenty-five years old, had been sent to the prison for vagrancy.

When a substantial breakfast was placed before him his hunger got the better of his judgment, and he ate as fast as he could stuff the food in his mouth. A piece of beef lodged in his throat and he choked to death in a few minutes.

The FORD Again Breaks Records

For the third time within recent weeks the Ford has established its supremacy. At Providence last Saturday, the Ford Car which was built simply of two regular motors of the $800 Runabout, made a new record for five miles in the splendid time of 5:09 2-5—one mile of which was made in the record time of 1:00 2-5, breaking world's track records for one and five miles, for cars of this class. In doing this it easily beat the imported 35-horse power Renault Racing Car.

The Ford Motor shows its excellence when put to any test, and the two motors used in this special car were the same as those put into the regular machines such as we sell, excepting that two were placed in one car, making it 20-horse power instead of 10.

One of these motors gives ample power and sufficient speed to do better hill climbing and better road traveling than any other car at the price.

The Finest Derby Hat

Stetson's Clear Nutria $6 Derby became famous all over the country last season, and other manufacturers found that the old standard Derbies would not suit the best trade, and they hurried to improvise their hats.

The $6 Derby originated from WANAMAKER suggestion. We discovered by inquiry that better Derby hats could be made, and the result was the production of the Clear Nutria—a hat made of the finest nutria fur, beautifully finished and made by the most expert workmen in the factory. No $5 hat in the market compares with it at all. Autumn shapes in the Clear Nutria are ready.

Three handsome, distinguished blocks are shown in various dimensions to suit men of all figures. Light in weight,—easy on the head. A hat combining both character and comfort in unusual degrees. Bands, bindings and all trimmings of the finest possible character. Price, $6.

Other Stetson Derbies at $3.50 and $5.

Other Wanamaker Derbies at $2 and $3.

The Best Clothing Made for Boys

Now that we have assembled the new suits for boys we are more than proud of the character and beauty of the fabrics; and the smart way in which the garments are made will interest every parent who is ambitious to have the boys well dressed.

The variety includes all that the most ambitious mother could desire. Then, in Wanamaker Clothing you are absolutely sure that the fabric is all-wool and is not going to wear ugly and discolor in a short time. The seams will not show white threads, because all of the sewing is done with silk thread. Seams will not pull apart, for all are double-stitched and taped in the most thorough manner. Coats will not pull out of shape, for the inside staying is more thoroughly done than in any other clothing made for boys. Manufacturers all tell us that no other Clothing Store demands such thorough and careful work in making suits for boys.

Among the new groups most interesting now are the following:

HORSEWHIPPED HER IN THE MARTHA WASHINGTON

Angry Brunette Finds Blonde She Followed from Chicago.

WOMEN'S HOTEL IS UPSET

The sweetly peaceful atmosphere of the Martha Washington Hotel was rudely disturbed yesterday by a real old-fashioned horsewhipping, in which the principals were two women, one—she with the lash—being a muscular brunette, and her victim a petite and soft-eyed blonde.

It happened during the midday meal when the dining room, which is on the first floor of the hotel, was filled with women guests. The diners' first intimation that something was up came from the main corridor with the ominous sound of the swish of a cowhide. They shuddered and listened apprehensively, terrified, and, for the moment, dumb.

"Take that! and that! I'll teach you!"

These and other expressions of a similar nature were punctuated by the sound of the falling whip.

Mustering up courage, the occupants of the dining room, led by some half a dozen strong-minded members of their sex, finally set out in a body to investigate. When they reached the corridor they saw the brunette, tall and stately, with fire in her eyes, standing with the lash raised over the blonde woman, who was crouched down in a corner endeavoring to ward off the blows with her arm.

"This must be stopped!" shouted the guests in unison. "Manager! Manager! Police! Oh! Oh! Oh!"

The cries did not stay the descending lash. It continued to fall across the face and shoulders of the blonde, who seemed too much frightened to make an outcry.

"Now I'll make you suffer! How do you like that?" repeated the brunette over again.

By this time Manager Cadwell and Chief Clerk McLaughlin had arrived on the scene. The manager grasped the assailant by the shoulders and pulled her off, while his assistant wrested the whip from the infuriated brunette.

"Go away from me, Sir!" she protested. "Let me at that woman again! I know what I'm doing!"

Mr. Cadwell finally pacified her and she told him that the object of the horsewhipping had injured her in Chicago. She said she had followed the blonde to New York.

During the interruption the blonde managed to make her escape by a side door.

A little four-year-old girl, who had come to the hotel with the brunette and had witnessed the row, went away with her after it was all over.

People about the place said that the blonde woman had been in the habit of meeting there almost daily a tall, good-looking man about thirty-five years old, and met him there yesterday. The man is said to have scented trouble and to have beaten a hasty retreat before the storm broke.

EDHOLM NOT A SUICIDE.

Coroner's Verdict That Larchmont Yachtsman's Death Was Accidental.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, Sept. 12.—At the inquest held by Coroner Wisendanger at New Rochelle to-night as to the death of Erik Lars Didrik Edholm, the yachtsman and clubman, who was killed near the Larchmont station on Sept. 8, the verdict was that he did not commit suicide. It was learned that Mr. Edholm was insured in life and accident policies in the aggregate amount of $45,000, and if the suicide theory had been established, some of the policies might have been contestable.

Judge John J. Crennan, in behalf of the widow, brought out from witnesses that Mr. Edholm was crossing the four tracks of the New Haven Railroad from the east to the west-bound side, and that he was evidently going to meet several friends who went to New York on the train that ended his life.

Fireman Farrell of the New Haven Road testified that he saw Mr. Edholm walking rapidly across the four tracks, and that when he reached the track the local train was on, he suddenly went down on his knees and threw up his hands as though he had lost all power of movement.

Daniel M. Conway, coachman for William A. Marble, testified that he saw Mr. Edholm deliberately throw up his hands and then fall down before the train.

"I think it was a case of deliberately doing it," he said.

Half a dozen hackmen and other witnesses all swore that Mr. Edholm evidently stumbled while crossing the tracks.

Coroner Wisendanger rendered this verdict: "I find that Erik Edholm came to his death from injuries he received by being struck by a train on the New Haven Railroad while endeavoring to cross the tracks of the company, and from my investigation and the evidence I find that his death was purely accidental."

FOR VIOLATING POSTAL LAWS.

Boston Concern's Treasurer Held—Say Company Ran "Diamond Lottery."

BOSTON, Sept. 12.—Guy C. Stillings, Treasurer of the Preferred Mercantile Company of this city was arrested this afternoon on a charge of conducting a "diamond lottery" business in violation of the postal laws. The company was formerely located in Kansas City. In five months it is said that $1,635,030 in contracts was written by the concern, which has forty branch offices.

The concern has offices in the Winthrop Building, and last March the postal authorities secured a fraud order against it. Although since that time its mail has been held up the business has not ceased. Treasurer Stillings pleaded not guilty and was held in $2,000 bail. George F. Stillings is President of the company.

MUSIC BEFORE HER SUICIDE.

Cloak Model Had Opera Music Played Over and Over.

After she had had her graphophone play the "Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" over and over again, Mary McCue, a young cloak model, committed suicide by inhaling gas yesterday afternoon in her flat on the top floor of 569 Amsterdam Avenue. When Alice McCue, her sister, arrived at home after work she found Mary lying dead on a sofa.

A woman who lives across the hall said that she had heard the graphophone in the McCue flat playing the intermezzo for hours. Alice McCue said that her sister had complained of being ill and had not gone to work that day with her to the cloakhouse near Bleecker Street, where they were employed. She could not imagine any reason that could have made her sister take her life except that the rent of their flat had been raised twice in the past few months, and that they had to work very hard as a result.

Atlantic Coast Electric Lease.

TRENTON, N. J., Sept. 12.—Judge Lanning, in the United States Circuit Court today, made an order authorizing Receiver James Smith, Jr., to lease the Atlantic Coast Electric Railroad Company to the Seacoast Electric Railroad Line. The latter company's line connects at Belmar, N. J., with the Atlantic Coast Line.

TROLLEY CRUSHES GIRL'S LEG.

She Begs Her Father Not to Tell Her Sisters She Is Hurt.

Fifteen-year-old Sophie Pedroza of 226 West Twenty-first Street had her right leg badly crushed by a Twenty-third Street car last night at Seventh Avenue, and it is thought at the New York Hospital, where she was taken, that the leg will have to be amputated. The girl was riding crosstown on the car, and when she reached Seventh Avenue, started to get off the car by the front platform. The car suddenly started, and she was thrown to the ground underneath it. Before the motorman was aware of the accident the front wheels passed over her leg.

There was considerable excitement in the car when the passengers learned of the accident. Several women fainted when the girl was carried to the sidewalk. Policeman Joseph Murphy of the West Thirtieth Street Station carrid the girl into a doorway and summoned an ambulance.

One of the girls in the crowd that gathered recognized her and ran to her home. Antonio Pedroza, her father, rushed to the scene of the accident, and had it not been for the police he would have assaulted the motorman and conductor of the car.

The girl was conscious and took a handkerchief which had been given her and wrapped it about her leg. When her father sat at her side, she said:

"Don't tell sisters that I have been hurt."

The police arrested the motorman, Henry Schmitt, of 337 Tenth Avenue, and the conductor, Richard Rogers, of 400 West Sixteenth Street.

VERMONT OFFICERS SNUBBED?

New Yorkers Made Them Ride with the Enlisted Men, It Is Charged.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 12.—When the officers of the First Regiment, Vermont National Guard, reached here to-day from Manassas, homeward bound, they were angry. On Sunday they received permission from their commander, Col. J. G. Estey, to visit Washington, and missed their regular train. They boarded a troop train bearing the Twelfth New York Regiment, thinking that their brother officers would make them comfortable on the trip.

The New York regiment was under command of Col. Dyer. When the Vermonters boarded the train and stated their predicament they were amazed, they say, when a chorus of New York officers shouted, "We have got no room for you fellows; if you want to ride on this train you will have to ride in front with the enlisted men."

This the Vermonters did, but the matter will be brought officially to the attention of the Adjutant General of Vermont, and it is likely that an interchange of military correspondence between that official and the Adjutant General of New York will follow.

Col. Dyer was out of town last evening. The officers who came in on the train spoken of in the dispatch and who were at the armory last evening said that they had not noticed or heard of the incident.

BELLE OF SEVENTIES SUES.

Miss Ham of Dubuque Wants $100,000 for Breach of Promise.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., Sept. 12.—Miss Sarah Everington Ham of Dubuque, Ia., began suit in the District Court here to-day to recover $100,000 damages from G. A. Potter, a lumberman, for breach of promise. The plaintiff was born in 1855 and was one of the reigning belles of the upper Mississippi River in the seventies and early eighties.

She made Mr. Potter's acquaintance in 1876. Some years after their engagement, she alleges, she discovered that Mr. Potter had a wife in Wisconsin. Mr. Potter's attorney announced in court that his client was insolvent.

GOMPERS'S ADVICE INDORSED.

Federation of Labor Wants Special Session of Colorado Legislature.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—At the regular meeting of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to-day the action of President Gompers in advising Colorado trade unionists to petition Gov. Peabody to call a special session of the State Legislature for the investigation of the disturbed conditions in Colorado was indorsed.

It was decided to recommend the initiation of the referendum system of questioning candidates for public office in Colorado.

A proposition to render assistance to President Donnelly of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen for the purpose of strengthening that organization was carried.

WANTED TO HELP THE MAYOR.

So Schwartz Shifted City Hall Sign—"Drunk," Said Magistrate.

Expostulating that he merely wanted to help Mayor McClellan run the city, in view of the numerous stories in the newspapers as to the prevalence of crime, Israel Schwartz of 116 Ludlow Street was arrested in City Hall Park yesterday afternoon just after he had taken down a sign from an entrance of City Hall and had hung it on the side of the City Hall Station of the Third Avenue Road.

Magistrate Mayo thought Schwartz was drunk and fined him $5 or five days, to give him time to sober up. He was taken to the Tombs Prison.

VETERANS IN POLO.

Open Championship Will Bring Out the Star Players in America.

That good polo players never get rusty in the game, so long as they keep in tolerable practice is amply exemplified in the make-up of the two teams that will meet on Tuesday, Sept. 20, for the open polo championship at Van Cortlandt Park. With possibly two exceptions, all of the eight players have been more or less active in polo for nearly ten years. The two who may not quite be worthy of the title of veterans are C. Randolph Snowden of Philadelphia and Devereux Milburn of Boston. Both, however, have had several years' experience, and Milburn was a member of the victorious Myopia Club team that won the National polo championship this year.

R. L. Agassiz, another member of this year's championship team, was also on the Myopia team in 1895, when that club won the National honor in the first championship tournament held by the Polo Association. That was nine years ago, and not a year has passed since that Agassiz has not played on the Myopia team. In 1896 Foxhall P. Keene, called in his active days the best polo player ever seen in America, and John E. Cowdin were members of the championship Rockaway polo team. Keene was an active player while in Harvard and it was chiefly through his efforts that a polo team was formed of the college players. As a skilled horseman and bold huntsman Keene has few superiors in this country. Keene is one of the best all-around sportsmen in America. He is a good automobilist, and two years ago drove a German machine in the Gordon-Bennett international race. He held high rank as a golfer a few years ago.

In 1899 Keene was a member of the Westchester Polo Club team of Newport that won the championship. The other players were Lawrence Waterbury, J. M. Waterbury, Jr., and John E. Cowdin, all of whom will be seen in the open championship this week. Cowdin has for years been called one of the most graceful polo players in America, and he ranks among the leaders. The Waterbury brothers took up the game early in life and, although young men now, they may well be termed veterans in the game. In addition, both are clever racquet and indoor tennis players.

Joshua Crane, Jr., is well known as the champion court tennis player of America. In 1900 he was a member of the championship Dedham team and long before that time he had secured a high rating from the Polo Association. The big Lakewood championship team in 1901 was composed entirely of men who will play this week—Keene, the two Waterburys, and Snowden. Last year the Country Club of Westchester held the National championship, and three of its players were the two Waterburys and Cowdin.

Immediately following the open championship game Squadron A will give its annual polo tournaments, the dates chosen being from Sept. 21 to 30. There will be two events, one for the Squadron A cups and the second for the Van Cortlandt cups. The entries will close this week.

RUST DAMAGE REPORTS SEND WHEAT SOARING

Four Cents Advance on Deliveries in Chicago Market.

HOME CROP'S POOR SHOWING

CHICAGO, Sept. 12.—Official confirmation of alarming rust damage reports caused 4 cents advance in the price of all deliveries of wheat here to-day. The volume of business was large, with an abundance of buying orders from outside speculators. The close was practically at the highest point of the day.

From the start the market was exceedingly strong. The feature of paramount importance was the Government crop report issued late Saturday afternoon confirming in a great degree the alarming stories of damage by rust inflicted on Spring wheat. According to the official figures the total yield of both Winter and Spring wheat is 523,000,000 bushels, an amount claimed to be barely sufficient to satisfy home consumption.

As a result of the exceedingly poor showing of the American crop, all European grain markets were higher. This fact helped to increase the demand here for wheat when trading began. In addition, reports from the Northwest indicated that fresh damage by frost had been inflicted upon the Spring wheat crop. With such alarming news at hand, shorts at the opening made a frantic effort to cover sales.

The demand was so urgent that initial quotations on all deliveries were up about 2 cents compared with Saturday's closing quotations, December showing a gain of ⅞@1 to 1⅛@2, at 108½ to 110½. As the season advanced a host of small buying orders came in from the country, indicating, apparently, that the public at large was beginning to realize the damage. Throughout the day offerings were entirely inadequate to the demand.

With no let up in the buying furor, prices were forced higher and higher, until all options had reached a point 4 cents above the last quotations on Saturday. Higher prices in all outside markets helped to stimulate bullish enthusiasm here. Reports of large flour sales in the Northwest also added strength to the situation.

The high point on December was scored at 112⅞, which was 4¼@4⅝ above the close on Saturday. The sensational strength was maintained up to the last minute of trading, the market closing almost at the highest price, with December at 112⅝. May ranged between 111½ and 114⅞, and closed at 114⅜. The current month sold between 107⅞ and 109⅝, closing at the high point.

Before a combination of sensational bullish crop report figures from the Government and a big frost scare in the Northwest wheat prices shot up 4 cents a bushel in the New York market to-day and closed within ⅝ cent of the season's highest record. From opening to close it was a steady advance with little for sale, and the situation was materially strengthened by the news that big flour sales had been made, partly for European account, one Eastern mill having sold its entire output up to November for shipment to Europe.

CAPE MAY A YACHTING CENTRE.

New Harbor Being Built and Plans for International and Local Races.

CAPE MAY, N. J., Sept. 11.—Members of the Cape May Yacht Club, as well as the frequenters of this seaside resort, are enthusiastic over the prospect of making this a prominent yachting centre in the near future. The return to this country of the Cape May Cup and the races wghich began yesterday under the auspices of the New York Yacht Club have enhanced the entnusiasm of the yachting fraternity, who are planning for international and local yacht races off this coast.

Commodore J. W. Allison of the Cape May Yacht Club has had several conferences with officials of the New York Yacht Club and the Indian Harbor Yacht Club, at Greenwich, Conn., with this object in view. What has been an impetus to this project is the fact that Cape May will soon have a big inland harbor, covering an area from 500 to 700 acres and of a depth of about 35 feet, to which the largest yachts may have access from the ocean through a channel 850 feet wide.

This harbor is now being constructed. The material removed is deposited on adjacent lowlands, and when the work is completed about 3,500 acres will be added to the area of the city. Not only yachts, but the largest vessels of every description can be accommodated in the harbor when completed.

Yachtsmen from points all along the coast have become interested in the Cape May harbor. Capt. Charles Barr has been here several times and is thoroughly impressed with the project. One result of his visits here was to interest Commodore Plant to send the Intrigue abroad to contest for the Cape May Cup.

AGED PREACHER MURDERED.

Hagerstown Minister's Skull Crushed with Axe—House Then Robbed.

Special to The New York Times.

HAGERSTOWN, Md., Sept. 12.—Simon Talheim, a preacher seventy years old, was murdered this afternoon at his home here. His body was found on the floor by his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel P. Dayton.

His skull was crushed in and his left jaw broken. The murder was done with a small axe, which was found hidden in a stove in the kitchen. A hasty effort had been made to wash the blood stains from it. Robbery was undoubtedly the motive for the crime.

Talheim was a Union veteran and drew a pension. On Saturday he received three months' pay, and to-night only a few dollars were found. Charles Barton, a man sixty years old, is held on suspicion.

TO PUT A LIGHTHOUSE ON DIAMOND SHOALS

NOVEL PLAN OF CONSTRUCTION

Lightships No Safeguard Against Most Treacherous Point on United States Coast—A Boon to Mariners.

Mariners off Diamond Shoals are to be no longer menaced by the lack of a lighthouse. The most treacherous of all points on the coast of the United States is to be robbed of at least one element of danger. The lightships which at present do duty there are but uncertain guides at best, for storms have often blown them out to sea, leaving the wave-tossed ships which pass that way to rush on unwarned to their doom.

The next session of Congress will provide the lighthouse, according to William P. Hepburn, member of the House from Iowa, who was in New York last week as one of the committee intrusted with the reception and entertainment of the delegates to the annual congress of the Interparliamentary Union. One man, a Maine engineer, is willing to risk his all to make the lighthouse possible, and should he fail in his undertaking the loss will fall on him alone.

The proposition is as novel as it is nervy. The man from Maine undertakes to build the lighthouse at his own expense and to guarantee its permanency. He will not ask a cent from the Government until its stability has been proved. It must withstand the stress of storm and shifting sand for a period of five years before he can ask for remuneration. If, at the end of that period, it is unshaken he is to receive from the Government the sum of $500,000, with 5 per cent. interest from the date of the completion of the light.

"The dangerous problem presented by the Diamond Shoals, which are just off Hatteras," said Mr. Hepburn, "has long been a thorn in the side of the Government in its task of safeguarding the interests of ocean commerce. They form, by long odds, the worst possible combination of difficulties. Off Hatteras the uprushing Gulf Stream, in its conflict with the winds, makes a heavy sea at all times. There is thirty feet of water on the shoals, and the bottom is of shifting sands. Time after time the Government has attempted the construction of a lighthouse there, but every attempt has failed. It has been seemingly impossible to secure a foundation strong enough to successfully resist the assaults of the sea, and more ships have been lost on the shoals, perhaps, than at any other point on the coast. After spending a great deal of money to no purpose the Government decided that lightships offered the only possible means of combatting the danger, but lightships are by no means satisfactory. There was a storm not very long since, when both ships were blown to sea, leaving the shoals unguarded. In consequence several vessels were lost, their Captains being unable to tell where they were. The lightship crews said they were unable to get back to the shoals for two days. Passing vessels reported that the period of their absence was much longer.

"Mr. Ellis, the Maine engineer who declares that he can conquer the shoals and build a lighthouse there despite the unfavorable conditions, is supremely confident, and his confidence has been so infectious that his proposition has been recommended by the committee to which it was referred, and will come up before the next Congress for adoption. There is not the slightest element of risk in it, so far as the Government is concerned. A stable light on the shoals would be worth a great deal more to the maritime interests than $500,000, and the Government, at any time for years and years, would gladly have paid that sum to provide it. Mr. Ellis, who describes himself as a "retired whaler," says he has enough money of his own to build the lighthouse, and that he is perfectly willing to take all the chances himself.

"I have seen the plans for his lighthouse, and they seem to offer at least a strong probability of success. The engineer is going about the problem in an entirely new way. He has designed a structure of steel, divided into compartments, and shaped like an overgrown bottle. At its base it is 75 feet in diameter, the neck of the bottle, so to speak, is about 16 feet in circumference. It is to be builded on land and floated, empty to its site.

"When the site is reached, by a system of valves, the structure will be sunk until it rests on the bottom of the soals at a depth of 30 feet. The bottle is divided into water-tight compartments and may be sunk or floated at almost any depth. In addition to the valves, which let in and discharge water, so that the structure may float high above the waves on its journey to the spot selected for the establishment of the light and then be sunk, there is a system by which the sand can be pumped out from beneath and the base sunk into the bottom. Mr. Ellis believes that when the base is thirty feet into the sand it will then be time enough to put the finishing touch to the solidity of the strucure. The sand will be pumped from compartment after compartment in succession, and as each compartment is emptied it will be replaced by solid concrete.

"The completion of the plan means a solid concrete, steel-bound base, 75 feet through and 30 feet beneath the bottom. This depth, he believes, will prevent the washing away of the sand from beneath the structure and at the same time offer a weight of resistance which will defy any storm that ever blew. I believe with him.

"The neck of the bottle will be firmly braced, and upon it will be reared the light, no less than 270 feet above tidewater. There will be three floors, if I may use the illustration, for the accommodation of the light keeper. On the first floor will be a room 15 feet in diameter, where the boats may be stored. In the floor above the light keeper will have his living apartment, and in the third floor the supplies for the light will be stored."

WOMEN TO DECIDE 3 STATES.

One Hundred Thousand Registered in Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Sept. 12.—One hundred thousand registered women voters are expected to decide the fate of the two old parties in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and Idaho this year. Should they be induced to vote for Judge Parker, the Democrats probably will carry all four States, with fourteen Electoral votes.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, President of the Women's National Republican Association, has been sent West by the National Committee, which is much alarmed, to labor among the women of the four States. The number who will vote this year may even exceed 100,000 because of the Mormon question, which is to play a prominent part in the campaign in Utah, Wyoming, and Idaho.

Men's Raincoats

"Cravenette" defines a process with which we have no quarrel. It is good. Some of our coats are stamped "Cravenette." But since it is applied to all grades of cloth, good, bad and indifferent, it promises nothing further than the mere application of the process. Anxious to insure more than that, we have perfected a method of waterproofing—perfected, mind you. It is termed Pluvius. That it will be faithful to its function we warrant. It not alone insures the "proofing," but the character of the cloth, since it is confined exclusively to the better grade of fabrics of which the Saks raincoats are fashioned—raincoats that are invested with that element of character and impressiveness which raises a raincoat to the dignity of a dress coat. The collection of models embraces the belted tourist, box, long paletot and paddock coats of worsted, cheviot, twill and covert, in forty-three distinctive designs and patterns.

GREAT MAMMOTH UNEARTHED.

Michigan Farmer's Find Has a Tusk Nine Feet Long.

Special to The New York Times.

MUSKEGON, Mich., Sept. 12.—On the farm of C. L. McKay of Moorland Township was unearthed to-day the skeleton of a mammoth of enormous proportions. One tooth was seven inches long and five inches thick. The skull measured three feet eight inches lengthwise and two feet four inches across the forehead.

Projecting from one side was a tusk nine feet long. A thigh bone three feet long, five vertebrae fourteen inches in lateral diameter by one foot perpendicular, four smaller vertebrae, evidently from the root of the tail, two ribs and two bones, probably from a foreleg, were also found. The teeth are well preserved.

Trotting on Readville Track.

READVILLE, Mass., Sept. 12.—Two favorites and an outsider won the events at the opening of the Fall harness meeting at Readville track to-day.

The 2:10 pace was the feature, for after Ben F., the favorite, had taken the first heat handily, Peeler Patron came up in the second and won by a head. The next two were easy for Peeler Patron.

There was half an hour of tedious scoring before the horses were sent away on the first heat of the 2:06 pace. Ecstatic, the unbeaten mare of the season, was a slight favorite over Red Bird, but the delay at the post caused both to break in the stretch. Red Bird was distanced, but Ecstatic was placed.

In the next two heats the Yonkers mare had no trouble, and in the last, on a heavy track, made the quarter in 0:36¾, half in 1:01½, three-quarters in 1:32, and the mile in 2:06¾.

It was announced that on Wednesday the trotting gelding, Major Delmar, would go to beat the world's record, without a pacemaker.

If he succeeds he will then go Friday and against the world's record to high-wheel sulky.

A LADY'S MAID.....Margery Taylor

The English master playwright has laid bare another woman's soul. Less dramatic than the great tragedy of Paula Tanqueray, less finished and striking even than that dramatic portrait, "Iris," the story of Letty, has the advantage, from the point of view of the public, of representing, if not the triumph of virtue, at least its reward.

Paula Tanqueray was a demi-mondaine, and because she aspired to be respectable, died, a martyr to the hard conventions of social morality. Iris was a lady, gracious and virtuous, but because her virtue was soft and luxury-loving, not austere, she was wrecked by the first great temptation. Letty has the freedom and splendor-loving soul of Iris, though she is a woman of humble life, and she is as sorely tempted. But fate steps in, as it often does, and snatched her from temptation. In Paula and Iris Mr. Pinero has shown us the wages of sin. In "Letty" he has shown us the rewards of virtue. It is the least dramatic of the three plays, and the least uncomfortable.

Letty is a typewriter in a bucket shop, on a salary of "five and twenty shillings the week." She loves pleasure and the larger life. If the future held only what the present holds she would wish to die. She is spirited and engaging, and has attracted the desires of two men—Lechmere, all of whose family have been a bad lot for generations, and Mandeville, who is a partner in the bucket shop in which Letty works.

Lechmere has made Letty love him, without telling her that he is already married. In the rebound of the discovery, urged on by debt and illness, she becomes engaged to her employer. But he proves impossible—a bounder on the order of Iris's maldonado, and in desperation she flees to Lechmere's rooms at midnight to surrender herself to him. There the good steps out of the machine, and Lechmere is moved to a moment of nobility, in which he sends Letty back to poverty and virtue.

In the prologue, which follows four full acts, one sees Letty married to a humble but amiable photographer, and happy in the possession of the humdrum husband, a humdrum child, and humdrum virtue, all of which Mr. Pinero eloquently exalts as the solid good of life. This, in little, is the substance of a play that lasted through many tense moments and within a stink of tedium from 8 till almost 12 last night.

The story obviously lacks the element of tense dramatic struggle, which made so great a tragedy of Mrs. Tanqueray. It lacks the sense of brooding fatality which at moments in "Iris" recalled the Greeks. But for all this, the play is instinct with life. Conventional mannerisms there are, both in characterization and dialogue, upon which which there is scant leisure to dwell, but which strike one as strange, inexplicable in the work of a man who is unmistakably a master.

Yet while these seem to deflect the true atmosphere of life, they in reality do not do so. The ultimate impression of "Letty" is of actual, vibrant reality, a document of wide and deep human import. Mr. Pinero has not read Dumas fils and Ibsen in vain. Individual as is his point of view, and authentic as are his powers of creative realism, he takes his place in the train of the great leaders in the Continental drama.

It is in the character of Letty that Pinero's power is most signally evident. Neither Ibsen nor Dumas surpasses this Portuguese Englishman in the sheer power of transmitting to the theatre the dreams, the longings, and the agonies of a woman's heart. In Miss Carlotta Nillson he has found one of his ablest and most convincing exponents.

From the moment last season when this gifted and temperamental young woman swam into our ken as Mrs. Elvsted in Mrs. Fiske's Hedda Gabler, it was made evident that our stage had been enriched by an artist of the first water. Last night Miss Nillson had her first great opportunity, and she rose to it, standing head and shoulders above the rest of the cast, and taking a place in the forefront of English-speaking players.

Something of Letty's youth and personal charm she lacked. But the sense of this always sank away in the presence of the great theatric moments. It was so when Letty discovered that the man she loved was married. It was so again when she was insulted and stunned by Mandeville's brutality.

It was so when she mutely surrendered to Lechmere; when she raised herself above herself in his moment of sincerity and went away from him; when she confronted him at last, and renounced all that he had meant of the beauty and splendor of life in her humble happiness. There was not a touch of overacting, of forcing the note. But the last throb of sentient emotion was there, and the audience swayed to the sheer quiet sincerity of the artist.

Not so much can be said of the rest of the cast. Mr. Faversham was far from suggesting the gentlemanly roué. His whole mimique was of a robuster and more ordinary phase of life. At the end of the fourth act, where the fall from virtue of the last of the Lechmeres, his sister, awakened the spark of truth, he threw power and conviction into a striking tirade, but even here he lost a due sense of the character by throwing out too freely the emotional stop to the loss of the half cynical irony the passage demanded. He played it as Virginia Harned played Iris—with an eye to the dynamics rather than to the nuances of the theatre.

In the subordinate characters the exaggerations of the players were, it must be admitted, abetted by the conventionality of the author's strokes of characterization. There were times when the play became Dumas with British boiled potatoes, Ibsen with the Brussels sprouts of cockneydom. Julie Opp's part was a mere English variation of the stage type that has descended from the Prudence of "La Dame aux Camelias," vulgar, mercenary, and greedy of things to eat and to drink. Miss Opp played it with vigorous theatric sense, marred by what may be charitably put down as the exaggeration of a first performance.

The part of Mandeville was equally exaggerated both by the author and by Mr. Arthur Playfair. What Oscar Arche, the admirable Maldonado, might make of it will perhaps never be known. As now played its values are effective only in the most obvious sense.

In the part of Letty's sensible middle-class co-worker Olive Oliver gave one of the two fully artistic performances of the evening, and was rewarded by a round of richly deserved applause. As Lechmere's sister, Katherine Florence was handsome, smart, and effective.

Among the common run of trivialities that prevail on our stage, "Letty" is worthy of the attention of all intelligent playgoers for its deep and abiding sense of reality and the illuminating art of Miss Nillson.

He will sing the rôle of Amfortas, the King, in the English version of Parsifal. At the concert on board the Baron carried out the entire programme, singing nine times for the seamen's charities.

Liza Lehmann Writes an Opera.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—Miss Lehmann has written an opera based upon Oliver Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield," which David Bispham will produce here next Winter.

LETTER SCARES SAM SHUBERT.

He Telephones McClusky, and If a Press Agent Wrote It, Look Out!

Sam Shubert, the theatrical manager, got a threatening letter yesterday, written on Hotel Navarre paper. The names the writer called Mr. Shubert were such that the manager wouldn't repeat them afterward. Furthermore, the man who wrote it said he intended to kill Shubert at the first opportunity.

"I'm not living at the Hotel Navarre," it said in effect, "even if I am writing on the paper, but by the time I get through with you you won't care whether I wrote it on Broadway or the Bowery."

Mr. Shubert didn't know whether to take it as a joke or not. The name signed to it was that of a man who was once said to have been engaged to Miss Paula Edwardes, who was at one of the Shubert theatres, the Casino. Whether he really wrote it or whether it was inspired by this actress's press agent was something the manager couldn't make out. Anyway, it worried him. It said that, unless he released Miss Edwardes from the contract she had made with him, the undersigned would make away with him in short order.

He telephoned immediately to a prominent theatrical lawyer who was supposed to have knowledge of Miss Edwardes's affairs and asked him what about it. The lawyer told him to telephone to Inspector McClusky at Police Headquarters, and Shubert did it. McClusky promised to assign some of his plain clothes men to the case right away.

Perhaps Shubert wouldn't have taken much notice of the letter if it were not for something that happened last season. A lady press agent, the story goes, got her brains to work and fixed up a scheme that involved a bomb—a real bomb. Shubert wasn't "on," and after it was all over the thought of how little he missed being blown into scraps threw him, very naturally, into a fright. The female press agent's "plant" was not successful enough for the story ever to get in print.

But this experience has made Mr. Shubert exceedingly wary of all schemes against his life, and this business of being made the butt of some other press agent's jokes doesn't appeal to his sense of the ridiculous. And if he ever finds out the man who did it, there's going to be a scrap.

"THE TWO ORPHANS" AGAIN.

A. M. Palmer Revives Old Play in Boston with Fine Company.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 12.—A. M. Palmer, who first produced "The Two Orphans" at the Union Square Theatre thirty years ago, produced the pathetic old play again to-night in this city with an unusual cast and an excellent setting.

In the company are Clara Morris, Louis James, James O'Neill, J. E. Dodson, Grace George, William Le Moyne, Elita Proctor Otis, and Bijou Fernandez.

EIGHTH AVENUE MELODRAMA.

"The Street Singer" Produced at the American Theatre.

Florence Bindley, a versatile heroine of melodrama, made her appearance in "The Street Singer" last night at the American Theatre. She demonstrated to the ecstatic delight of the typical Eighth Avenue audience that she could act, sing, fight sabre duels, dance, and play on the xylophone. On the programme she was down as Violet Vodray, "La Belle Violette." This was in very black type, indicating that Miss Bindley was not merely a star of ordinary luminosity, but a whole constellation.

As for the play, it was what the gallery gods call a "corker." There were an octogenarian millionaire, his natural son, a Count, several detectives, and enough estimable people to give variety.

George Pauncefort played the part of the old millionaire. Then there was John Vodray, a confidential bookkeeper, who was accused of having stolen $30,000, but who hadn't really done the deed. The plutocrat wanted to marry the bookkeeper's daughter, and threatened to throw the father into jail on a charge of forgery unless he consented. Whereat the daughter, who was none other than "La Belle Violette," stepped up and said that, rather than let her dear father go to jail, she would consent to marry a man with $50,000,000.

She announced this at the end of the first act, the curtain almost cutting her noble words of self-sacrifice in half. But in the next three acts all the troubles were unraveled. "The Street Singer" will stay two weeks.

WASHINGTON SEES ADE PLAY.

"The College Widow" Warmly Received at Columbia Theatre.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—The theatrical season opened at the Columbia Theatre here to-night with a new comedy, "The College Widow," by George Ade, and notwithstanding the warm weather, a full house gave an enthusiastic reception to the play. The audience included a large proportion of officials remaining in the city.

The new comedy is in four acts and the lines are bright and snappy throughout, with a frequent touch of satire as to college foibles. A marked characteristic of the new play is the faithfulness with which it represents the color and atmosphere of life at the smaller colleges.

A reception to the Faculty and a football game occupied two of the four acts. The hero of the comedy is Billy Bolton, an athletic son of a capitalist interested in a rival college. A widow who flirts with Billy and her lively chaperon chiefly contribute to the fun. The cast is a large one, and the production was beautifully mounted. Among those who made hits were Dorothy Tennant, Amy Richard, Frederick Truesdell, Edwin Holt, and Edgar Davenport.

BOSTOCK GOING ABROAD.

Animal Showman Plans to Open Summer Park in Paris.

Frank C. Bostock, the "animal king," will sail for Europe to-day on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. There he will open his hippodrome about the first week in October. He is also contemplating opening a Summer park in the French capital; this will probably be thrown open next May. From Mr. Bostock's description of it the park is apt to be a sort of Dreamland-Luna Park affair on a big scale.

"The showmen over here in America," said Mr. Bostock before leaving, "are all the time going to Europe to hunt for 'novelties,' but I have observed that most of the novelties are on this side of the water. I have found lots of performers here who can do 'stunts' never heard of in Paris, and I'm going to carry some of them over there. Europe is to look to America for sensational acts in the future."

Part of the Coney Island animal outfit will sail on one of the ships of the Barber Line Wednesday. Another consignment will start when Dreamland closes.

EDWIN ARDEN AT PROCTOR'S.

"Soldiers of Fortune" Produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre.

Edwin Arden made his appearance at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre last night in "Soldiers of Fortune." This week opens what is called the "Fall season" at the Fifth Avenue, and Mr. Proctor chose the Richard Harding Davis play as the best beginner. As Robert Clay, Mr. Arden found instant favor with the rather large audience. Isabelle Evesson, his leading woman, was also enthusiastically received. Verner Clarges was one of the chief supporters.

Marshall P. Wilder was first on the vaudeville bill. He has a new monologue. Alma Reynolds Davis, a contralto, sang some selections, both popular and classic. J. H. Burton's acrobatic dogs exhibited the usual "almost human" intelligence. Among the others are Hubert De Veaux, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Shaw, and Tanna.

"Mr. Wix of Wickham" at New Haven.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 12.—The first performance of Edward E. Rice's "Mr. Wix of Wickham" was given at the Hyperion Theatre here to-night. The play is in two acts, with the scenes in Australia. Others in the cast were Alice Maude Poole, Douglas Flint, Laura Guerite, David Lithgow, Sydney De Gray, Ceceyle O'Neill, Frances Wilson, Julian Eltinge, Frank Lawlor, and Catherine Jefferson Hayes.

PUGILIST CORBETT IN FIGHT.

Helps Policeman Beat Four Off—Had Hands Full.

James J. Corbett, the pugilist, joined a lively fight late yesterday afternoon, when he went to the assistance of Policeman Reardon of the Broadway Squad, who had been attacked by four men, who were trying to rescue a friend of theirs from being arrested by Reardon near the Hoffman House.

The five men had just come out of the Café Martin, and one of them attempted to wrench the whip from Patrick McMahon's cab. This man later said he was Edward Norris of 616 Nostrand Avenue, Brooklyn. McMahon resisted the attack, and in the struggle the whip was broken. The five men went down Broadway, while McMahon mounted the box and followed them, looking for a policeman. Seeing Reardon in front of the Hoffman House he called to him to arrest Norris.

When the policeman put his hand on Norris's shoulder the latter punched him in the face. Reardon sent Norris to the sidewalk with a blow on the jaw. Then the four men who accompanied Norris closed in on the policeman and attempted to get their friend away from him.

Reardon was in bad straits when Corbett jumped out of the crowd that was watching the row and proceeded to help the bluecoat. It had a lively time, particularly with a powerfully built man whom the others referred to as "Doc." Finally Reardon got one hand free and whistled for assistance. Three other policemen ran across the park. The four men then disappeared.

Reardon then took his prisoner to the West Thirteenth Street Police Station, where he was held for disorderly conduct.

POLICE CALL STRAVALLI HIS OWN "BLACK HAND"

Barber Arrested, Bewailing His Ruined Third Avenue Shop.

HIS FAMILY NOT AT HOME

In His Frenzy on the Scene of the Explosion He Tore Up a License, but Not His Insurance Policies.

To the surprise of Pellegrini Stravalli and to many others whom he had convinced that the "Black Hand" was after him with relentless persistance, the detectives arrested him yesterday morning while he was in the midst of a fine frenzy about his woes. That was about 3:45 o'clock, which was the time when he appeared in front of the wreck of his barber's shop at 147 Third Avenue. Later in the day, before Magistrate Cornell in the Yorkville Court, the police presented evidence tending to show that there was at least good reason to believe that Stravalli had been his own "Black Hand."

The detectives of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, notably Detective Brady, had kept an eye on Stravalli since Aug. 16, when he presented himself before Captain Shire at the police station and applied for permission to carry a revolver. He showed the letter then which had been published broadcast some days before, signed with enough illegibility to make it plausible, and setting forth that he was demanded to deposit $500 between two stones at First Avenue and Thirty-eighth Street, or something might happen.

At the Thirty-fifth Street Police Station the skeptical opinion obtains that there is no such thing as a "Black Hand" Society at all. So Stravalli's letter was not accepted as a genuine thing, and his rather fulsome explanation about it was doubted. Detective Brady, who was sent out to determine whether there seemed to be any good reason why Stravalli should carry a revolver, came back to the police station with his report condensed into a single word—"bluff."

Detective Brady happened to be one of the men sent out when the explosion which wrecked Stravalli's barber's shop and endangered twenty families was heard. With him was Detective O'Brien. The two discovered soon that the barber and his family had all been absent when the explosion took place. Then Stravalli himself put in an appearance and began with a fine show of grief to bewail his fate, asking about his family and shedding tears.

"Oh, my! Oh, my! That 'Black Hand!'" he wailed.

In the midst of his frenzy he fumbled in his inside pocket and pulled out his barber's license and destroyed it. He did not, however, tear up an insurance policy for $1,500 on his barber's shop and another of $400 on his household furnishings.

Deputy Fire Marshal Herman W. Mailgnon made a hasty investigation on his own account, and had a talk with the detectives. To Stravalli's surprise when he had finished they requested him to go to the police station with them. Then Detective Petrosino, who speaks Italian, was called into the case.

The police found Stravalli's wife and children at the home of a cousin of the barber at 236 East Thirty-eighth Street. They were questioned several times during the day, once at the police station and later during an investigation by the Deputy Fire Marshal. One of these children quite early in the investigation is said, according to the police, to have admitted that her father told them all to go to their cousin's to sleep last night. Stravalli himself at first told conflicting stories as to where he had been about the time of the explosion, one of them being that he was in a near-by saloon playing cards.

According to Capt. Shire the impression which the Stravalli family gave to their neighbors when going away from the house was that the key of the house had been lost, and they were locked out. The Captain said, however, that he had discovered persons who said that they had seen Mrs. Stravalli about the house since, and that she had explained about the misfortune they had suffered regarding the loss of the key, and that the entire Stravalli family had not been known before to be absent from home.

According to the discoveries made by the Deputy Fire Marshal dynamite was not the explosive used. His opinion was that a two-gallon can of wood alcohol was placed over a fire in a closet at the rear of the barber's shop. As the alcohol boiled a gas was generated which finally burst the can and demolished the shop.

Stravalli was held in $1,500 bail for examination on Thursday by Magistrate Cornell. He protested his innocence, and said that the police had done little to discover the writers of the "Black Hand" letters.

TEACHER'S 3 DEFENDERS SHOT.

She Said Things About North Carolina Town—Neighborhood Divided.

HICKORY, N. C., Sept. 12.—In a fight near Hudson, in Caldwell County, yesterday, one man was mortally wounded and two others injured. The cause of the trouble was a published account of a lecture by Miss Abbott, in Cincinnati, severely reflecting on the people of Hudson and vicinity, where she has been conducting a mission school.

On the young woman's return this Fall threats were made to drive her out. Yesterday J. F. Bollinger, at whose house she was staying, thought it best to summon his friends for protection. Shortly after five of them arrived a party of a dozen men, led by a man named Single, approached the house. A general fight ensued in which Bollinger's party got the worst of it.

John Martin, a brick mason, was shot between the shoulders, and it is said he will die. J. F. Bollinger and John Bollinger were wounded, the former severely and the latter slightly. It is not known how the Single party fared.

PREACHERS CONDEMN TAVERN.

"Low Down, Greasy Bowery Saloon," Methodist Minister Says.

Bishop Potter's sanction of the Subway Tavern was the principal subject considered when the Methodist Preachers' meeting resumed its weekly sessions after the Summer vacation, at 150 Fifth Avenue, yesterday. The Rev. Hervey Wood of the National Temperance Society condemned the tavern and said he had found the Earl Grey system bad in England. He said that in England, where the drink situation is in a rather worse condition than here, clergy of the Established Church own stock in breweries and distilleries.

The Rev. Dr. F. C. Iglehart of Peekskill denounced the Subway Tavern as a "low-down, greasy, Bowery saloon." He had been there, he said, and now considered it but a third-class saloon. A committee was appointed to confer with the Brooklyn Preachers' Meeting to combat Sunday baseball.

GERMANIC REACHES HER PIER.

The White Star Line steamship Germanic, which is now running on the American Line in place of the St. Louis, reached her pier at the foot of Fulton Street yesterday morning after having spent several hours on a sand bar in the lower bay. She rested easily during the low tide which followed her grounding, and when the water again rose, two tugboats which passed lines to her easily pulled her off into deep water. She was not damaged.

But few of the passengers on the Germanic knew that she had struck the bottom until they saw the tugboats pulling her off yesterday morning. The Captain of the ship said that the base was quite heavy when the vessel was passing around the tail of the Southwest Spit, where she grounded, and that she was going very slowly and stopped before she had gone more than a few feet over the Bar.

ARBUCKLE'S TUGBOAT WAR.

John Arbuckle, the coffee man, has embarked in the towing business, and as a result the rates have been cut continually until now a charge of only $5 is made for towage between New York and Albany in either direction. Mr. Arbuckle is competing with the Cornell Steamboat Company, which formerly held a monopoly on all towing on the Hudson River. The Cornell Company has for years maintained a large fleet of big and little towboats, and until within six weeks ago held full sway on the river. The charge then was $28 for a tow from Albany and $22 for towage up. Because barges and floats are usually loaded coming down the charge was greater that way.

According to his own statement, Mr. Arbuckle thought that the towing field could support another company, and he bought all of the tugboats in sight. His fleet now consists of about seven large vessels and a number of smaller ones. He has agents out all along the coast looking for more tugs, and announced yesterday that he was in the business to stay.

When the Cornell company saw that Mr. Arbuckle had entered the field, they made a slight reduction of rates. Mr. Arbuckle cut still lower, and so it went on until the five-dollar rate was reached. It will probably go no lower, but the competitors are making special inducements to the canal-boat men for their patronage. One man was told yesterday that if he would patronize one of the companies he would get a load of sand to take to Albany and would be paid for the transportation.

The people who patronize the towing companies are now sitting back and watching their bank books grow. A canalboat makes on an average eight trips a year to Buffalo and back, and each man figures that by the reduction of rates he will be over $300 richer by the end of a season than he would have been under the former rates.

PRIEST PUTS OUT ALTAR FIRE.

Father Manion's Face and Hands Burned by Blazing Draperies.

The Rev. Father Patrick Manion, an assistant priest in the Parish of St. Rita of Cascia, in the Bronx, extinguished a fire in the church, at 517 Courtland Avenue, yesterday afternoon before the firemen responded to the alarm which had been sent in. He was painfully burned about the hands and face.

He had just locked the church for the day, and was standing on the sidewalk in front when the cry of "Fire!" was raised. The structure is an old wooden building. Now the congregation consists of more than 10,000, and has erected a fine edifice at College Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-fifth Street, which is nearly ready for occupancy. Services are still being held in the old church.

When Father Manion rushed into the church he saw that the altar was ablaze. He quickly got two buckets of water from the basement and partly quenched the blaze, but the draperies and the altar cloths were still blazing. Father Manion tore them away, while others who had followed him into the church stamped out the fire.

It is supposed that the blaze caught from a lighted candle on the altar, which became overturned.

Father Manion made light of his bandaged hands, and said last night: "It was nothing but what any one would have done."

FLED A BROADWAY CROWD.

When Broadway was full of shoppers yesterday a crowd of women stopped in front of the window where a mysterious, unseen force moves a pen across a sheet of paper and writes all sorts of sentences. It is a new invention, and there are always a dozen or two persons looking in at it. Of course there's a man who does the work, but he's not in sight.

Once again the glass was a damsel with a large bundle folded under her arm. There was something about her which said she was not of Manhattan Island, but rather from the wilds of Jersey. Her eyes protruded dangerously as she gazed at the silently moving pen. She wore a great blue ribbon around her neck.

The crowd grew, and all were intent on the writing. This is what they saw the pen write:

"See the beautiful maiden looking at me with burning eyes. She wears a large blue bow at her throat. I think she must come from up State. Don't run away, little girl."

But this last advice was not heeded. Like a frightened kitten the damsel with the blue bow turned around to see what seemed like a thousand laughing faces. The last the crowd saw of her she was fleeing homeward.

FIGHTS CAPTORS IN STORE.

Woman Charged with Shoplifting Battles with Detectives.

A woman, who said she was Mrs. Bella Easton, thirty-five years old, living at the Quincy House, in Thirty-third Street, near Seventh Avenue, was locked up in the Tenderloin Station last night charged with shoplifting by two woman detectives of a Broadway department store.

The woman was arrested only after a struggle with the two detectives. Another woman and a man who, the detectives say, were confederates of the Easton woman, escaped.

The struggle, beginning in the store, was continued out on Broadway, where Policeman Hefferen of the Broadway Squad came to the assistance of the detectives and placed Mrs. Easton under arrest. A great crowd of women shoppers followed the party to the station.

Two silk scarfs, valued at $16, which the woman is alleged to have stolen, were found on the sidewalk after the struggle, and a lace robe was found on her when she was searched at the station.

HOAGLAND WILL DIFFICULTY.

Heirs Ask Court to Construe Clause as to Residue of Estate.

There will probably be a legal contest over the will of Hudson Hoagland, who died on Jan. 30 at the Union Square Hotel, for the executors made it known in the Supreme Court yesterday that they were unable to construe some of the provisions of the will. The executors, Thomas H. Hoagland and George Lesks, through their counsel asked the Supreme Court to construe the meaning of one of the clauses which provides for the disposition of the residue of the estate.

At first it was believed that there would be very little property left after all the bequests were paid, but from an appraisal of the estate it was learned that the personal property amounted to $2,436,954.

The will, which was executed Nov. 1, 1903, made a bequest of $100,000 to the Hampton Normal Agricultural Institute at Hampton, Va., and $10,000 to the Presbyterian Church at Springfield, Oswego County. Then follow several small bequests to nephews and nieces.

As some of the nieces and nephews mentioned in the will died previous to the filing of the will for probate, the executors are anxious to have the courts construe the thirtieth clause, which refers to these nephews and nieces.

BOY ACROBAT BROKE SPINE.

He Was Descending a Ladder Head Downward and Fell.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Sept. 12.—While performing acrobatic feats in an amateur circus here Saturday afternoon, fifteen-year-old William Muir sustained an injury which caused his death this morning in the Muhlenberg Hospital. His spine was broken. His mother and a brother, Thomas M. Muir, are traveling in the West, and as yet have not been reached by telegraph.

Muir was descending head downward on a ladder, when he lost his balance, striking the ground heavily. He jumped to his feet, at the same time assuring the playmates and the audience that he was not hurt. A moment later he reeled and fell and did not again become conscious.

"COME-ON" SCHEME FOR NATURALIZATION CASES

DUMMIES TELL WILD YARNS

"How Spaghetti Got Twenty Years" Scares New-Comers So They Surrender Papers, Good or Bad.

Charles F. Murphy told yesterday of a deep-laid plot on the part of Superintendent of Elections Morgan to make Italians summoned by his deputies in connection with the naturalization frauds give up their papers, be they good, bad, or indifferent.

By a system of what the police call "come-ons," Mr. Murphy said, Italians entering the Lords Court Building at Exchange Place and William Street, are put through a sort of preparatory third degree, on their way to the office of Superintendent Morgan, that reduces them to such a state of terror that they are willing to give up anything.

Some time ago Superintendent Morgan advertised in all the Italian, Yiddish, and other papers that any person having fraudulent naturalization papers who would give them up in thirty days would not be prosecuted. Since that time great numbers of Italians have visited his office, and, according to Mr. Murphy, this is what happens.

As soon as the Italian enters the corridor he sees a number of his countrymen in earnest confab. The conversation being in his native tongue and carried on loudly, naturally he listens.

"Have you heard what happened to Antonio Spaghetti last week?" asks one.

"No," says the other, in an awed voice. "What happened?"

"Well, he got twenty years in jail for having false naturalization papers."

The visitor turns a shade paler and walks on. A few feet further down the corridor he hears another conversation.

"Say, that's too bad about Giacomo Macaroni. He's done for."

"Why, what's the matter?"

"Caught with fake naturalization papers and wouldn't admit it, so they gave him fifteen years in jail and fined him $1,000."

A shivery feeling creeps up the visitor's spine and he is about to take the elevator when he hears this.

"Wasn't that Dominico Parmesano a fool?"

"Why, what did he do?"

"Well, he had naturalization papers, and he came down here and was given a chance to say they were false and get off without being sent to jail. But he wouldn't do it, and now they've sent him to jail for ten years."

"Say, they're pretty hard on us about now, ain't they?"

"You bet. I wouldn't take a chance."

By this time the visitor has reached the elevator and he is quaking. He makes a rush for Supt. Morgan's office, and before the fright has a chance to wear off, he hands in his papers, says they were fraudulent, and goes away happy because he has escaped with his life.

"That's the way they work things down there," said Mr. Murphy, "and I'm going to put a stop to it. A lot of Italians have been bulldozed like that and have given up good papers rather than take any chance of going to jail."

Mr. Murphy sent for Deputy Police Commissioner McAvoy yesterday and told him to get Mr. McAdoo to station two policemen who understood Italian in the corridor of the Lord's Court Building to stop such alleged intimidation. The policemen will be there to-day.

SAILORS OR BEGGARS?

Two Labeled "Hancock" and "Don Juan de Austria" Held.

Two men wearing the uniforms of sailors in the navy of the United States were arrested at Canal and Centre Streets yesterday afternoon on a charge of vagrancy.

Policeman Kelly told Magistrate Mayo in the Tombs Court, where the men were arraigned, that he had had frequent complaints from the Charity Organization Society about a gang of five men who, pretending that they were navy men, earned a good living in that neighborhood by "panhandling."

The men said they were Harry Harden and James Fogarty, on leave from the gunboat Topeka, now lying at Tompkinsville. Fogarty wore a cap labeled "U. S. Hancock" and Harden's hat bears the name of the Spanish ship Don Juan de Austria. They were held for investigation.

MATHEWSON HIT FREELY AND NEW YORKS BEATEN

Only Second Defeat of Season at Hands of Boston Players.

VICTORY FOR THE AMERICANS

Although playing an errorless fielding game, and with Mathewson pitching, the New Yorks scored but one run to three against the Bostons yesterday. Chicago also was beaten by Pittsburg, which placed the champions next to the New Yorks in the National League pennant race. At Brooklyn the Philadelphia team won two games quite handily. In the American League the Greater New Yorks had difficulty in beating Washington, while at Philadelphia the Champion Bostons lost one game to the Athletics. These results did not affect the leadership, although Boston now has only one point the advantage over the local team. Summary follows:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

"Pat" Dougherty, the fleet-footed left fielder of the Greater New Yorks, materially assisted his team to defeat the Washingtons yesterday at American League Park. The victory was by the margin of two runs, and it was Dougherty's hit for three bases in the first inning, supplemented by a single of Elberfeld's, and Dougherty's terrific drive to right field for a home run in the seventh inning that scored two of the four runs credited to New York.

O'Neill, after getting to first on called balls in the first inning, reached third on Hill's sacrifice and Stahl's out. He was left there by Williams's fine stop of Hulsman's hit. The visitors scored their first run in the fourth inning on Stahl's little hit toward Conroy, Hulsman's hit, which Chesbro tried to handle, Mullin's force out, and the latter's steal which drew a throw from McGuire and Stahl tallied. Their second run resulted from a base on balls to Hill, Stahl's single to right field, which placed Hill on third and allowed Stahl to reach second on a throw by Keeler to third base, and Mullin's hard hit to Williams, who fielded the runner out at first.

Dougherty scored the first run for New York on a triple hit to left field in the first inning, and Elberfeld's bounder over Cassidy's head, Ganzel's two-base hit, Conroy's sacrifice, McGuire's base on balls, and Chesbro's hit brought a run in in the fifth inning, and after Elberfeld and Anderson had struck out in the sixth, Williams scored on a base hit, a passed ball, and Hill's surprising muss of Ganzel's fly. Then in the next inning came Dougherty's home run after McGuire and Chesbro had popped up fouls for Clark. The score:

NATIONAL LEAGUE.

New Yorks Score Only One Run to Three for Boston.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Sept. 12.—Although the Boston National League team had the field to themselves to-day and had the New Yorks as opponents, there was not an overabundance of "rooters" present, but the victory of the local team produced much enthusiasm. It was the second time the Bostons had won from the New Yorkers this season out of nineteen games played. Mathewson and Willis were the opposing pitchers, and while the visitor received the better support, a hitting streak in the sixth and seventh innings by the Bostons resulted in their success. For some reason or other Delehanty refused to play, and this may lead to his suspension.

In the second inning the New Yorks scored their only run of the game. Dahlen began by placing the ball to left field for a base, and after Dunn had been caught out on a fly to Fisher, Gilbert hit safely to right field, and Dahlen reached third. On Needham's fumble of Warner's hit Dahlen scored. Boston made two runs in the sixth inning on safe and heavy batting. Tenney hit to centre field for one base, and on Abbatichio's single to right field Tenney landed on third. Abbatichio stole second, and then Cooley sent the two runners across the plate with a two-base hit to right field. In the seventh inning Moran drove the ball to centre field for three bases, and tallied on Willis's safe hit in the same direction.

The outlook looked bright for a run for the visitors in the ninth inning. McGann started off with a good hit to centre field and reached second on Fisher's error. Willis threw out Merkle at first, but Dahlen got his base on four bad balls. With only one out, however, Dunn and Gilbert were easily retired. The score:

TWO DEFEATS FOR BROOKLYN.

Although the Brooklyns had not played at home since Aug. 18, their work yesterday in the double header with the Philadelphia team showed no improvement over their previous exhibitions at Washington Park this season. They were completely at the mercy of the visitors, who continued their clever exhibitions as presented at the Polo Grounds last week. While the fielding of the Brooklyns was slow and indifferent, that of the Philadelphians was of the championship stripe. Duggleby and Fraser were batted freely by Hanlon's men, but they kept the hits well scattered as a rule. On the other hand, Jones and Scanlon were hit hard and often, every man on the Philadelphia team securing one or more hits off Jones. Gleason's display both at the bat and in the field was exceedingly brilliant, the "Kid" having seventeen chances at second and accepted them all without the semblance of an error, while at the bat he wound up the day with a record of 500 per cent. With the bat, however, Lush carried off the honors of the day, making six hits, with a percentage of 600. Titus came next with a percentage of 556.

In the first game it was not until the eighth that the Brooklyns tallied, and then they made two runs on a bunch of hits. They scored two runs in the ninth inning by good batting. In the second game the Philadelphians began batting early and continued it to the finish. The scores:

MOTOR BOATS TO RACE.

Fast Fleet Entered for Challenge Cup of American P. B. Association.

The forthcoming races for the American Power Boat Association's Challenge Cup promises to be the most interesting contest of motor boats yet held in this country. The races, which are the result of the challenge of the Shooting Star of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, will take place on the Hudson River, off the Columbia Yacht Club's house, on Sept. 21, 22, and 23. The cup was won by the Standard of the Columbia Yacht Club in June. The Standard has since been sold out of the club and is not entered for the coming races. Besides the Shooting Star, twelve boats are already entered.

It is said that the new Seabury boat, which was badly damaged on her trial trip last week, will be repaired in time to participate. Much is expected of W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s, new boat, which is said to have recently covered the measured course in Manhasset Bay at the rate of twenty-two knots an hour.

Following is the list of entries to date:

Boat.	Owner.	Club.
Mercedes IV	W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr.	American
Vingtetun II	G. S. Kilmer	Chippewa Bay

POLO AT VAN CORTLANDT.

Big Games Next Week—Commissioner Schmitt Favors Grand Stand.

Van Cortlandt Park will be the scene of a series of excellent polo games within the coming two or three weeks. The open championship match to be played on the big field next Tuesday, under the auspices of the Polo Association, will undoubtedly be the best and fastest polo game played in America this year. With one team composed of Foxhall Keene, R. L. Agassiz, Devereux, Milburn and Joshua Crane, Jr., and the other made up of the Waterbury brothers, J. E. Cowdin and C. R. Snowden, a scientific and brilliantly played match is virtually assured.

Immediately following this championship game will come the open tournament of the Squadron A Polo Club. Among the entering teams will be Great Neck, Rumson, and New Haven, and all of these should be worth seeing. Mr. C. Lawrence, Leavitt J. Hunt, and Joseph H. Hunt have been discussing the advisability of erecting a public stand with Commissioner Schmitt of the Borough of the Bronx.

The Commissioner promised to give a definite statement this week regarding the possibility of getting the stand ready for the big game next Tuesday, for in all probability the largest polo crowd will be at Van Cortlandt that the Park has seen since its Squadron began playing there.

As Van Cortlandt Park is a public park, no admission will be charged to the stand, and beyond reserving a few seats for the members of the Polo Association and the friends of the competitors, the stand will be absolutely free to the public. Should the stand be covered it would offer a convenient place from which to view games in wet weather, as at present there is nothing near the polo field under which any shelter can be obtained during a storm.

Squadron A will begin practice this week in preparation for its club tournament, and on Saturday an impromptu game will be played between two picked squadron teams. The three polo fields are in excellent playing condition, and the competitions beginning

A MONOPOLY OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

The American people have never before been talked to as President ROOSEVELT has chosen to talk to them in his letter of acceptance. It is an extraordinary document. The archives which contain the public papers of Presidents, of Governors of States, of incumbents of high offices or of candidates for the same, would be searched in vain for its like. No man should conceive or utter a public declaration in this tone and spirit unless he were, not merely as a matter of dogma but as a matter of fact, infallible. It is a letter which would be highly appropriate in its spirit were it signed by some potentate who actually ruled by Divine right. From beginning to end the firm hand that held that pen never faltered. There is never any intimation of doubt that the things "We"—meaning theoretically the Republican Party, but in fact THEODORE ROOSEVELT—have done are absolutely right, without flaw, without fault, without shortcoming of any kind whatsoever. The Administration has given the country the best government it could have had; not simply the best government that could possibly have been given by finite men, but the absolute and unqualified best.

The President's self-sufficiency is perfect. He has done absolutely the right thing, the very best thing upon every Government occasion, and with assured confidence he promises to keep on so doing. He has made no mistakes; he will make none. Whoever says he has or will is guilty of misrepresentation. In fact, his impeccable Administration imposes upon his critics a preparatory stage of misrepresentation as a primary necessity of their function. The most powerful monarchs of the world have been accustomed now and then in the privacy of their closets to pray for Divine guidance and support. There is no hint nor any trace of a hint in Mr. ROOSEVELT'S letter that he ever feels the need of help or support from any source. A President so completely sure of himself in all emergencies as this letter shows our President to be must be considered, we suppose, an exception to the rules applicable to common mortals upon whom great responsibilities have been thrust. President MCKINLEY was notably meek under his great honors and powers. There was a note of sincere humility in his public utterances. He was wont to refer frequently to the will of the people. He even spoke respectfully of Congress now and then. There is nothing of that in Mr. ROOSEVELT'S letter. "We shall continue our foreign policy and our handling of the navy on exactly the same lines in the future as in the past," he says. This is only an example. Even a Republican Senate might have views of its own concerning our foreign policy, and a Republican Congress might have something to say about the handling of the navy. If so it would be an impertinence, we judge; at least no interference from that source is looked for by the President.

Toward the Democratic Party the President is astonishingly truculent. He defiles it with every insult his imagination can conjure up. It is a vile thing, without character, without courage; it improvises its convictions, and abandons them if they prove unacceptable to the people. Don't you like what we've done? he shouts at the Opposition. What are you going to do about it? Will you undo our work if you come in? You dare not. Throughout all that part of the letter in which he deals with the Democratic Party one has a vivid picture of the clinched fist shaken in the faces of the miserable creatures at whom the Presidential vituperation is aimed. The old party has been much castigated for its sins, but it never got such a tongue-lashing as this from any high source. It has been often preached that a certain graciousness and courtesy toward a prostrate foe was advisable even in the great moment of triumph. President ROOSEVELT scouts the idea. He believes he has the Democratic Party down, that he is going to keep it down, and he puts his foot on its neck and mauls it to his own great joy. It is told of an English barrister that, pausing in the course of an argument, he said to the Judge: "Your Lordship, the language you have seen fit to employ toward me would be disrespectful from the Almighty to a black beetle." The Democrats, outraged in their feelings and woefully mishandled as they have been by the President, may feel that even the basest beings in the land should not deserve to be talked to by the President quite in this fashion. But it will do them no good to rub their wounds. The most effective reply to the President which they can make is to [illegible] at the polls. Then they will [illegible] country's if, though they fail to achieve the victory, they so bear themselves in the fight as to convince him and it that they have convictions, courage, character, and coherence.

As we have said, the President's self-righteousness bears him through to the end. In the very closing paragraphs of his letter, after having recited the glorious chronicles of a faultless Administration, he says: "Under conditions as they actually are, good Americans should refuse for the sake of the welfare of the Nation to change the National policy." Those who vote for a change, then, will be bad Americans. All good men will vote for Mr. ROOSEVELT. Does any American voter remember anything quite like this letter? Have we ever before had in the White House a President who so evidently and sincerely believed himself to be incapable of error? Has any candidate for a Federal office ever so vaunted himself upon a public record absolutely without blemish? Has any candidate for the Presidency ever before "dared" the American people to review his acts and reverse his policy?

The letter is THEODORE ROOSEVELT through and through. He never put forth a more characteristic production. A President possessed of the delusion of personal and official infallibility is a novelty in this Republic. What would happen if he should in quite a human way make a blunder and venture upon mistaken and dangerous policies is a subject which may give occasion for anxious thought to the voters of the country. He would never see his mistake, of course, and his cocksureness would carry him far.

SOME OF THE RIGHTS OF LABOR.

There are certain clauses of the charter of New York and of the civil service law designed especially to protect the equal rights of all workingmen in the employ of the city. The substance of these provisions is that all men desiring employment from the city shall register their names with a statement of their experience and vouchers from reputable citizens and employers. They are then subjected to a simple physical examination to test their strength for the work they seek. Then the law requires that they shall be employed in the order that they have applied. If after employment they are laid off for no fault of their own, they are entitled to employment so soon as any need of them arises.

A letter has been addressed to the Mayor from the Civil Service Reform Association pointing out that these provisions of the law have been evaded and violated by various officers of the City Government, including the Civil Service Commission. The method alleged is as follows: Men who have been chosen impartially are laid off for alleged want of work. They are carried on the rolls of the departments in which they were engaged without pay. Instead of being given a chance for any work there is, this work is given to men selected from a new list, and, as reported, only on the recommendation of the district leaders. As the idle men can be carried on the rolls only for three months, they are at the end of that time employed for a few days and then again are laid off, while new batches of politically favored workingmen are employed.

These charges require the closest investigation. The association making them is very careful as to its facts, and is entirely disinterested. We trust that his Honor the Mayor will give to the matter his earliest attention.

THE MISSION OF THE LENA.

Probably the first thought that came to the minds of most naval readers of THE TIMES in connection with the news of the arrival in San Francisco Bay of the Russian warship Lena was a query concerning the mission that had brought her more than 5,000 miles to the chief port of the United States on the Pacific Coast. The dispatches from San Francisco say that the officers of the Lena frankly admit that the cruiser's object is the capture of some of the steamers of the Japanese lines that run to Vancouver, Seattle, and the Golden Gate, and, as the Lena has a speed above eighteen knots, it is reasonable to suppose she could overhaul most of the Japanese liners, whose speed rarely exceeds fifteen knots. But the time for the Russian cruiser to catch Japanese steamships came to an end when she let go her anchor off San Francisco, since her presence in the eastern Pacific is now known all over the world, and the only craft she would have a chance to catch napping would be one that had already left Honolulu for our coast. Taking into consideration the announcement that the Lena's boilers and engines are in need of repairs, it is probable that her commanding officer hopes to secure an extension of the twenty-four-hour period of stay in a neutral port permitted by international law, and it is not likely that he really expects to do much active cruising for several days. In a week after leaving Honolulu any Japanese steamer would be safe in one of our ports. It is improbable that the Lena's long voyage was made on the bare chance of intercepting one vessel that might be caught between Hawaii and San Francisco.

Remembering, however, the fright into which British shippers were thrown by the operations of the Smolensk and the Petersburg in the Red Sea and Indian Ocean, it is easy to understand the Lena's mission. International law will compel her to go to sea as soon as she has taken aboard enough coal to enable her to reach her nearest home port. That means that she will be entitled to fill up her bunkers to their extreme capacity, for she has more than 5,000 miles to go to reach a Russian port. With that coal supply she can do considerable "low-power" [illegible] and the ports of call in the Orient. Naturally few neutral liners will run the risk of being taken as prizes on account of carrying contraband of war. The effect will be to cut Japan off from the supply of many articles that have hitherto been shipped from our ports. It is this effect that the Lena is intended to produce. If she should capture an American merchant steamer and send her to Vladivostok for carrying an innocent cargo such as was shipped in the Arabian, the United States might be forced to insist upon a revision of the instructions concerning such goods. But the Lena will have probably accomplished her mission in having made her appearance in our waters.

UNDOUBTEDLY.

"Undoubtedly," says Mr. ROOSEVELT, "it would be possible at the present time to prevent any of the trusts from remaining prosperous by making such a sweeping change in the tariff as to paralyze the industries of the country." Undoubtedly no such alternative is presented, and no sane man, acquainted with the facts and careful of the truth, would like to say that there is. Take a specific instance.

Probably the President is aware of the existence of what is known as the Beef Trust. His Department of Justice has a number of suits pending against it, we believe, under the Sherman anti-trust law. His Inter-State Commerce Commission has been looking into its relations to the railroads. During the last few months, on the strength of a strike among its laborers, the prices of the commodities in which this trust deals have been largely advanced, and the percentage of advance, as is usual under such circumstances, was much higher for the meats that enter into the daily fare of the working classes in the country than for the meats eaten at the tables of the rich. These prices, whether for the rich or for the poor, were practically fixed by the managers of this one trust with whom there is almost no competition in any part of the United States. Their profits are large and the fortunes acquired among them are, as the President can learn from Mr. CORTELYOU, notoriously huge.

On the Northern and on the Southern border of the country there are vast regions suitable to cattle raising, from which, under natural conditions, considerable quantities of cattle or meat would come into this country at the prices determined by the demand, rendering the monopoly control of the Meat Trust impossible or extremely difficult. Against this competition the trust is protected by various import duties. No American can get a pound of fresh beef from these sources without paying a tax of 2 cents, or, at a low estimate of ordinary prices, a tax of 33 per cent. If he desires corned or preserved beef, he must pay a tax of 25 per cent. If a butcher wishes to import live cattle he must pay at least 27½ per cent. on the import price. Is it not plain enough to be seen by a wayfaring man, though a candidate of the Party of Protection, that if these duties were repealed the unnatural and enormous profits of the Beef Trust would be reduced, that no single industry of the country would be injured, that the cost of living would be reduced, that the value of workingmen's wages would be increased, and that the one business that would be particularly interfered with would be the collection of campaign contributions from the beneficiaries of this most oppressive tax on food?

THE ENDING OF A STRIKE.

What the late Senator CONKLING doubtless meant when he described "the bright beginning and the bitter end of a halcyon and vociferous proceeding" is strikingly illustrated in the winding up of the great meat strike in Chicago. Those who can get work at the occupations in and around the stock yards with which they are familiar have resumed, content to begin again where they left off, after two months of unprofitable and destructive idleness. For most of them the coming Winter will be one of keen privation, for their earnings will be largely consumed in paying their arrears of indebtedness. Those whose places have been satisfactorily filled are looking for any kind of work which will feed them, and to get it will probably have to take the places of others now employed and perhaps dissatisfied with their jobs.

The unions of the various trades represented among the employés of the packing houses are broken and their rehabilitation is rendered the more difficult by the fact that the open shop is established and will remain. The leaders are discredited and disgraced. Some of the misguided men who followed them so joyously would like nothing better than a chance to lynch those who promised so much and performed so little. It is all very sad. The survivors of such a futile struggle lack even the poor consolation which comes to a defeated army. Nobody hails them as heroes or wastes any tears on their scars.

ITALIANS AND THE LAW.

It would be interesting to know what has become of the movement started a few weeks ago looking to the co-operation of law-abiding citizens of Italian birth with the civil authorities in the detection and suppression of crime in our Italian colonies. When the plan was proposed a number of leading Italian citizens were enthusiastic in its support. A meeting was held which was but thinly attended, and action was postponed for a subsequent meeting which, if held at all, was even less purposeful than the first.

About all that has come of the movement thus far is the recommendation that [illegible] number of Italians. This does not reach the root of the matter at all. The popular conviction is growing that the flood of immigration which enters the country under the generic designation of Italian contains dangerous elements with which our civil authorities have to deal; that it is swelled by the attractions offered here for the pursuit of the profession of brigandage in one or another form; that the Neapolitans, Sicilians, and other Italian-speaking elements of our resident population, if not in sympathy with the crimes of their compatriots, are curiously apathetic concerning them, and that very much more drastic measures than have hitherto been taken will be needed to impress these people with a proper respect for the law and with a realizing sense of the fact that they can only be permitted to come here if they behave properly or to remain during good behavior. If the better elements of the Italian colony in New York are deterred from doing or saying what their duty as citizens demands by fear of the Black Hand or the Mafia, the conditions are already intolerable and almost any means of remedying them would be warranted, provided such means were legal, thorough, and adequately disciplinary.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Doctors who believe—and apparently there are many of them—that the members of their profession are different from and superior to the members of all others, in that they are constantly endeavoring to put an end to the thing out of which they live, really ought to view their own mental condition with apprehension and to "take something" for it before this queer delusion lets in a lot more and the unhappy victims pass beyond the possibility of help even from such of their brethren as remain sane. Latest of many manifestations of the belief that the doctors, from a business point of view, are nobly cutting their own throats, is one that appears in The Post-Graduate. "It is not generally realized," says that high authority, "that the medical profession is the only one laboring conscientiously and faithfully to destroy its own source of income. Every improvement in hygiene and in sanitary science, every discovery of a specific source of disease, by improving the general health removes large amounts of money from the medical man's pocket and adds incalculably to the wealth of the community. The time will come when this fact will be generally realized." Possibly. But about the same time, we suspect, there will be a realization, also general, that the labor, conscientious and faithful as it is, and measurably successful as it has been, besides, is not destroying, or even tending to destroy, the source of the doctor's income. For the task imposed upon them, the task which they are doing their excellent best to perform, is one that, if not quite endless, theoretically, most certainly will not be completed by this generation of doctors or by any generation of their successors in whom they can pretend to have a personal interest. One can conceive, of course, of a time when medical and surgical science shall have made such progress that everybody will live on indefinitely in a state of perfect health, and there will be nothing more for doctors to do, but an enormous "meanwhile" will precede that glorious age, and while it lasts the doctors are in no danger of starving. The length of the route to be traversed before all disease is cured or prevented will be better appreciated by our medical friends, perhaps, if they will soberly ask themselves how much nearer their noble goal has been brought by their marvelous discoveries and achievements in the last fifty years. The place from which they started is still in plain sight, alas! while that to which they are going is beyond the reach of everything except rather reckless prophecy. Deserved credit is accorded to the doctors so cordially and generously that it ill becomes them to claim the glory of a wholly imaginary self-sacrifice.

—On reading over the prayer which the authorities of the Russian Church, at the instigation of the Czar, have prepared to meet the special exigencies of the existing situation in the East, one's first impulse is to doubt the authenticity of the production set before us—to deny the possibility that sane white men, living in the twentieth century, can entertain the ideas, theological and others, set forth in this prayer, or can so utterly lack the sense of humor as to be unable to see the grotesque absurdity of [illegible] own people

—Again the cannibals of that dark island, New Guinea, come before the world through the report which has reached Brisbane, Australia, to the effect that a Catholic mission in the German portion of the island has been attacked and ten missionaries have been murdered, five of whom were women. It is further reported that thirty-six natives were captured on suspicion and sixteen of them executed for murder. Thus one more chapter is added to the grim missionary history of New Guinea. This is not by any means the first time that a whole mission has been wiped out of existence by its own converts, who in some cases turned around and ate their preceptors. In 1881, for instance, twelve persons who had been working for years at a mission founded by Dr. JAMES CHALMERS at Kalo, on the south coast of New Guinea, disappeared mysteriously. The news was brought to CHALMERS as he was leaving Port Moresby on one of his exploration expeditions. He turned back and instituted an inquiry which brought the truth to light. The missionaries with their wives and families had been massacred, and it was said that the children were eaten. The missionaries of the Kalo mission, however, were converted New Guineans, and it is easy to understand that if those Christian cannibals [illegible] conscience over a [illegible] Anglo-Saxon. The present massacre is not the first massacre of Europeans. The most notable and the most extraordinary—inasmuch as it makes the Catholic massacre less surprising—was the murder of Dr. JAMES CHALMERS himself. This man was really the pioneer of Christianity in New Guinea. He braved dangers innumerable, and after twenty years, when the Peace of Man and GOD was supposed to be on the land, and the Government of Victoria had voted CHALMERS a large sum of money for his services to Christianity, civilization, and geography, the natives who had sung hymns for fifteen years turned around and killed their shepherd. Not only that; the New Guineans added insult to injury in that they boiled CHALMERS in sage and ate him. Perhaps in this way they hoped "inwardly to digest" his good teachings. But it seems more like a powerful illustration of the saying that "what's bred in the bone will out in the blood." One could not blame the missionary societies if they began to get discouraged as to New Guinea.

—After a few more of our correspondents have exhausted the eloquence of their indignation on the signs advertising the business of undertakers that have a prominent place beside so many church doors, perhaps at least one of those responsible for this particular manifestation of the commercial instinct will attempt to defend, or at least to excuse, it. Explanation, perhaps, will be easier than defense, or even excuse, and the latter can hardly go further than an assertion that the custom has certain conveniences for the public as well as obvious profit for the undertaker. Still, the custom is an unpleasant one, now that attention has been fixed upon it. While nobody complained, nobody thought anything about it, or at least so few that they hardly counted against the conveniences, but discussion of the question will impress the demerits of this form of advertising on many minds. The chances are that all of the offensive signs will come down in time, and a good many of them in the immediate future. Certainly they do not illustrate tact or good taste, and they are very far from necessary.

A POLITICAL ANALOGY.

Precedents to Show Why Democrats Will Win.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the piping times of politics our souls are vexed by many weak analogies and fool predictions. I give you an analogy and a prediction that do not seem to me to be devoid of either strength or sense. From March 4, 1801, when John Adams, angry and resentful, unhitched his horse from the Capitol fence and rode away to Massachusetts, without waiting to witness Jefferson's inauguration, to March 4, 1841, is a period of forty years. Deduct the four years of John Quincy Adams's term and we have thirty-six years of Democratic rule, ending with Martin Van Buren, a New Yorker of Dutch name and descent. From March 4, 1861, to March 4, 1905, is a period of forty-four years. Deduct the eight years of Grover Cleveland's two terms, and we have thirty-six years of Republican rule, ending with Theodore Roosevelt, a New Yorker of Dutch name and descent. The Nation demanded and had a change of party in 1841, and it demands and will have a change of party in 1905.

We have had five Vice Presidents, Tyler, Fillmore, Johnson, Arthur, and Roosevelt, who succeeded to the Presidency by reason of the death of their predecessors in office. Four of them failed to succeed themselves. Will the fifth be more fortunate? I think not.

New York, Sept. 10, 1904. K.

NATIONALITY OF PORTO RICANS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The American papers sometimes contain tales about persons who have forgotten who they are, what are their names, and where they live. The Porto Ricans find themselves in the same predicament as those absent-minded people. To what nationality do they belong? What is the character of their citizenship? This matter has never been clearly settled.

In 1902 Mrs. Isabella Gonzalez, a niece of my wife, and a native-born Porto Rican, came from San Juan to New York. She was forbidden to land, the reason alleged being that she was an "alien" and that she was liable to become a public charge, notwithstanding my guaranteed assurances of her support as a member of my family. I took the case before the United States Circuit Court. Judge Lacombe declared that Mrs. Gonzalez was a "foreigner." The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which from the lofty heights of its judicial wisdom decided that my relative could land, but that the Porto Ricans were neither Americans nor foreigners; or rather, did not decide this, it decided that it had not decided anything. It left the nationality of the Porto Ricans in suspense, and it continues to be in suspense, unless Mr. Roosevelt gets a licking or something extraordinary and unforseen happens to enable the highest tribunal to settle the question whether a Porto Rican really belongs to any nationality.

And what may turn up to enable the highest tribunal to reach any conclusion? I don't know for my part, and I believe Mrs. Gonzalez doesn't know either; still less her counsel, former Assistant District Attorney Charles E. Le Barbier, who acted in the matter, and least of all, the highest tribunal. I don't know, I repeat, but I will add that I suspect what may happen, and that is that Congress will pass a law in which it will state:

"Article I.—The Porto Ricans are citizens of the United States for the reason that they were such ever since Jan. 1, 1899."

Because, if since they ceased to be Spanish citizens they have not been Americans citizens, what in the name of heaven have they been? D. COLLAZO.

New York, Sept. 11, 1904.

For Community of Interests.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Noting in your issue of the 9th the letter "Disproof of a Trust Charge," in reference to the New York Central's proposed station, permit me to call attention to the statement concerning the erection of a station costing $35,000,000, that "the erection of this great station illustrates one of the beneficial results of the merger of railway interests and the operation of various roads in working harmony. * * * With the lines comprised within this system working independently, with more or less unnecessary cost and a ruinous competition, no such station as that which is now promised to the city could have been thought of. That mammoth station is to be one of the fruits of the working out of a legitimate scheme of 'community of interests.'"

It appears from the above that a complete "community of interests" throughout the country would enable the railways to give much better and cheaper service, perhaps saving thousands of dollars annually to the people. Following this line further, why would it not be better for all people to merge all their interests into one great "community of interests"?

She Had No Foreign Complaint.

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"Is it true that you were very seasick on the trip over?" asked Mrs. Goodart.

"Yes, indeed," replied the old lady.

"Why, I understand your daughter left a remedy in your stateroom before the ship sailed."

NEW YORK'S MUDDY WATER.

Aqueduct Has Not Been Cleaned Since It Was Built.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have noticed in THE TIMES of recent date that many complaints are being made in regard to the turpidity of the water at present supplied to the City of New York. These complaints, it seemed, were referred to the Department of Water Supply, and rather than take the blame this department shouldered it on to the Street Cleaning Department. The reason they gave is that the white wings flush the streets from the hydrants, causing an increased flow, which rolls up the muddy deposits in the mains. This may be true to a certain extent, but why are the mains allowed to be in such a condition that when a few hydrants are opened the people all over the city are unable to get anything to drink but a solution of mud, which, to say the least, is not only a nuisance, but also a dangerous menace to the life of the community?

Few persons outside of the Water Department are aware of the real conditions and source of the present water supply, which is such an important factor in the life of our great city.

In stating a few of the apparent reasons not mentioned by the Water Department that cause the present turpidity of the water, it will be necessary to start at the source of supply.

In Manhattan the water comes from the impounding reservoirs of the Croton system, and these reservoirs were constructed without the removal of turf, stumps, peat, and other organic matter from their beds. The decomposition has now practically come to an end, and the reservoirs are apparently but little different to natural lakes having mud bottoms.

Most of the reservoirs are deep, and, due to the lack of circulation during certain portions of the year, the water near the bottom undergoes a process of stagnation. In Summer, when the reservoirs are low, the water is drawn from the lowest sluices, and hence muddy water passes through the aqueduct to the city.

The aqueduct which at present supplies Manhattan and the Bronx with water has not been cleaned since it was built, notwithstanding the fact that in most cities it is customary to clean an aqueduct once or twice a year, to get rid of the growth of organic matter which soon accumulates on the sides and invert.

But probably the chief reason for the present turpidity of the water is due to the growth of microscopic organisms, which grow at certain seasons of the year, especially in the reservoirs of Central Park in their present condition. These reservoirs have not been cleaned for many years, and with 200,000,000 gallons of water per day passing through them it is doubtless easy to surmise that the bottoms of these reservoirs are covered with a deep layer of mud, which promotes the growth of all microscopic organisms, and gives the water a muddy appearance.

It is a good thing that the people are awakening to the fact that they are drinking a dirty and dangerous solution, and it is to be hoped they will have the present supply improved and not be prevented by any such absurd reasons as those put forward by the Water Department.

ADVOCACY OF BLANK BALLOTS.

Future Nominations to Represent Choice of the People.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is the common creed (accepted also by the writer until within a few years,) that when candidates have been nominated by the two great parties, the "practical" voter has only a choice between them. If this be so, then it seems to me the political wire-pullers have a perpetual lease of power.

In the pending Presidential election everybody admits admirable qualities in both candidates, but, in the judgment of some persons, there is a very grave objection to Mr. Parker in his two votes for the free silver candidate. These votes, these persons think, impeach either his judgment or his patriotism, and should rule him out of the Presidential chair. Mr. Roosevelt, in his pension decision, has assumed the master; he said he would be servant. It seems to the writer that he, also, should be barred. If, then, failing to approve either the Republican or the Democratic candidate, how is the citizen to vote?

Why not vote a blank ballot? That course would certainly not be "practical," in this election, but wouldn't it be so in the next? A hundred thousand voters, who decline to be misrepresented, are likely to be listened to when nominations are made, but they must give proof of their existence. I know no better way of doing this than the one suggested. Certainly they won't be listened to if they vote one of the machine tickets.

Magistrate Pool and Truck Drivers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What manner of man is Magistrate Pool? Evidently he thinks that the lot of the pedestrian in this city is too easy, and so took advantage of the opportunity offered the other day to suggest to truck drivers and chauffeurs to hit things up and make traveling on foot in our streets more lively and less safe than it has been.

Mr. Pool may enjoy "dodging" recklessly driven trucks and automobiles, but what about our wives and children, to say nothing about the weak and infirm? Isn't the list of men, women, and children who are run over in this town every day of the year big enough to suit his Honor?

Mr. Pool as a Police Magistrate has said and done a good many queer things, but this direct encouragement to absolute disregard of the rights of pedestrians on the part of truck drivers seems to the writer to be the limit.

It would be interesting to know what Commissioner McAdoo, who has done and is doing so much to regulate traffic and make the streets safer for every one, thinks of the assistance he has received from Mr. Pool. O. B.

A "Tip" for Tippers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So much is said on the subject of "tipping" that I wish you would advocate the 10 per cent. tips as widely as possible. That would be a basis for the tipper and tippee to be recognized at all times and in all places.

Ten per cent. commercially is a big percentage, and given only in extreme cases; the average is under 5. So it strikes me that my figure is a bountiful one and could be soon reduced to a system if every one (except the nouveau riche) adhered to it—that or nothing.

Such a system exists in Europe at about 5 per cent., and the tipped are not only grateful, but profuse in thanks. C. N. S.

Mutual Lapse of Memory.

From The Chicago Record-Herald.

Mrs. B., who has passed the meridian of life and is ambling down its western slope, had occasion to consult her doctor. Before he diagnosed her illness he asked her age.

"Doctor," said the old lady, with some asperity, "I am just one year older than I was this time last year, when you visited me professionally and asked the same question."

"How old were you then?" asked the doctor.

"I have forgotten."

"So have I."

TO RELIEVE JAM AT BRIDGE.

Plan for a Subway Through Chambers Street.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The day of the elevated and bridge has passed; this city will never again consent to have another elevated structure in the streets, and it is not improbable that the trolley lines will ultimately be abolished.

Our city streets are becoming more congested with moving vehicles of all kinds every day, and something must be done or accidents will be more frequent. The underground tubes will make this reform probable, and it is amusing to read the remarks Mr. Best, who wants an elevated road erected to relieve the "jam" at the Brooklyn Bridge. Mr. Best would do well to advocate an underground railroad through Chambers Street, westward to Broadway, or even further if necessary. Such a road, if constructed, could have a large underground station at the bridge entrance. If such a road were to empty its passengers into another commencing at the Harlem River and terminating at the Battery, the problem would be solved. An ideal street for such an enterprise is Eighth Avenue, which is virtually a continuation of Hudson Street north. Elevated roads are noisy and inconvenient, trolley roads dangerous, and bridges very expensive. The tube is the only cheap, durable thing, and can be quickly constructed. If it has any disadvantages, experience will find a way to correct them.

A tube underground road constructed along and under Eighth Avenue and Hudson Street to the Battery will prove of great financial benefit to the capitalists who are willing to construct it. It will prove of benefit to the householder and public also.

Our passenger traffic increases at the rate of 60,000 every year, and ere long the present completed subway will prove insufficient for the public needs. By all means let us have an underground road down and under Eighth Avenue and Hudson Street to the Battery. This with the branch across and under Chambers Street will be all that is needed for five years to come. As to expense, it will prove itself a valuable factor, increase property values, and supply the west side of this city with a means of transportation. In London many underground roads exist; they pay well, are convenient and safe. New York will do well to import an English engineer who can teach our people a few lessons in tube work.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S ACCEPTANCE.

In the Champion Automobile Style.

From The Springfield Republican, (Ind.)

Mr. Roosevelt has written an able, brilliant, and almost dashing paper, which displays him in a fighting yet rather fascinating mood. If we regard the Republican Party as a champion automobile with all the road and speed records, it is easy to conceive of the President as the terrible chauffeur (or the "shover," as Mr. Dooley says) who is driving the devil wagon in a way that bids chickens, baby carriages, and Democrats take to the tall grass along the highway. The letter of acceptance is written in the champion automobile style, and it is a question whether any one ought to get in the way of it.

The Whole Argument.

From The Philadelphia Press, (Rep.)

The whole argument of the Republican campaign, offensive and defensive, is compressed within its searching and comprehensive pages. In every part it shows the insight of the thinker and the grasp and decision of the leader.

Uncandid and Unfair.

From The Boston Herald, (Ind.)

It would hardly be too severe a criticism to say that there is not a subject touched upon by Mr. Roosevelt in this long, artfully wrought deliverance which is treated candidly and fairly.

A Disappointing Letter.

From The Boston Globe, (Dem.)

The up-to-date Independent Republicans, who are looking forward and not backward, and are not satisfied to have their party stand still when there are very grave problems confronting the Nation—this group will be extremely disappointed by the President's latest utterances. Not the faintest suggestion of constructive statesmanship in dealing with present or future problems appears in the whole argument.

Its Most Audacious Feature.

From The Philadelphia Record, (Dem.)

The most audacious misrepresentation is reached in the effort to show that high duties must be maintained on products that have been unduly advanced by the trusts. The attempt to balance the farmers on one shoulder and the trusts on the other is perhaps the most audacious feature of the letter of acceptance.

Merely a Defense.

From The Boston Post, (Dem.)

It is nothing more than an elaboration of the defense of his administration put forth in his speech to the Committee of Notification.

A Point for Judge Parker.

From The Baltimore Sun, (Dem.)

Judge Parker would be wise to avoid Mr. Roosevelt's elaboration and address the Nation in a concise and pointed letter, written in a style that will challenge public attention.

Candid and Honest.

From The Providence Journal, (Rep.)

Honesty and candor pervade the document throughout. There is no evasion, no attempt at misrepresentation, no artful seeking to confuse or mislead the public mind.

Courageous and Frank.

From The Baltimore American, (Rep.)

The President meets with characteristic courage and frankness every issue which separates the two parties in the present campaign.

Affirmatively Instructive.

From The Hartford Courant, (Rep.)

It is a document that is affirmatively instructive for all the American people. Mr. Roosevelt shows himself throughout abundantly able to take care of himself.

If the Balloon Was a Boomerang?

From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"Inventors, with all their originality and brilliance, are often naive and impracticable," said an officer of the General Staff of the army. "An inventor called on me one day to talk about an explosive he had originated.

"'It is the most powerful explosive the world has ever seen,' he said, 'and it is my idea to send it up in a balloon, with a lighted fuse attached to it. The balloon will be sent over the camp of the enemy, the explosive will go off and victory will be ours.'

"'Yes,' I answered, 'but suppose a current of air should blow the balloon back over our own army. What then?'

"'Then,' responded the inventor, laying his hand on my arm and looking grave, 'I tell you what it is, General, our army would have to get up and run for all it was worth.'"

EUGENE FIELD.

BOLL WEEVIL REPORT REACHES MISS GOULD

Col. Brown, Veteran Bug Hunter, Returns from Texas.

STOP BIRD SLAYING, HE SAYS

Col. Isaac W. Brown, the Hoosier schoolmaster whose philosophy is summed up in the sentence "Every bird has its bug," and who was sent to Texas by Miss Helen Gould to see if he could apply his philosophy practically in doing away with the boll weevil scourge, returned to New York yesterday, having made his report to Miss Gould at her country home, at Roxbury, N. Y.

His four days' investigation in the territory south of Dallas, he said, could suggest to him no better remedy for the cotton curse than to let the birds alone. The spread of the weevil from Mexico and its present northerly progress in Texas he attributes directly to the killing of birds ordained by nature's laws to destroy the pest. If there had been a normal supply of such birds fifty years ago and since in Mexico, he said, there wouldn't be a single cotton boll weevil in Texas to-day.

Col. Brown said that he couldn't do much in four days toward finding out for what bird the boll weevil is the choicest meal.

"To find out what I wanted to know," he said, "I would have to chum with the boll weevil for six months. I would have to watch it in the field; watch it go into hibernation and come out; find out where there are birds that destroy it, and where there are none, and make comparisons."

Col. Brown, according to his own description of himself, is "a crusader who goes about with a smile instead of a hatchet," and he thinks that if the killing of the pest-destroying birds in Texas be prohibited, and that if efforts be made to attract such birds to spots where the boll weevil is thickest, the plague naturally will come to a stop. He was assured, he said, that the idea will be brought to the attention of the State Legislature.

Waco voted Miss Gould a resolution of thanks for sending Col. Brown on his mission. The bird man was quite certain that the ultimate end of his investigation was not intended as one to check any ill-effect that the spread of the cotton boll weevil might have on the Gould railroads in Texas. He also deplored that statement, made somewhere, that he was looking for the $50,000 prize offered for the best boll weevil remedy.

"Just let them see what the birds can do," he said. "The boll weevil is the natural food of ground scavenging birds—the quail, the bob white, the meadow lark, and the dove, which are just the birds that are hunted most in Texas. The best of the scavengers is the quail, which also is the most prolific. In one year one pair of quail will rear from thirty to forty young. You see, if these birds were left to multiply of themselves what a formidable army there would be to arrest the progress of the cotton pest.

"I was told in Texas that there was a shotgun for every bird. The dove law expired on Sept. 1, and I was down there on Sept. 2 and 3. In the fields the pop of the shotgun was continuous. The dove, next to the quail, is the most valuable of ground scavenging birds. In the Winter hunters come down from the North and kill thousands of all sorts of birds. The pest is the Mexican cotton-boll weevil, and, owing to the slaughter of birds during the last three years it has spread into Texas during that time."

Col. Brown said that the spread of the boll-weevil was analagous to that of the potato bug, which, he said, was a native of Colorado and the favorite food of the red bird. When the wholesale slaughter and export of that bird started, the potato bug started to plod northward, and he has been going ever since.

The philosophy that every bird has its bug is applicable everywhere, Col. Brown says. The ant, he explained, is a scourge in many sections, but one flicker, or red-headed woodpecker, will eat 5,000 of them for a meal. All one has to do is to pick up a piece of rotten tree near the afflicted spot, the flicker will dig a home in it and eat ants for a living.

Out at Winona Lake, Ind., where Col. Brown expounds his philosophy to vast numbers of children and visiting school teachers, there used to be a great number of mosquitos. The hillside religious meetings which were held on the banks of the lake while the meetings have made famous, were particularly afflicted by the insects. Col. Brown discovered that martens were very fond of mosquitos, and he made things around the lake very pleasant for the martens, and now the worshippers gather in real peace. Only 100,000 martens, in New Jersey, he said, would eat up 15,000,000 mosquitos a day.

NEWPORT'S DOG SNOW.

J. Pierpont Morgan Buys Prize-Winning Collies—Lawson Bulldogs Win.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 12.—The annual dog show opened at the Casino to-day, with a total of 521 dogs entered in the 236 classes. Interest centred in the collies, especially the four imported by W. E. Mason, which were sold to J. Pierpont Morgan after they had captured the principal prizes for a price said to be $8,000. Of these dogs, Parbold Purity took four first prizes and the special for the best collie in the show. Annandale Piccolo took three firsts, and Ormskirk Alexandria and Cragston Carrick first prize in various classes.

There was an interesting competition between the entries of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, Reginald C. Vanderbilt, and Mrs. W. G. Roelker in two French bulldog classes. In the class for novice dogs, Mr. Vanderbilt's Domino was awarded the blue ribbon, with Mrs. Belmont's Blanco second, and Mrs. Roelker's Fritz third. In the limit class, Mrs. Belmont's Dollar was first, with Mr. Vanderbilt's Marcus second, and Mrs. Roelker's Fritz third. Mrs. Belmont also won a prize in this class. Reginald C. Vanderbilt won a second prize in the class for Russian wolfhounds. Mrs. Burke Roche's bull terriers won several prizes. Thomas W. Lawson sweet the bulldog classes, taking six first prizes in as many classes.

The visitors will be entertained by a trip to Mount Beacon and a visit to West Point. The delegates, who have already held a three days' meeting in Washington, will continue their sessions in Niagara Falls, Philadelphia, Chicago, and St. Louis. They will conclude their work in St. Louis on Sept. 21.

DRUNKEN CATS IN STATION.

Follow Prisoner Weiss, Kind Catnip Dispenser—Hosepipe Routs Them.

Magistrate Ommen lay back in his judicial chair in the Essex Market Court yesterday morning and gasped.

"This is the most extraordinary thing I ever heard of," he said to Special Policeman Levy of 118 Suffolk Street.

a side glance at Joseph Weiss, who was looking into space with a quizzical expression. "I was walking through Fifth Street on Sunday evening," he continued, "when I saw a crowd of people at the corner of Avenue B. In the circle was this man, with a circle of all sorts and conditions of cats sitting around him."

The special officer went on to say that Weiss was sprinkling catnip on the pavement and the cats were assimilating it with an enthusiasm that presently manifested itself in their legs.

Presently Weiss, having collected a goodly number of cats, who came to the catnip from every gutter, roof, and basement in the vicinity like rats to the pipes of the Piper of Hamelin, started to lead his feline army along the avenue toward Houston Street. Although Weiss walked steadily, the cats staggered like the Bowery after midnight, and emitted a maudlin caterwauling that led a few temperance advocates—and they were very few—in the crowd to protest to Officer Levy that it was a shame to lead the poor cats from the path of abstinence. They said that Weiss ought to be arrested.

When Levy did arrest Weiss he found that he had to take the cats along also, for when he and his prisoner started for Union Market, the cats rolled along, too. They weren't going to desert the good fellow who had bought them their lovely jag.

After Weiss was locked up in the Union Market Station, the cats infested the place. The doorman found them in the cells, wailing Bacchanalian chants, and spent most of the rest of his tour of duty chasing them off the roof with a mop, lest a shower of acrobatic cats disturb passers by. At an early hour yesterday morning Capt. Handy was sitting up in his bed with his head in his hands, while Sergt. Casey was scouring the roof with a bootjack and howling for the reserves and ball catridges. It was the doorman who eventually sobered the cats with a hose pipe. The Grand Feline Army of Weiss then dispersed into the gray remorseful dawn.

Weiss, who lives at 257 Third Street, told Magistrate Ommen that he was innocent of intent to intoxicate, and that some friends had told him that he could hypnotize cats with the catnip powder, but he was reprimanded and fined $5.

STEERAGE RATES REDUCED.

Canadian Lines Cut Price to $10—Indicates Rate War Will Go On.

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 12.—The Allan, Dominion, and Canadian Pacific steamship lines have reduced their steerage rates from London or Liverpool to Quebec from $15 to $10.

The new rate, which will become effective in October, is regarded as an indication of the probable failure of the peace negotiations between the Cunard and the Continental lines.

PANAMA NOT COERCED.

Bunau-Varilla Says She Consented to American Control.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—M. Bunau-Varilla, former Minister of Panama to the United States, has written a letter relative to the statement that he, while Minister at Washington, gave his formal adhesion to American control of Ancon and Cristobal. He says that in a letter, written to Secretary Hay Jan. 19 last he had the purpose of reaching a clear understanding upon certain articles of the Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty, "which its adversaries were trying to defeat through subtle Senate amendments."

He sent a copy of the letter to the Panama Government Jan. 25, which therefore fully understood the situation before the Senate ratified the treaty. The Panama Government did not ask him to modify the declaration given to Mr. Hay. Therefore it was the free action of Panama without duress from the United States, as has been asserted.

The letter of M. Bunau-Varilla maintains the correctness of the American course throughout the Panama transaction, and declares that President Roosevelt, in protecting Panama against Colombia, "performed his bounden duty, his whole duty, and nothing beyond his duty."

EDWARD A PEACEMAKER.

King Induces Francis Joseph to Receive Prince Ferdinand.

VIENNA, Sept. 12.—Emperor Francis Joseph to-day received in audience Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria, and to-night the Prince dined with the Emperor. Count Goluchowski, the Foreign Minister, was one of the guests at the dinner.

This is the first time since 1901 that the Emperor has received Prince Ferdinand. The changed attitude of the Emperor is said to be due to the intercessions of King Edward, who, while in Marienbad, wrote to the Emperor in Prince Ferdinand's behalf at the request of the latter.

ASKS US TO ACT IN THE CONGO.

Secretary of Reform Association Coming with Memorial to President.

LONDON, Sept. 12.—E. D. Morel, Secretary of the Congo Reform Association of London, will sail for the United States Sept. 21.

He is a delegate appointed to present a memorial to President Roosevelt, setting forth that as the foremost citizen of the United States he should use his influence to promote the radical reform of the Congo State.

The memorial is signed by many influential people in England, including peers and members of the House of Commons.

The decision to send Mr. Morel to this country was taken at a meeting of the Congo Reform Association in a committee room of the House of Commons on July 19.

Alfred Emmott, M. P., explained at this meeting the proposed action of the association in America. He said that a memorial to President Roosevelt had already been drawn up, and read letters from the United States expressing gratification at the proposed action.

It was the United States which in 1884 took the lead in the matter of the appeal of the International Association of the Congo to the powers to enable it to combine the numerous little sovereignties into one independent State.

HURT BY WAGGAMAN CASE.

Washington Real Estate Business Seriously Affected.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 12.—The Waggaman failure is having a serious effect on the real estate business of Washington. Members of leading firms discussing the situation assert that the settlement of the estate now begun in the courts will involve $4,000,000 worth of property. The prospect that it will be thrown on the market at forced sale is having a depressing influence on sales and values.

Mr. Waggaman to-day filed in the District Supreme Court an answer to the petition of M. Agnes Gardiner for the appointment of a receiver. The answer declares that a receivership for his real estate is entirely unnecessary because the pending proceedings in the matter of his estate make it impossible for him in any wise to change its status.

In view of the answer made by the Catholic University, William F. Mattingly of counsel for the petitioners to-day asked that Waggaman be declared a bankrupt. He held that the making of the deed of property to the Catholic University was an act of bankruptcy, because it, in fact, made the institution a preferred creditor.

THREE ORANGE PRIESTS AT ODDS OVER HOSPITAL

NOT FIRST CASE OF FRICTION

ORANGE, N. J., Sept. 12.—There are three Roman Catholic churches in this city, and the pastors of two of them are at odds with the pastor of the third. It is a case of the English-speaking parishes against one where the Italian language is used.

The Rev. F. Victor Romanelli, the Italian priest, is fostering a plan to establish a Catholic hospital; the Rev. Hugh P. Fleming, rector of St. John's Church, and the Rev. John F. Boylan, of the Church of Our Lady of the Valley, are opposed to the plan. Father Boylan spoke against it a week ago, and yesterday Father Fleming talked at length on the scheme. He did not mention its author by name, but referred to him as "this individual."

Father Fleming said that the establishment of a Catholic hospital was entirely unnecessary and not called for. At the present time, he said, the needs of Catholics were met fully by the Memorial Hospital, of which his assistant, the Rev. M. J. McDonald, was the Catholic chaplain. The hospital was well managed, Father Fleming declared, the equipment equal to that of any other institution, the nurses capable, and the staff excellent, and the authorities took pains to inform the clergy when any of their parishioners needed their services.

As for the proposed Catholic hospital, Father Fleming said, it was planned to locate it in "three rookeries," in a street which was not macadamized. It would be necessary to call upon the Irish of Orange to support it, Father Fleming declared, and ultimately it would probably be saddled upon St. John's Parish. The rector said that he had given no one authority to collect subscriptions in his parish for any such institution, and, according to the rules of the Church, such collections could not be made in his parish without the authority given by the Bishop.

Father Fleming said that a year ago the individual to whom he referred had had a parochial school, in which the sisters, acting as teachers, suffered severely from the cold during the Winter. This year there was no school, but the individual wanted a hospital.

The troubles are not new, for Father Fleming yesterday told of personal attacks upon him in a newspaper for Italians. He said that these attacks were published at a time when he was ill and the Bishop was abroad. Although he knew of them at the time, he did not propose to dignify them with a reply.

The clergyman also mentioned the anti-noise nuisance, under which the ringing of bells on ragmen's wagons comes under the ban. He said that for a long time the intersecting streets at St. John's seemed to be the rendezvous for the junkmen, and finally one day a ragman drove in behind the hearse at a funeral procession leaving the church, and continued in line until the cemetery was reached.

At this proceeding, Father Fleming said, he determined to do what he could to abate what he described as already an intolerable nuisance, and subsequently the Common Council enacted an anti-noise ordinance. At the time the validity of this ordinance was tested in the courts, "this individual," he said, directed the ragmen to put on the bells and drive past St. John's Rectory, although, Father Fleming said, he was then ill. For this the ragmen were arrested and taken into court.

MORE ANTI-JEWISH RIOTING.

Outbreak in Sosnowiec, Russian Poland —Over a Dozen People Injured.

KATTOWITZ, Prussian Silesia, Sept. 12.—An outbreak against the Jews occurred on Sunday at Sosnowiec, Russian Poland. Rioters paraded in procession through the streets and threw stones at the Jews they met.

Twelve or fifteen persons were thus injured and others were stabbed. The rioters also broke into several Jewish dwellings.

The troops of the garrison eventually dispersed the rioters and arrested ten of them.

MONASTERY BROKEN UP.

French Government Forcibly Expels Barnabites.

PARIS, Sept. 12.—The Government authorities forcibly expelled the Barnabite Community from their establishment here this morning. A large force of Municipal Guards and firemen executed the expulsion.

The doors and windows were barricaded and the firemen scaled the walls, entered the windows, and expelled the monks and a number of their sympathizers, including the Marquis de Fougère.

HEREROS ESCAPE GERMANS.

It Is Now Believed the Campaign Will Be Indefinitely Prolonged.

BERLIN, Sept. 12.—Advices received here from German Southwest Africa show that the main body of the Hereros, several thousand strong, have broken through the ring of German troops disposed for the purpose of encircling them, and have escaped toward the southeast with the loss of fifty men killed.

Lieut. Col. von Estorff, on Sept. 9, attacked Chief Samuel Maherero while the latter was breaking camp. Samuel offered little resistance, abandoning a portion of his cattle. Lieut. Gen. von Trotha, Commander in Chief of the forces in German Southwest Africa, wired from Otjosondu Sept. 10 that the German loss was one man slightly wounded.

DINNER FOR PRIMATE.

Many Notables Expected at Affair in Honor of Archbishop.

A dinner to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is now visiting in this country and in Canada, is being arranged for by the Church Club of New York, the representative social organization of the Episcopal Diocese, for Tuesday evening, Sept. 27, in the new Hotel Astor, in Longacre Square.

This dinner will probably be the only affair of the sort in honor of the Archbishop in this city. It will come on the day before the opening of the annual Diocesan Convention, and is expected to be a notable gathering of Episcopal clergy and laity.

Minister Bowen Home for Rest.

Herbert Bowen, the American Minister to Venezuela, and Baron Calliotti, Chargé d'Affaires of the Italian Legation at Caracas, arrived here yesterday on the steamship Caracas from Venezuela. Mr. Bowen said he was home on leave of absence and needed rest, as the climate of Venezuela had been particularly trying to his health this Summer.

W. H. Taylor on Western Pacific Board.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 12.—At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the Western Pacific Railway Company to-day James Treadwell resigned as a Director and William H. Taylor, Vice President of the Bowling Green Trust Company and of the Mercantile National Bank, both of New York, and a member of the Executive Committee of the St. Louis and Southwestern Railway Company, was elected in his stead.

STRAIGHT FRONT STILL "IN."

Dressmakers' Protective Association So Announces—A New Organization.

Masonic Hall echoed yesterday to the tread of the feet of the army of dressmakers who come annually from the bounds of Oshkosh and far Kamschatka to study the annual exposition of gowns at the meeting of the Dressmakers' Protective Association. It was a great time for the new dresses that are in the main exhibition, and a greater one for the dressmakers, who wandered around among the incidentals and accidentals of frocks and frippery that are exhibited as side shows, and had the time of their lives.

"Ain't that Parisfal silk just grand?" said one of the modistes to her traveling companion. "I couldn't afford to stay in New York to hear the music, but I can make me up a Parsifal gown to wear at home the evening I get up the Old Floks' Concerts for the church organ fund."

Yesterday was a reception day, and exhibition of gowns only, but sveral points have been decided. The first important one given out was that the straight-front corset had not gone, as had been announced at a rival show, was not going, and probably never would go. In the second place it is authoritatively stated that the proper way to treat the armhold of a gown, the dressmaking rock upon which unhappy amateurs suffer shipwreck, is to have it long in the back, cut out sufficiently in the front, with plenty of little tucks all around to make the lining fit before it is draped. Thirdly, the snugly fitting sleeve is here. Finally, a Young Woman's Christian Association for Dressmakers is to be formed.

The Young Women's Christian Association for Dressmakers is to establish a house to which the little dressmaker from nowhere and everywhere can come whenever she pleases and have a thorough course in tailoring or dressmaking at a cost of not more than $10.

It is whispered that the corset demonstrations of several years past are to be repeated again this Fall. The management has hesitated somewhat after previous experiences, but the dressmakers say that if Miss Elizabeth A. C. White can teach them to make a figure that is the dressmaking "unit," everything else will be easy and customers satisfied.

BUILDING ALLIANCE CALLS OUTSIDE AID

Summons Building Unions Not in Alliance to Extend Fight.

EMPLOYERS GET MORE MEN

The Alliance Men Say They're Helpless Concerning School Work—Employers Desirous of Helping.

The Building Trades Alliance, instead of making overtures for peace, as was expected, made preparations at its meeting yesterday for extending the building fight. It has asked for a conference of representatives of all the building trades unions, both in and out of the alliance, to take united action, if the outside unions can be induced to act.

The Press Committee of the Alliance reported last evening that it had decided on withdrawing its members from all buildings where the contracts were held by members of the Employers' Association.

"In the meantime," the report said, "we have sixty grievances filed against members of the Employers' Association. It is likely that sixteen new buildings will be affected to-morrow."

A letter was written yesterday by President W. P. Nason of the alliance to Chairman Adams of the Building Committee of the Board of Education in reply to the letter of Mr. Adams asking for a suspension of the fight as far as the schools are concerned. The letter, after saying that the unions in the alliance showed by their previous records that they were always ready to facilitate the work on schools, continues:

"I must call your attention to the fact that by an ultimatum of the Building Trades Club through its Board of Governors and without the consent of the General Board of Arbitration, which board was supposed to be supreme, ordered its members to lock out all its mechanics within a radius of twenty-five miles, allowing no exception on account of public discomfort or otherwise. So you can see that the mechanics are not 'strikers,' so called, but are placed in the position of not being allowed to work at their various callings on your buildings."

The alliance indorsed the letter and appointed a committee of one from each union in the body to see Mr. Adams about the matter.

As to the letter of Mr. Adams of the School Board to Mr. Eidlitz, asking if some arrangement could not be made by which school building could go on, Lewis Harding of the Press Committee of the employers said last night:

"The Emergency Committee considered this letter and wants to get more details as to what the School Board needs. A reply has been sent, asking Mr. Adams to say what schools require to be finished first, so that we will be in a position to act."

As to the efforts of the Employers' Association to get more men, it was said last night at the Building Trades' Club that 50 per cent. of the men locked out were at work in some of the trades and these men were doing 75 per cent. of the work formerly done. It was thought that all the buildings would be fairly well manned before the end of the week.

Several days ago the plastering contract at the Grand Hotel was taken from a contractor in the Employers' Association by the owner, and the union undertook to finish the work under one of the union foremen. Last night it was said that the owner was highly dissatisfied with the amount of work done, had discharged the union men, and had returned the contract to the original contractor.

PULLEN SAW A WAGGING EAR.

Through the Letter Slot—Chased It and Got Detective.

Charles D. Pullen, an oil commission merchant, was discussing a business deal yesterday morning with J. Wendell Jackson, in his office on the sixth floor of the building at 2 Stone Street, when he noticed an odd protuberance where the letter drop in the door should have been. He looked closer and distinctly saw the protuberance move.

Mr. Pullen called Mr. Jackson's attention to the phenomenon. Mr. Jackson bent his eyes in the direction indicated by Mr. Pullen's finger, and sat up with a gasp.

"It's a human ear," he said. "Watch it wiggle."

"That's what I thought," said Mr. Pullen. "It's those private detectives again. They were shadowing my house, at Manhattan Avenue and One Hundred and Tenth Street, when I left to come down town, and followed me to the elevated train. I am going to bring suit against several prominent men for $10,000 damages on account of a transaction in Texas oil lands, and I believe they are hired to annoy me. Help me catch this fellow.

The two gentlemen rushed for the door simultaneously. The ear, which was attending strictly to business, heard the clatter of their feet and was withdrawn. When they reached the corridor its owner was carrying it down stairs at a gallop. Mr. Pullen and his volunteer aide set out in pursuit. For a moment or so the ear flapped ahead like a gage of battle. At Broadway and Beaver Street it was overtaken and, with the man on which it was growing, was handed over to Policeman Grey of the Old Slip Station.

"That fellow," said Mr. Pullen to the policeman, "has an ear which he uses to excess. He had it glued to my letter drop to-day, and it was wagging so hard trying to catch what I was saying that I want to charge him with aiding and abetting it in disorderly conduct."

The prisoner gave his name as John McKew, and his address as 35 East Eighty-fifth Street. He said he was a private detective, but declined to give the name of the agency which employs him. On the way to the station house he asked permission of the policeman to telephone his employer. When the request was granted, according to Messrs. Pullen and Jackson, he called up the office of Former Assistant District Attorney Osborne and told some one on the other end of the wire that he had been arrested.

"I was on your business," Mr. Pullen declares he said, "and I want you to come and get me out."

When McKew was arraigned, a clerk from Mr. Osborne's office was in court and asked Magistrate Mayo to adjourn the hearing for twenty-four hours. This adjournment was ordered and McKew was finally bailed out. Mr. Osborne is not in New York. His partner, Mr. Hess, said that his firm represented several detective agencies, but was in no wise interested in McKew as an individual.

THETA WATER-LOGGED AT SEA.

Steamship Pathfinder Standing By to Tow Wrecked Schooner.

The Guffey Petroleum Company's steamship Lorimer, which arrived yesterday from Port Arthur, reported that when fourteen miles south by southwest of Five Fathom Bank Lightship, Sunday, she circled around the water-logged schooner Theta, lumber laden.

The starboard quarter of the schooner had been cut off from mizzen rigging to the middle of the stern. The American steamship Pathfinder was lying by with boats out, passing a tow line to the wreck. The schooner's crew, the officers of the steamer say, apparently had abandoned her.

The Theta sailed from Brunswick, Ga., on Sept. 1, with lumber for Dorchester, N. S. She hailed from Windsor, N. S.

NEW YORK UNIVERSITY GIFTS.

F. W. Devoe Donor of Land for Applied Science School in Honor of A. H. Green.

After a meeting of the Executive Committee of the New York University yesterday at the office of William F. Havemeyer, the Treasurer, at 82 Nassau Street, Chancellor MacCracken announced several gifts to the medical and cheimical laboratories and an addition of 3,000 square feet to the applied science plant at University Heights given by Frederick W. Devoe in honor of Andrew H. Green. The Chancellor said that there would be at least 700 new students at the university this year, according to present indications.

Mr. Havemeyer said in his Treasurer's report that the subscriptions for three years for the current support of the university, which were to become binding as soon as they amounted to a total of $120,000, had reached that amount in August, and that payments for the first year, amounting to $40,000, had been called for. Three-fourths of the sum total, according to the report, was pledged by members of the University Corporation, the Women's Advisory Committee, and the Faculty.

As few persons unconnected with the university had been asked to subscribe, it was decided that the efforts to get subscriptions be continued and $20,000 a year be solicited from the general public.

IN THE SHOPS.

There is a big pail which is to be numbered among the latest household helps, something which looks to be a cross between a milk pail and a churn. It is neither, but a breadmaker, and you can knead four loaves of bread, or eight if desired, in three minutes, and the bread is warranted to be the kind that the modern mother learns to make at a scientific cooking school. The pail is of heavy tin and sheet steel, with two handles at the top, and a cover with a crank in the centre. There is a clamp, by means of which the pail is fastened firmly to the table. The crank is attached to a heavy wire with a deep curve at the lower end, on the inside. The materials for the bread are put into the pail, the liquids first and the flour last, and with a few turns of the crank the bread is mixed, kneaded, and set to rise, well covered. In the morning the dough is loosened from the sides of the pail with a knife, the crank is turned for the second kneading, the dough is lifted from the pail on the big hook, and cut off for the pans. There is no unpleasant working with the hands, and while the good, ordinary breadmaker does not have the trouble of the woman pictured on the circular, who is making her bread in the old-fashioned way, there are many reasons for preferring this more modern one. A breadmaking pail which will accommodate four loaves of bread will cost $2, and one for double that quantity $2.50.

Here is a bargain in bathroom implements for the woman who is now getting home and taking up the more complicated life of the city, with its work and its conveniences. It is a set which is selling for $1.65, all told. There are a number of pieces, nickle finished, including a towel bar, soap dish, tooth and nail brush holder, bath tub seat, &c.

***

The special nickel towel bars are selling for 25 cents each; also nickel tin traveling soap boxes, which are at once light and strong, and sell for the same price.

One of the largest pieces of furniture for the bathroom is the soiled towel basket of nickel, and one of these will cost $8.98.

Crystal for the bathroom is as expensive as anything, and a towel bar—one of the shorter ones—will cost $5.25. This is more expensive, having the cut-glass ends.
